PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 99th CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Monday, September 8, 1986

The House met at 12 noon and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. MURTHA].

DESIGNATION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Speaker:

WASHINGTON, DC,
August 15, 1986.

I hereby designate the Honorable JOHN P. MURTHA to act as Speaker pro tempore on Monday, September 8, 1986.

THOMAS P. O'NEILL, Jr.,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Gracious God, we pause this moment to offer our prayer, praise, and thanksgiving for Your continued blessing on each of us and on the work we seek to do. We are aware that all our talents and abilities are of little use unless we set our face in the right direction and act in the way of justice and peace. We pray that Your spirit will so lighten our paths and illumine our hearts that we will walk through the difficult days ahead with our eyes on the way of righteousness even as our hands are set to labor on the tasks before us. Guide us, guard us, and give us Your blessing, O God, this day and every day. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Hallen, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 5316. An act to amend title 28 of the United States Code to provide for the appointment of additional bankruptcy judges, to provide for the appointment of U.S. trustees to serve in bankruptcy cases in judicial districts throughout the United States, to make certain changes with respect to the role of U.S. trustees in such cases, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendment to the bill (H.R. 5316) "An act to amend title 28 of the United States Code to provide for the appointment of additional bankruptcy judges, to provide for the appointment of U.S. trustees to serve in bankruptcy cases in judicial districts throughout the United States, to make certain changes with respect to the role of U.S. trustees in such cases, and for other purposes," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. THURMOND, Mr. HATCH, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. DECONCINI, and Mr. HEFLIN, to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 1047. An act to reform the laws relating to former Presidents;

S. 1092. An act to authorize appropriations for the U.S. Mint, and for other purposes;

S. 1421. An act consenting to a modification in the Susquehanna River basin compact relating to the rate of interest on bonds issued by the Susquehanna River Basin Commission;

S. 1917. An act to amend the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 to provide assistance to promote immunization and oral rehydration, and for other purposes;

S. 2462. An act to provide for the awarding of a special gold medal to Aaron Copland;

S. 2496. An act to authorize the President to award congressional gold medals to Drs. Andrei Sakharov and Yelena Bonner for the great personal sacrifice they have made to further the causes of human rights and world peace;

S. 2585. An act to authorize the President of the United States to award a congressional gold medal to Red Skelton in recognition of his lifetime commitment in service of Americans and to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to sell bronze duplicates of such medal;

S. 2703. An act to amend the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 to provide that prohibitions of discrimination against handicapped individuals shall apply to air carriers;

S. 2759. An act relating to telephone services for Senators;

S.J. Res. 190. Joint resolution to establish greater productivity in Federal Government operations as a national goal of the United States; and

S.J. Res. 269. Joint resolution to provide for the reappointment of David C. Acheson as a citizen regent of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

The message also announced that pursuant to Public Law 90-206, the Chair on behalf of the Vice President appoints Russell W. Meyer, Jr., of Kansas, as a member from private life to the Commission on Executive, Legislative, and Judicial Salaries.

LEGISLATION TO REVISE GRAIN QUALITY STANDARDS

(Mr. BEREUTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. EVANS], this Member, and others have introduced legislation to revise our grain quality standards. Later this week the House Agriculture Committee is expected to examine legislation which would alter U.S. grain quality standards.

Currently, the Agriculture Committee is reviewing legislation that would prohibit the reintroduction of foreign material into grain intended for export. It would also require that sublots of a shipment of grain meet the same grade as the entire lot of grain and it would require dockage recordings to be rounded off in the direction to understate the quality of grain. Finally it would create the tools necessary for markets to establish grain quality improvement incentives. Because it's obvious that these changes, as a minimum, are required, I felt it was appropriate to sponsor the bill.

Matter set in this typeface indicates words inserted or appended, rather than spoken, by a Member of the House on the floor.

Our current standards operate in a way that enables grain handlers, individuals, and companies in the production, storage, and export of grain, to raise the amount of foreign material, moisture, and dirt so that they can get additional profits. Present grain quality standards encourage quality problems. Consequently, standards should be changed immediately to accurately reflect the grain quality and provide economic incentives for delivering quality grain.

I urge rapid action and then I urge the leadership of the House to take action to expedite the consideration and passage of this legislation.

This Member believes that our existing grain quality standards are actually encouraging the corruption of our product.

They encourage the addition of foreign material. By blending poor quality and moisture-laden grain and soybeans the reputation of American agricultural products has been badly damaged. It is no wonder that foreign delegations which visit the Grain Belt repeatedly complain about the quality of American grain being exported. They note the quality of grain being harvested and ask why such quality grain doesn't reach their shores.

The National Commission on Agriculture Exports and Trade, of which I was a member, has made important recommendations for revisions and two reports, one from the Office of Technology Assessment, are coming to the Congress before the end of 1986 for action. However, it is obvious that there are some legislative changes that must be made now in the absence of administrative action. I urge the House to pass the pending legislation for improving the grain quality standards for the export of American grain and soybeans.

WHEAT, CORN, AND SOYBEAN PRODUCERS WOULD BENEFIT BY USE OF MARKETING LOAN CONCEPT

(Mr. DAUB asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Speaker, today the American farmer continues to face devastating carryover stocks of wheat, feed grains, and soybeans. Although the Agriculture Secretary now has discretion under the 1985 farm bill to approve marketing loans for these commodities, he has not yet done so.

Both cotton and rice producers are using the marketing loan concept with astounding results. Rice exports are up 50 percent. Cotton producers have increased their share of the world cotton market from 10 percent to 29 percent. They will sell 6 to 7 million bales of cotton this year overseas compared with 1.5 million bales last year.

Some cotton experts are saying that there could be a domestic shortage of this commodity next year.

It is time that wheat, corn, and soybean producers are allowed to use this vital marketing tool. Continuing to pile up surpluses on top of each other only depresses prices, increases taxpayer program costs and will aggravate an already critical shortage of storage space in the Midwest.

I ask my colleagues, both rural and urban, to support this bill and give the American farmer the tool he needs to beat foreign competition head on. Only then will he retake what is rightfully his: unchallenged dominance of world markets.

RETROACTIVE TAX REVISION TARGETS PUBLIC SERVANTS UNFAIRLY

(Mr. WOLF asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, in the conference report on tax reform, only one group of Americans has been singled out for retroactive tax revision; that group consists of nearly 20 million police officers, firemen, teachers, and local, State, and Federal Government workers.

These dedicated public servants, at all levels of government, participate in mandatory contribution pension plans. Money contributed to such systems is taxed as gross income and under current tax laws, contributors are allowed up to a 3-year tax-exempt grace period to recover their contributions.

The conference report on tax simplification, however, would change all that and would subject these public servants to immediate taxation on their annuities—effectively ending the only benefit of such a contributory plan. Even more serious is the fact that this provision has been made retroactive. This effectively traps many public employees in their jobs without having the benefit of opting for the 3-year recovery rule on which they based their retirement plans.

Mr. Speaker, each and every day we depend on teachers, firemen, police officers and government employees to provide us with important services—services we demand. It is unfair to eliminate one of the few benefits public employees have, but, it is even more unfair to do it retroactively. Public employees are the only group to be faced with retroactive tax revision.

I will be holding a special order on this subject at the conclusion of business today. I am committed to working to eliminate the damage the proposed tax reform conference will reap if passed and I encourage my colleagues to join me in this effort. It is a question of fairness and we need your support in this battle.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House of Representatives:

WASHINGTON, DC,
August 18, 1986.

Hon. THOMAS P. O'NEILL, Jr.,

COMMUNICATION FROM THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House of Representatives:

WASHINGTON, DC,
September 8, 1986.

Hon. THOMAS P. O'NEILL, Jr.,
The Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Pursuant to the permission granted in Clause 5, Rule III of the Rules of the U.S. House of Representatives, I have the honor to transmit sealed envelopes received from the White House as follows:

(1) At 4:35 p.m. on Thursday, August 28, 1986 and said to contain a message from the President under the Federal Pay Comparability Act of 1970; and

(2) At 2:50 p.m. on Thursday, September 4, 1986 and said to contain a message from the President whereby he advises the Congress of the continuance of the national emergency with respect to South Africa. He attaches a copy of his Notice, which was earlier filed with the Office of the Federal Register.

With kind regards, I am,

Sincerely,

BENJAMIN J. GUTHRIE,
Clerk, House of Representatives.

PAY ADJUSTMENT FOR FEDERAL EMPLOYEES—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 99-262)

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, without objection, referred to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service and ordered to be printed:

CONTINUATION OF THE SOUTH AFRICA EMERGENCY—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 99-263)

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, without objection, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed:

TERRORISM

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MURTHA). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, the most recent outbreak of international terrorism, an attack on a synagogue in Turkey, is one more tragic example of the stranglehold terrorist groups may have on the free world if we do not respond to their despicable acts of violence.

Following closely behind the Pan Am Airlines hijacking, two Arab gunmen with probable ties to the notorious Abu Nidal, burst into a synagogue in Turkey, hurling grenades and firing submachine guns, killing 21 Jewish worshippers attending a Sabbath prayer service. This cowardly act, like the scores of random dastardly acts against humanity which have preceded it, was conceived and carried out solely to disrupt and derail the Mideast peace initiative.

The United States and the rest of the nations of the world must not be held hostage by these international hoodlums who work to destabilize the international order, and impose their own diabolical objectives on us all. When a particular group has been identified as perpetrating these barbaric terrorist acts against innocent individuals, we must move swiftly and decisively against that group to demonstrate beyond any doubt that the world will not tolerate their crimes against mankind; and when such actions are taken in retaliation, let us not forget who are the victims and who are the criminals.

PROVISIONS AFFECTING GOVERNMENT RETIREES IN TAX REFORM BILL SHOULD BE CORRECTED

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOLF] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, I want to discuss one of the more onerous provisions in the tax reform conference agreement.

I know that many of my colleagues have returned from their districts having heard from police, firemen, teachers, local, State, and Federal Government workers, and Capitol Hill employees, who are concerned about the tax reform conference report altering the 3-year-basis recovery rule.

These public servants, at all levels of government, participate in a mandatory—and it is mandatory, Mr. Speaker—contributory pension plan. Money contributed to such systems is taxed as gross income, and under current tax law, contributors are allowed up to a 3-year tax-exempt grace period at retirement for recovering their contributions.

What is even of greater concern, however, is that the tax reform conference report not only eliminates this provision, wiping out one of the only such benefits in the contributory system, but does it—and this is the key—retroactively, thus trapping retirement-eligible employees in their jobs without having the benefit of opting for a 3-year recovery rule on which they have based years of retirement planning.

The effective date for the annuity pension tax is retroactive to July 1, 1986. It is this provision which I must address today.

This provision has surprised, I think quite frankly, the Congress, and may even have surprised the Members that were on the conference committee. It has angered thousands of Government employees—teachers, policemen, firemen, rescue squad members, Federal employees—who either retired after the July 1 effective date, are eligible to retire but had a loyalty and commitment to their project and mission who are waiting until the end of the year, or those who have carefully mapped out their retirement plans throughout their previous 30-, 35-, or 40-year service.

I had the opportunity 2 weeks ago to speak to a Civitan group in my congressional district. There were two teachers who both had worked up through July 3. As a result of their working that 1 extra week to help out the Fairfax County school system, they will pay an unbelievable tax. They never ever had any idea that that would be the case.

Many of these individuals were encouraged to put money into U.S. savings bonds and other investments so that they might cash them immediately upon retirement during this "tax free" period. Now the rules could suddenly change, and those plans could be wiped out.

In the hundreds of letters and phone calls that I have received, constituents have informed me that this retroactive date will cost some of them anywhere from $5,000 to $30,000 in their retirement plans. If Congress is determined to change the rule, equity and fairness and consistency dictate that such a fundamental change in this recovery rule become effective prospectively—at least 60 days from the enactment of the tax reform legislation, and preferably at the end of the calendar year, when most retirements normally occur.

I am not asking that these employees receive special treatment—just fair treatment, just equal treatment. No other group of individual taxpayers were singled out for this retroactive tax revision. To make the date retroactive is proof to all current and potential government employees that Congress holds their concerns and well-being not in a very high position. The number of people is growing for whom the sense of pride and enthusiasm and dedication with which they entered government service has been replaced by a feeling of discouragement, resentment, and bitterness.

This feeling is now, to quote a constituent, "being compounded by a feeling of unjust exploitation. It is exactly as though your neighbor, having borrowed far beyond his means to obtain an addition to his house and expensive new cars in his garage, while you were carefully saving for your future, then stole your savings to help pay his debts, and had the power to make his theft legal by revising the law."

I would urge my colleagues to consider the teachers, the firefighters, the police, and the public servants at all levels of government who are concerned about this retroactive change, and in all fairness, join me in working to overturn or minimize the damage that the proposed tax reform conference report will reap if passed.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to read a couple of letters that were sent to me. I will not mention the names, and we will leave the parties unidentified.

Here is a letter dated August 21:

I believe that the tentative decision to implement this measure effective July 1, 1986, is discriminatory. I am unaware of any other class of individual which would be affected retroactively and with such a negative impact by the tax reform bill. Conventional wisdom advises prospective retirees to begin planning five years before retirement; and yet this legislation would yank the safety net from under a large group of retirees without affording them even the opportunity to factor it into their planning. This seems to me unreasonable and unfair.

Being a federal employee, I naturally am most concerned with the measure's effect on me and my colleagues, men and women from across the nation who in good faith and trust placed their welfare in the hands of the U.S. Government—not only for the duration of their career, but for their retirement years as well. I am also thinking of several million police, firemen, teachers and other state and municipal government workers who are equally prejudiced by this aspect of tax reform.

Mr. Speaker, there are FBI agents who decided to stay through the end of the year before retiring because they were working on a case. And they wake up one day and find out that their good-will effort to stay and provide that service to solve a law-enforcement problem has been rewarded by, quite frankly, a kick in the teeth.

Mr. Speaker, that is something that we can correct. This is an issue that this Congress felt strongly about. This was the one issue that brought about the defeat of the rule the first time the House considered the tax reform issue, and I think quite frankly that it is an issue, as Members talk to their constituents, that again could do the same thing.

Let me read the next letter. It says:

DEAR CONGRESSMAN:

* * * I could have retired June 30 but the situation in my office was such that if I had retired I would have contributed to an already existing problem. We had an employee recovering from surgery and two in the process of leaving the government because they were disenchanted with the system. So, I chose to remain and get penalized for being sensitive of the needs of the office.

I strongly feel that the effective date for taxing the annuity should be changed or there should be a grandfather clause for those who are already eligible.

Mr. Speaker, here is an individual who stayed simply because he was dedicated to his job, and the office was having a difficult time so he decided to stay, and as a result of staying, he is penalized.

Let me remind my colleagues that the Navy captain who goes out to sea and spends 6 months at a time on a nuclear submarine and has, sometimes, one of the highest rates of family problems because of absence from the family, is a Federal employee.

The polls are showing that the No. 1 concern in the country is drugs. A drug enforcement agent faces a dangerous job and recently we have had one who was killed, and another who almost died. These drug enforcement agents who are working to keep drugs out of our schools are Federal employees.

I think we should understand that. These are the people who are being hurt by this tax change provision.

The FBI agent is another example. For anyone in this Chamber, any Member of Congress whose loved one was kidnaped or had a similar problem, the first agency that you would call would be the FBI. They are Federal employees. These are the people that have been hit by this tax change provision.

Another example is the cancer researchers at the National Institutes of Health working to find a cancer cure. Who does not have a loved one who has been impacted by cancer? Both my mom and dad died of cancer. That Federal employee who is working at NIH who could probably go out and work in private industry, with a drug company or similar business; they are the ones who are being hit by the change in the 3-year basis recovery rule.

Of course, we all remember the day when there was the attempted assassination by John Hinckley on President Reagan. The Secret Service agent, Timothy McCarthy, who stopped the bullet that would have killed the President of the United States, is a Federal employee and will be hindered and hurt by this provision.

Why did the conference agree to do something like this? Why did they not instead say, in the future we will give these people an opportunity to change? But they did not do it. They made this provision retroactive.

Let me read another letter. "Millions of us government workers have served loyally," as I said, these many groups that I have mentioned, "and worked very hard over the years. We planned our retirement based on the rules laid down when we first joined."

Is that not the fair way? You look at the laws, you look at the rules, you see what it is and you abide by them.

It's grossly unfair if Congress goes along with the sneaky way in which the tax reform committee imposed the retroactive tax-free period to July 1, making in impossible for us to have a choice. The only fair way is to make the effective date in the future, so that we can decide for ourselves.

I think that makes all the sense in the world.

Let me read another letter.

Dear Sir: This is to register my personal protest regarding the abrupt change in the tax treatment of retirement annuities for Federal, State and municipal employees throughout the United States.

Let the Congress know, the Senate and the House, we are not just talking about Federal employees. We are talking about policemen. We are talking about every teacher in every State, but I think for two. We are talking about all the rescue squad people with the fire departments. We are talking about State and local government people. We are talking about 20 million people who have been negatively impacted.

To say that this is a betrayal of public trust is understating the case—it seems to me that the people on whom this provision will most severely impact are those who are among the most dedicated, hardworking and relatively lowest paid in our society, i.e., policemen, firemen, teachers, and Federal, State, and municipal employees.

The retroactive nature of this change only compounds the unjust nature of the provision, making it discriminatory as well as unfair. This seems to be the only provision in the new Tax Code which the committee has seen fit to predate. It quite literally pulls the carpet out from under thousands of people who are faced with imminent retirement, and who have laid plans far in advance taking into consideration the recovery period for their annuities.

I want to mention also the number of congressional employees which this tax change hits. One congressional employee made the comment:

You know, I decided to stay with my Member through the end of this year because I felt a commitment. The Member had been good to me, and I was loyal to the Member. I felt that I had an obligation with elections coming up and with the end of the year and the turmoil that we go through with continuing resolutions and things like this, that I would show my loyalty, although I had read in the paper that the House provision went to July 1. I never in all my years of working on Capitol Hill thought that this Congress, and this House, would ever do this. So I stayed. I stayed to be with my Member until the end of the year. As a result of providing that loyalty and staying with the Member of Congress with whom I had served all these years, I then wake up one day and find out that this provision is retroactive and will cost me thousands of dollars.

Let me read the next letter:

DEAR MR. WOLF: As a U.S. Federal employee in the Senior Executive Service, I would like to express my utter chagrin over the congressional proposal to change the rules on retirement annuity taxation retroactively. I was eligible to retire prior to 1 July 1986; however, I elected not to retire based on long-term projects and other important assignments with which I am involved.

Again, another person staying to help the citizens of this country, and as a result of staying, the person is injured.

Although I am aware that the annuity taxation provisions would undoubtedly change under the tax reform, I never envisioned for a moment that they would be made retroactively. This sort of disregard for the welfare of the Federal employee is not only hurtful to me personally, but is further proof to all current and potential employees that Congress holds their concerns and well-being as inconsequential.

I say to the Members, "Let us demonstrate our sense of fairness by changing this provision." I would say to the members of the conference and Mr. PACKWOOD and Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI, two decent and fair individuals, "Let us change this provision. Let us send the message to public employees around the country that we understand. Let us send the message that we care by changing this. We can."

Let me read another letter sent to a member of the tax conference committee:

For Congress to change retirement benefits without allowing one the opportunity to retire under what he thought were his terms of employment is simply dishonest!

Many Federal employees left before July 1 because they said, "I am not going to risk it."

Those who stayed because they were willing to trust their Government are the ones who were hurt the most.

Further, are those who retired on June 30, 1986 (many presumably because they felt Congress was not to be trusted) any more deserving of their full benefits than the others eligible who delayed for various reasons? Surely those eligible to retire should be given the opportunity to do so under the regulations they had planned under during their careers. For us the approximate $15,000 that we will no longer have in a 1987 retirement year in real terms means our daughter's college tuition, which we cannot provide out of a reduced retirement salary.

This tax change will negatively impact on their ability to pay for their daughter's tuition.

Reading the next letter:

My husband and I are long-time government employees who plan to retire on January 2, 1987. We had made our financial plans years ago, including most particularly the first 18 months of retirement. In that time we plan to move to another house, set up our estates (small as they are), and secure our financial future. Suddenly everything has changed with the surprise reconciliation of the Senate-House tax reform bills to include taxing government retirees as of July 1, 1986.

Again, this was a conference report that was agreed to in August; about August 16, and they will be taxed as of July 1.

Please consider this request, as we are typical of so many thousands of people who are ready to retire and have made numerous plans that will surely go awry.

Our Treasury Department has a brochure out, Mr. Speaker, which urges Federal employees to buy savings bonds, telling them they can cash their savings bonds in on those first 18 months to 2 years when they retire, and they will be in a lower tax bracket.

All of the people that purchased those savings bonds over the years have now found out that that was all to no avail.

Reading a portion of the next letter:

If we concede, which I do not, that repealing the 3-year recovery period is fair treatment, how can it be fair to make the repeal retroactive to last July? To the best of my knowledge, this was the only provision involving personal income taxes that was made retroactive. Why? By that action, the Conference Committee clearly reduced my salary over the past 23 years by over $55,000. Many Federal retirees will not live long enough to collect the money they paid taxes on and contributed to their retirement fund. Please tell me how that is fair.

Well, obviously, the answer is it is not fair. This conference agreement on the 3-year basis recovery rule is not fair. This conference agreement, I think, will be haunted if this provision is not changed by the fact that this will do more to destroy faith and confidence in the people's government than probably any other action that has been taken by Government in a long, long time.

Let me read a couple more letters:

DEAR CONGRESSMAN WOLF: The House version would implement the proposed change retroactive to July 1, 1986. That is gross and may well be unconstitutional. The Senate verison is much better by providing a transition period up to January 1, 1988.

Well, we know that the House prevailed and the House Ways and Means Committee position prevailed, and the Senate did not. The Senate provision would have made this date effective in January of next year, so that if it were done, and it is not a good idea to do this; but if it were done, what it would mean is any Federal employee or policeman or fireman, rescue squad person, teacher, would have had the opportunity to say, "OK, I think I will retire in order not to be covered by this provision." But when this was done on a retroactive basis, that opportunity was not available.

Another alternative, which would be fairer, would be to include some sort of grandfather provision, e.g., for those who have or will reach either or both the age or years of service requirements for retirement eligibility prior to the implementation date. This would remove tax considerations from the retirement decisions of the older, qualified employees.

We are talking, too, Mr. Speaker, about older Americans; people that have made these decisions over many years. We talk so much in this body about protecting older Americans and yet on the one hand we giveth and the other fist we taketh.

Reading another letter:

DEAR CONGRESSMAN WOLF: This year I completed 37 years of service as a Federal employee and also reached my 55th birthday.

Many of these people are veterans, too. Some from World War II, and veterans of the Korean war. So these are people who were veterans, who came in because of the opportunity to work for their Government and serve their country, and then at the end of their service, get a raw deal.

I think in debating this issue, we need to be mindful of the people we are talking about. Many, many are veterans who have given their best years. Some at Omaha Beach and Pork Chop Hill, and are ending their careers with the Federal service.

For years now, I have planned on retiring at the end of this year with a tax-free arrangment—

Not tax-free; they already paid taxes, so we do not misunderstand this gentleman's letter. They have paid taxes on this money, and the money that they have paid taxes on, as it comes out, is tax free because they have already paid taxes on it—until I recover my investment in the retirement fund. What a blow to have the Tax Reform Act provision retroactively applied to my annuity. The idea that we were given an opportunity to retire prior to June 30 to escape the possibility of the bill being made retroactive is absurd.

I favor a balanced budget and fiscal restraint but not at the expense of the federal employees—

And policemen and firemen and teachers—who are eligible for retirement and who would now be subject to the only ex post facto provision of the proposed law. The Conference Committee did a commendable job of eliminating many tax loopholes while still providing protection for their pets. The fairness doctrine should prevail to the extent that federal employees would not be subject to a provision effective last June 30th when the legislation is yet not passed and unsigned. All other provisions of the Act are prospective or better yet being phased in over several years. It is simply not fair to try to balance the budget on the backs of the federal, state and local employee.

Mr. Speaker, I will read this last letter:

DEAR CONGRESSMAN WOLF: I have been a loyal, faithful and productive Federal Government worker for 26 years. I have been disappointed and annoyed by the repeated attempts of the administration to chip away at the retirement benefits of Federal workers. I couldn't believe the joint House and Senate conference committee decided to remove, retroactive to 1 July 1986, the tax-free period on retirement income until a retiree recoups the amount of money the retiree paid into retirement and on which he/she has already paid taxes. I feel it is totally unfair and unjust to eliminate this or any other benefit an employee has understood would be part of his retirement program. The Federal Government has a moral and legal obligation to maintain its commitments to its employees. If the Federal Government wants to make the above change, in order to be fair and just, it should be made for any new employees after a stated future date, and thus, not break a commitment it has with actively employed workers who have understood they would have the above tax-free period.

Mr. Speaker, these are all the letters I will read today. I know a lot of Members are still in their districts, so we may do this again to get this point across. I would ask my colleagues that are listening, particularly those members of the distinguished Committee on Ways and Means, Chairman ROSTENKOWSKI and the others, who have worked so hard and clearly they have worked hard to bring about a tax reform bill.

But I would ask them to factor into their deliberations now that they are back, a sense of fairness, a sense of equity, a sense of justice to do the right thing. I would ask them to change this provision. There are several compromises floating around and I would ask the chairman to take one of these and to adopt it whereby this provision will not be retroactive, to protect those people who stayed. Let us remember the individuals who stayed because their office was in dire straits; the people working at the FBI on a top investigation and did not want to leave. Also, the people at NASA who just did not want to leave until the end of the year because with the Rogers Commission they knew that NASA was undergoing great turmoil, and they decided to stay to help ease into this situation before they left. Many of those were the best and the brightest who came on when President Kennedy said that we could put a man on the Moon. They believed that, as all of us believed that. We watched them do the job that they did putting the men on the Moon, and they have stayed because of the Challenger shuttle accident, in order to take care of the transition and to keep that place going.

We have an obligation to the Drug Enforcement agents who are just so fed up with seeing drugs coming in from Bolivia, Colombia, Mexico, and other places who are risking their lives in order to stay but just did not want to bail out, did not want history to show that when the going was tough they were going to leave. So they stayed for those extra several months.

Also, for the many employees on Capitol Hill who are loyal—and you know, my colleagues who are listening, having been a former congressional staffer for Congressman "Pete" Biester from Pennsylvania, a Member who was here back in the sixties and early seventies. And I indirectly worked in a different capacity for another Congressman, Congressman John Kyl, from the great State of Iowa, and then was the Deputy Assistant Secretary under Rogers Morton, who was a Member's Member from the Eastern Shore of Maryland; you know how hard many of your employees have worked. You know they have put your best interests in front, many times in front of theirs. You know and the people in this country should know the hours that these staff people work. We have some of the best people in the Government, some of the best people in the country who are working on Capitol Hill that work in this body, and they have stayed on because they have a commitment, a dedication, in a sense. A lot of people do not come to work for the Government for the money; they come because of a sense of involvement, spirit of cooperation, the opportunity to be involved in something bigger and better.

As I made the comment earlier, many of the people in the Space Program could have left the Space Program and gone with private industry; but they decided to stay because the mission was more important. They were involved in something really significant, and they wanted to be part of it. That is what attracts people to the Government. That is what attracts an honors graduate from Georgetown Law School to come into the Government rather than going with one of the big Wall Street companies, those who represent Fortune 500 companies; he would rather be there at the Justice Department stopping organized crime or fighting drugs. So there has been an incentive. We know many of the people who came up here on Capitol Hill to work for us, we know their dedication.

We also know, Mr. Speaker, that many of those people have been hurt.

I would ask that when the Congress has an opportunity, and I plan on doing everything that I can certainly on my side of the aisle with the Republican Members. When we had a chance to vote on a bill, the Republican substitute that we had, we took care of this provision. But I would say that this is not a partisan issue, and I do not want to make it a partisan issue. This should be an American issue, a joint issue, so that we get together on a bipartisan basis, Republicans and Democrats working together to do what is right, to do what is just, to bring equity, to reform and modify and change and make this conference report a conference report the people can be proud of.

Right now there are flaws, and this is one of the major flaws.

So I would ask my colleagues to join us in this effort. I would hope, and I believe it is possible, that the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means and the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee would do what is right without any prodding, and I think they will. I think there is an opportunity, frankly, that they will take this and look at this now that they have had the opportunity to talk to many people and make the change, make the change to perfect and to change and modify and protect these people.

So I would ask my colleagues to join with us to see what we can do to bring fairness to this issue for the dedicated Federal employees, State employees, county employees, city employees, firemen, teachers, and policemen throughout this country, many of whom did not work for the high salary but worked for the highest purpose and the best cause, and that was to make their country and their community better.

Mr. Speaker, I again thank you for this time.

SAM MUCHNICK

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with my colleagues an article about an outstanding American and my closest friend, Mr. Sam Muchnick.

Sam, at 80, is the oldest baseball writer in Cardinal Country. He has been actively engaged in writing about and promoting sports for 60 years. He is one of the most respected persons in the sports community. In the later phase of his career he became world renowned as a wrestling promoter. Besides his direct contributions to the enjoyment of so many sports enthusiasts, he is admired as an outstanding patriot and a loving and devoted father.

Bob Broeg, in the August 15 Redbird Review, wrote an excellent summary of Sam's fascinating career, a labor of love that will hopefully continue for many years to come. I am including this article at the close of my remarks for all of my colleagues to read and enjoy:

MUCHNICK—RETIRED WRESTLING PROMOTER RECALLS BASEBALL DAYS

(By Bob Broeg)

When the ball was taking its worst bounce to the ounce for the Cardinals in late May, a jelly-bellied former sports writer winced as a fly ball fell unmolested in the outfield, an Alphonse-and-Gaston act, that led to a gift two-base hit and served as a springboard for a Cincinnati victory over Danny Cox.

Sam Muchnick, at 80 the oldest living ex-baseball writer in town, shook his head in disappointment, then smiled wryly.

"If," he said, "that had happened in the heyday of Burleigh Grimes, Jesse Haines, Lefty Grove and Wes Ferrell, my, the home clubhouse would look as if a tornado had hit it."

Muchnick was remembering rednecked pitching competitors from his day, which, though he spent only several years in sports writing, left him with an elephantine memory. It left him, also, a heckuva lot richer than sports writers, because when the St. Louis Times folded in 1932 he turned to a more lucrative field.

Sam became, first, press agent for Tom Packs, a local wrestling promoter with national clout.

Ultimately, after serving three years in the militiary with longtime Cardinal captain Terry Moore in the Panama Canal zone, Muchnick became a promoter himself in 1945.

The next 35 years, most of them as president of the National Wrestling Alliance, he gained a name and a most comfortable fortune as St. Louis' No. 1 wrestling and boxing entrepreneur.

"Let's talk baseball," said Sam the Round-Bellied Man, a jovial person whose close friends range from jockeys to giants, hoodlums to judges. "Even though I agree to hype wrestling to survive, it has become an unbelievable hippodrome now."

Muchnick talks like an old newspaperman, which he became at a financial sacrifice, when he evaluated professions.

"I put medicine first," he said, only partly in pride because one of this three children is a doctor," but I list journalism second because the press keeps a close check on politicians and the country's conscience."

Of personal friends, Sam's closest is a political figure who became virtually a statesman, Illinois' Mel Price, elected out of the Army into Congress in 1944. Until the death of Leo Ward, longtime traveling secretary of the Cardinals, some of us liked to lump Muchnick, Ward and Price as the "unholy three."

For no good reason, either, Muchnick liked to tease Ward as the Cardinal's "second-greatest traveling sec," a tribute to the long Redbird road secretary, Clarence Lloyd, who was succeeded in 1938 by ex-left-handed plumber, Ward.

Lloyd helped nursemaid Muchnick when Sam began traveling for the Times with the Cards in 1929. A Central High School (St. Louis) graduate, raised above a tailor's shop in a rough-and-tough neighborhood at 14th and Franklin, now Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. Drive, Muchnick was making $1,800 as a postal clerk. Then in 1925, he finished second in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch annual Babe Ruth contest, a successful national syndicated gimmick.

Failing to win only because he had the New York Giants' Frank Frisch at third base rather than Ruth's darkhorse choice, Ozzie Bluege of Washington, Sam was asked to write a brief bit for the Post-Dispatch about the Cardinals' needs in 1926.

"I wrote that they needed an outfielder and a pitcher and I was right," said a smiling Muchnick, proudly, aware that the mid-season acquisitions of rightfielder Billy Southworth and pitcher Grover Cleveland Alexander helped bring the Redbirds' first pennant and world championship.

Impressed, yet with no job opening, Post sports editor John Edward Wray recommended Muchnick to the Times' sports boss, Sid Keener.

A twinkling-eyed Muchnick recalled, "I went into the newspaper game for only $1,200 a year, but I loved every minute of it."

He loved, for instance, participating with clubowner Sam Breadon, team physician Dr. Robert F. Hyland and St. Louis Zoo director George Vierheller in the "12 o'clock infield," between morning-and-afternoon workouts at camp in Avon Park and then Bradenton, Fla.

Muchnick loved, in addition, the three-year regular traveling beat in which the Cardinals won two pennants and a world championship.

"Maybe only the '42 team, winning 43 of its last 52 games, finished better than Gabby Street's team that won 39 out of 49 in 1930," Muchnick recalled. "We were 10 games out in mid-August and in fourth place, yet still won."

In a high-scoring era, one in which the '30 Redbirds scored a still-existing record of 1,006 runs, Muchnick remembered the pivotal rare pitching battle at Brooklyn in late September.

"Bill Hallahan beat Dazzy Vance in 10 innings, 1-0," he said, his smile widening. "That's when Flint Rhem told the tallest white lie ever. He said he had been kidnapped the night before the game he was scheduled to start and forced to drink cups of raw whiskey."

Muchnick had an inferential hand in the 1930 victory. He needled owner Breadon into getting a fourth starting pitcher, singling out veteran Grimes with the Boston Braves. He repeated the appeal in a Philadelphia hotel room, where Breadon served Prohibition drinks to traveling St. Louis writers. The owner excused himself, walked into another room of his suite, then returned.

"All right, Sammy," he said, "you've got your wish. I've traded Fred Frankhouse and Bill Sherdel to Boston for Grimes."

Grimes' salary of $17,000 was high for those days.

Excitedly, Muchnick bet Breadon $100 to $10 that the Cardinals would win the pennant. Later he collected from the smiling automobile dealer who combined with general manager Branch Rickey for most of the era, 1926-46, that produced nine pennants and six world championships.

"At the time, though," said Muchnick, chuckling, "we left Mr. Breadon staring at empty glasses because all of us in the press—St. Louis had four daily newspapers then—raced to our typewriters or telephones."

More seriously, Muchnick remembered, "Frankhouse was one of my best friends on the ballclub, yet I had to break the bad news to him and my part in it. Now, the club would tell the player first."

Times were different then and travel, too.

"We traveled by sooty trains with no air conditioning," Muchnick said, "and we grabbed taxi cabs at hotels and from the ballpark, harum-scarum, because there were no team buses. First time Pepper Martin jumped into a cab with me, he wanted to get out. We were strangers and he thought he was in the wrong cab."

Muchnick, a widower, had a happy fling before he was married as both the pet of veteran writers and of players, too, even though he could get on his muscle now and then. Like the time, Frisch, a personal favorite of Muchnick's, ribbed in a hotel lobby that sports writers didn't know a thing about baseball.

"Yeah, you blankety-blank, switch-hitting so-and-so," said Sam, using unexpected four-letter vulgarities, "but we know when to cover second base."

This was a jab at Frisch for a mental boo-boo that day—and, suddenly, seeing a woman just beyond the ballplayer, Muchnick amended his statement: "Pardon me, Mrs. Grimes"—an apology to the pitcher's wife.

Thereafter, until recently when longtime clubhouse manager Morris "Butch" Yatkeman retired, we would pick up the expression carried on by writers like J. Roy Stockton, Martin J. Haley and Red Smith, who, with secretary Lloyd, had heard Sam's explosion and redfaced apology.

Whenever someone spewed profanities, one or the other would comment, "Pardon me, Mrs. Grimes," long after Burleigh and his missus were gone from the club. Long after, for that matter, listeners wondered who 'n hell Mrs. Grimes was.

Muchnick, himself a practical joker, can take a rib as well as perform one.

"That's nothing," he said, "compared with the time I dressed up like a cowboy, walked into Breadon's suite in Florida, pulled a toy gun and yelled, 'Stick 'em up, you unmentionables,' unaware that Mrs. Breadon and another lady sat around a corner in the room."

Rachel Breadon, an understanding and attractive woman, put the flustered young reporter at ease.

Some of us, like Leo Ward and me, to name two, liked to josh with Muchnick if only to see his department-store Santa Claus belly jiggle with amused joy. For instance, about the time Muchnick drove to Florida with Ward for spring training. They were lost in a fog when Leo asked Sam to figure out what a barely visible sign said at roadside.

Muchnick squinted, then said triumphantly, "Litter barrel . . . Litter Barrel, Georgia!"

See how it is when you write about a guy who wound up totaling the pitchers' expected victories in 1931 and got almost as many as the old 145-game schedule. Still, Sam was ALMOST right. The Redbirds won 101.

I've always teased the old baseball writer the most, because he turned down a chance to play left field for the Cardinals in a 1929 exhibition game at Baltimore, then a minor-league city, at a time Pennsylvania's archaic blue laws permitted no Sunday games.

"I was flattered," said Muchnick, aware that manager Southworth wanted to rest regulars, "but I didn't want to tell him that I had a date to drink home brew with Pop Haines and Hal Haid.

"We left home that trip in first place, lost 10 in a row, then won at Philadelphia by the National League's record score, 28-6, so I learned early not to quit on a club. Learned it as far back as 1918 when I saw my first big-league game. So, don't quit on these guys now. I won't."

466. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the Council of the City of New York, NY, relative to resident management of public housing; to the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs.

467. Also, petition of the City Council of New York, NY, relative to drug dealers; to the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs.

468. Also, petition of the City Council of New York, NY, relative to the promotion of a stable economic mix of families residing in public housing; to the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs.

469. Also, petition of the City Commission, Hayes, KS relative to Americans missing in Southeast Asia; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

470. Also, petition of the general secretary, Reformed Church in America, New York, NY, relative to budget cuts; to the Committee on Government Operations.

471. Also, petition of the Kenai Peninsula Borough Assembly, Soldotna, AK, relative to amendments to ANCSA; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

472. Also, petition of the Governor of the State of California, Sacramento, CA, relative to the national maximum speed limit; to the Committee on Public Works and Transportation.

473. Also, petition of the Oakland City Council, Oakland, CA, relative to health care for veterans; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

474. Also, petition of the stated clerk, Office of the General Assembly, Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), relative to tax reform; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE—Monday, September 18, 1986

The Senate met at 12 noon and was called to order by the President pro tempore (Mr. THURMOND).

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray:

He that dwelleth in the secret place of the most high shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty. I will say of the Lord, He is my refuge, and my fortress, my God: in Him will I trust.—Psalm 91:1-2.

Father in Heaven, we come to You this morning with heavy hearts, smitten by the tragedies in Karachi and Istanbul. Our minds struggle to understand this mindless violence. We commend to Your grace and loving comfort and care the families of those who suffered and died in these tragedies. May they experience Your peace when it seems peace is impossible.

We mourn the loss of Harley M. Dirks and with profound gratitude remember his many years of dedicated service as clerk of the Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education. Be near to his family and friends in their loss.

Gracious God, encourage Nicholas Daniloff and his loved ones in this hour of uncertainty and frustration. Guide those who are most closely involved in the efforts for his release and grant, dear God, that he may soon be home safely.

Now, Lord, we pray for Your gracious intervention as the Senate enters these final weeks of the 99th Congress. Give to Your servants wisdom and strength for the difficult days ahead. May Thy will be done in the Senate as it is in heaven for Your glory and honor. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The able and distinguished majority leader, Senator ROBERT DOLE, of Kansas, is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. I thank the distinguished Presiding Officer, Senator THURMOND.

SCHEDULE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, first, I welcome all my colleagues back after the recess, as well as members of the Senate staff and my own staff.

We do have a rather large number of items to complete, but it is not unprecedented. I hope we can complete our business by October 3.

I will hand to the distinguished minority leader a list of the items I think most Members believe are so-called must items, and I will be discussing that with the minority leader a little later.

So far as today is concerned, under the standing order, the leaders have 10 minutes each. There is a special order in favor of Senator PROXMIRE for not to exceed 5 minutes.

There will be routine morning business, not to extend beyond 1 p.m., with Senators permitted to speak therein for not more than 5 minutes each.

Because a large number of Members have not yet returned but are on their way back, we will not have any rollcall votes today. If any rollcall votes are ordered, they will occur on tomorrow. Notwithstanding that, I hope we can dispose of at least one appropriation bill.

I am advised by the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. MCCLURE] that he will be available between 3 and 4 o'clock to bring up the Interior appropriation bill, if that can be cleared on the other side.

I am also advised by Senator WEICKER that he is prepared on Labor-HHS, and we are in the process of seeing if there will be a lot of amendments to those matters.

We do need to start on appropriations bill today and continue on appropriations bills throughout tomorrow.

We will begin the Rehnquist nomination at an early hour on Wednesday or Thursday and conclude action on it by the end of the week. The distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee is here, and I hope we can conclude action on the Rehnquist and Scalia nominations by Friday evening. If that should be the case, that would be all we would do this week.

The must items include at least the Superfund conference report, the debt limit conference report. I do not see the conference report on tax reform on this list, but that is a must item. In any event, I will deliver that list to the distinguished minority leader.

NICK DANILOFF MUST BE FREED

DANILOFF'S INDICTMENT OMINOUS DEVELOPMENT

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, the distinguished minority leader and I are going to make statements on the indictment of Mr. Daniloff, and we will both submit a resolution expressing the sense of outrage of the U.S. Senate.

The announcement yesterday in Moscow that Nick Daniloff, the U.S. News & World Report correspondent illegally detained by the Russians, has been indicted for espionage raises this matter to a new and much more ominous level, both for Daniloff personally and for United States-Soviet relations.

It is high time that the Kremlin understands that this "cruel game" it is playing with an innocent man's life has outraged the American people and Congress, and is endangering constructive relations between our governments, including the upcoming summit. It is high time that Soviet leader Gorbachev wakes up to the stakes now on the table and puts a little sanity back into the Russians' handling of this matter.

DANILOFF MUST BE FREED

Nick Daniloff is innocent—there is not a shred of credible evidence to the contrary. Nick Daniloff's case has absolutely no connection to the case of the Soviet spy recently caught at the United Nations. To equate them is unjustified as to be ludicrous. Nick Daniloff should be freed—immediately and unconditionally. It is as simple as that.

Immediately after Nick Daniloff was detained, I cabled Mr. Gorbachev, urging his immediate release. As we all know, the President has also sent a personal message to Mr. Gorbachev. I know that many other Members of Congress, on both sides of the aisle, have done so, as have journalists and private Americans by the scores, by the hundreds, and by the thousands.

I also sent a telegram to U.S. News executive editor Mort Zuckerman, promising him that the Senate was not going to ignore this important matter.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of both of my telegrams be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Telegram]

General Secretary of the Central Committee, Communist Party of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the Kremlin, Moscow.

I am deeply disturbed by the wholly unjustified detention of U.S. News & World Report journalist Nicholas Daniloff by Soviet authorities. I know that many Members of Congress share my concern and will be prepared to act further on this matter should it remain unresolved when Congress reconvenes next week.

In the interest of simple justice and continued constructive relations between our countries, I urge your personal intervention to bring about the immediate and unconditional release of Mr. Daniloff.

BOB DOLE,
Majority Leader, U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, September 2, 1986.

Mr. MORTIMER ZUCKERMAN,
Chairman and Editor-in-Chief, U.S. News & World Report, Washington, DC.

DEAR MORT: I share your deep concern over the wholly unjustified detention of Nicholas Daniloff by the Soviet Union.

This morning, I sent a personal message to Soviet General Secretary Gorbachev, urging Daniloff's immediate, unconditional release. Should this situation remain unresolved when Congress reconvenes, I will do everything I can to insure that the Senate immediately expresses its concern over this serious incident.

If there is anything further you feel that I can usefully do to speed Daniloff's release, please let me know.

Sincerely yours,

BOB DOLE,
Majority Leader.

DANILOFF RESOLUTION

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, the Senate cannot ignore this important issue. We are now circulating a resolution—myself and the distinguished minority leader—expressing what I think will be the unanimous feeling of this body, that Nick Daniloff should be released immediately and unconditionally as a matter of justice and in the interests of workable relations between our country and the U.S.S.R.

I certainly urge all Senators to join in cosponsoring this resolution, so the Kremlin gets the message loud and clear.

I hope that when we introduce the resolution—it is undergoing some revision; it is being worked on by staff on both sides of the aisle—that we could introduce the resolution, have it cleared and then perhaps have a rollcall vote on this rather important resolution by 2 o'clock tomorrow.

But I will not make that request at this time.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

RECOGNITION OF THE MINORITY LEADER

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MATTINGLY). Under the previous order, the minority leader is recognized.

HOSTAGE-TAKING IN MOSCOW

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I join with the distinguished majority leader in protesting and condemning the actions by the Soviet Government and I also join with the majority leader in preparation for the joint cosponsorship of the resolution and in urging all Senators to sign that resolution and to support it at the time the vote is taken, hopefully tomorrow at 2 p.m., as the distinguished majority leader has suggested.

Mr. President, Nicholas Daniloff sits in a prison in Moscow at this moment. As we all know, while the Senate was in recess, the Soviet KGB arrested this respected reporter for U.S. News & World Report. While he was exchanging some novels for newspaper clippings with a Soviet contact, eight—E-I-G-H-T—KGB agents pounced on this unsuspecting Moscow correspondent and arrested him for possession of maps stamped "Top Secret." The Soviet regime just yesterday has compounded its error by indicting Mr. Daniloff.

There is little doubt that this was a crude contrived, heavy-handed frameup. As such, the Soviet leadership is engaged in a dangerous, foolish, and miscalculated ploy that could backfire in their faces. It is a game that has only one side, since the United States is not playing that game.

To Americans, human beings are not pawns to be used and abused in power plays between superpowers. We must not be manipulated into exchanging an accused spy for a journalist. We cannot barter an innocent American citizen for a Soviet espionage suspect.

If Daniloff was indeed framed by the KGB, and if he is being detained only to affect the treatment by the United States of a suspected Soviet spy being detained here—as clearly seems to be the case—then he is nothing more or less than a hostage. We are all too familiar with the recently much-employed game of hostage-taking. It is one of the favorite techniques of terrorists. The United States should not be any more willing to negotiate with the Soviets in a hostage crisis than with terrorists in Lebanon for the return of Americans being held there. We must make it clear to the Soviet leaders that the American Government will not accede to extortionist techniques.

If we were to succumb to such techniques, the world will know that any American journalist, or businessman, or any other American citizen for that matter, is fair game for international blackmail. Mr. Daniloff is just a very good, hard-working journalist, nothing more. Everybody knows that. Mr. Gorbachev knows that. Nobody's fooling anybody here. The only answer to the problem is his immediate and unconditional release. No strings. No conditions. No deals.

In the absence of such a satisfactory solution to this outrageous ploy, Soviet-American relations will be badly damaged at a delicate and critical time. It comes at a time when preparations are underway for what could be a summit meeting of historic proportions between the leaders of our two nations. It comes at a time when our two nations should be pursuing constructive approaches in dealing with each other, instead of introducing such potentially destructive events—events certain to cause a negative chain reaction which will badly sour the international atmosphere.

The opportunity to obtain a satisfactory new arms control and reduction agreement between our two nations has been building for some time and, if the opportunity is lost because of these juvenile and misguided antics, it may not come around again for years. This should be very clear. We all know that there are individuals and factions in both American and Soviet governments and societies, some at official levels, who are opposed to any productive summit meeting. There are those who are opposed to any kind of arms control agreement whatsoever. Although these ideologues only represent a small minority, they are capable of substantial mischief. The negative actions they can precipitate, which can easily cause a dangerous chain reaction, must be guarded against and headed off whenever they appear. If the purpose of this action by the Soviet Union was something other than damaging the overall relationship, and even scuttling the summit, that nevertheless, has been and continues to be such an effect.

Some Senators, including the distinguished chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, have already said that this episode could jeopardize the prospective summit meeting. That is certainly obvious, and the jeopardy will mount each day that Mr. Daniloff remains in a Moscow prison. The interest of improved relations between our two nations, which Mr. Gorbachev continuously publicly professes that he wants, dictates the immediate release of this innocent American.

Mr. President, the continued incarceration of Mr. Daniloff serves as a constant, vivid reminder of the harshness of the political system we are dealing with. It is a system that has astonished the world with its disregard for basic human rights, a system that continues to trample on the lives and freedoms of the people of Afghanistan, that has stamped out the seeds of liberty in Poland, and is now depriving one of our fellow citizens of his liberties—and at the same time showing its utter disdain and its paranoid fear of a free press.

I remind my colleagues and the Soviet leadership that it was the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan that sealed the fate of the SALT II accords in 1979. Is history repeating itself today?

Recent history shows a pattern of Soviet contempt for a free press, and for the Western press. In 1982, the Soviet Government ousted Newsweek reporter Andrew Nagorshi. In 1977, Associated Press reporter George Krimsky was accused of being an intelligence agent and was ordered to leave.

And in that same year, the KGB detained Los Angeles Times reporter Robert Toth for 5 days on bogus charges of having received official state secrets. So, this is just another reminder of the type of system operated by our chief adversary.

When Mr. Gorbachev took power in the Soviet Union, most of the world hailed the arrival of a new era, as he appeared to promise a new openness in relations with the West. Others, however, warned against such optimism, claiming that Mr. Gorbachev constituted nothing more than new wine in the same old bottle. The snatching of Mr. Daniloff is the style of the era of Joseph Stalin, not the style of a media-conscious, PR razzle-dazzle, "new look" Muscovite leadership. Is this Mr. Gorbachev's way of wooing and dazzling the Western press? Is this the way his honeymoon ends?

Whatever ill-considered machinations drove the Soviet leadership to decide to pick on Nicholas Daniloff, a clear gesture on the part of Mr. Gorbachev is what the world is looking for and is what this Senator is looking for. The unconditional release of Mr. Daniloff will certainly help Mr. Gorbachev to live up to his promise of a new openness, and it would help avoid the further deterioration of Soviet-American relations that is already occurring with his continued imprisonment.

It must be clear to those Soviet leaders with any common sense that this incident is not panning out any gold at all for them. I have personally written to the former Soviet Ambassador to the United States, Mr. Anatoly Dobrynin, on this matter and asked him to exercise his substantial influence to bring this poor chapter in the Soviet-American relationship to a swift and satisfactory ending.

Despite the residue the event surely will leave in the minds of freedom-loving people everywhere, the release of Mr. Daniloff could still avert substantial deterioration of Soviet-American relations that is bound to occur if he continues to be unjustly incarcerated. Such a deterioration, assuredly is in the best interests of neither the United States and its allies nor the people of the Soviet Union. I fervently hope that Mr. Daniloff is released immediately.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. DOLE addressed the Chair.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I also have a statement and I think the distinguished minority leader may have a statement on the acts of terrorism.

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. DOLE. Do you intend to do that now?

Mr. BYRD. Yes, I do have a statement. It would be all right with me if the distinguished majority leader wishes to delay pursuing that until the special order has been taken care of. I do have a statement and I am ready when the majority leader wishes to go forward.

Mr. DOLE. Maybe we could do that when they finish.

Mr. BYRD. That will be all right.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR PROXMIRE

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE] is recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes.

NICHOLAS DANILOFF

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I wish to congratulate the majority leader and the minority leader on their excellent, strong statements on the Daniloff case. I certainly support every word they say enthusiastically.

MY DAY AT CRAY

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, what firm produces the world's fastest computer? Is it Japan? No! Germany? No! America? Yes. Is it located in Silicon Valley, CA? No. The MIT-Harvard technology complex in Massachusetts? No. This company has shot into the high-technology business like a meteor. Where other computer firms are struggling to keep their heads above water, this company is zooming ahead with sales smashing all records. The name is Cray Research. The Japanese have challenged Cray for computer speed supremacy. Cray has consistently won. International Business Machine, the great corporate colossus whose name has become synonomous with high technology has thrown its massive economic power, its great scientific genius into battle with Cray. And who won? Cray!! In Washington, whether it is the mammoth Defense Department, the National Aeronautics and Space Agency, or any other Federal agency that takes pride in its technology, the proudest boast it can make is, "We have a Cray." So where is this remarkable company located? Who are the geniuses behind its success? Where were they educated? Where does the whiz bang work force that produces this magical computer technology come from? Mr. President, this is quite a story. It is an American small town, hard work, take-a-risk, sheer genius story. Cray Research is hundreds of miles removed from the great MIT-Harvard technology complex that has made the State of Massachusetts bloom. It is 2,000 miles away from the famous Silicon Valley technology explosion in California.

So where is Cray Research? It is a little town of 12,270 souls named Chippewa Falls in northwest Wisconsin. It is 87 miles from Minneapolis, 250 miles from Milwaukee. Who are the geniuses that built this remarkable research meteor? One person did it. His name is Seymour Cray. And who is Seymour Cray? Where did he develop this genius? Cray was born in Chippewa Falls. He has lived there most of his life. He was educated in its schools. His father was the Chippewa Falls city engineer. Where did Cray go to hire the brilliant technicians who produce this world's fastest computer? He didn't go anywhere. He hired his neighbors from Chippewa Falls and the towns and villages and farms nearby. Oh, yes he has established an administrative and marketing headquarters in Minneapolis. Cray has sales offices in major American cities, in Japan, and in a number of European countries. But Cray research, Cray engineering, Cray design, Cray fabrication and production is done in that little, remote town in northwestern Wisconsin, Chippewa Falls.

On August 27, this Senator spent the day working as a kind of incompetent apprentice technician at Cray. It was quite an experience. I worked in three different departments. My jobs were simple. They were also repetitive, agonizingly precise and exacting. They involved fabrication and inspection work. The supervisors constantly insisted on a meticulous dedication to making every movement precisely right. They are reminded that every part be exact—meticulously exact. And yet the relation between all the workers was warm, friendly, happy. If something went wrong, everyone seemed to step up to take the blame. Workers made a special effort to help each other. It was astonishing. Here was a company producing one of the most complex pieces of equipment that the marvelous technology of this age can produce in any country, anywhere. Was this work being done by supermen and superwomen? No, it was the accomplishments of ordinary American citizens inspired by a bona fide American genius who grew up among them in a little town that could easily pass for Garrison Keillor's Lake Woebegon. For anyone who has the notion that this country is run by some kind of an exotic elite that hails from one of two or three rare oases of glamour on the east or west coast of the United States or from Japan or the United Kingdom or Germany, consider Cray Research of Chippewa Falls, WI. Glamorous? No. A winner? You betcha!

GOLDEN FLEECE FOR AUGUST

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, my Golden Fleece Award for August goes to the Food and Nutrition Service [FNS] in the Department of Agriculture for chucking away over $1 million between 1981 and 1985 by allowing a private company to cover its losses with taxpayers' money intended for children in day-care homes. The FNS fed corporate coffers instead of hungry children. And, adding insult to injury, FNS ignored numerous warnings from departmental auditors that this money was being devoured by the wrong people.

The Federal Government pays the bill when some hungry children are fed. But the FNS contracts with private firms which actually do the work in conformance with Government guidelines which specify how the taxpayers' money should be spent. This fleece proves that this arrangement failed in at least one instance.

Back in 1981, the FNS asked the Agriculture Department's Inspector General to take a look at how this program was working. Auditors found a multitude of problems: The private firm's accounting system was a joke and Federal money was being spent without a paper trail to show who got it and why. These problems were longstanding. An independent CPA firm had found similar problems as far back as 1979. What did the auditors recommend? They thought that FNS should either immediately help the company improve its management or, failing that, terminate the contract. What did the FNS do? They responded in the best bureaucratic fashion by delaying, by temporizing, by passing the buck, and by saying, just watch for improvements in next year's audit.

Meanwhile, the FNS helped the company stay one step ahead of the bailiff by letting the taxpayers' money be used to pay the company's bills. In 1981, auditors found that about $71,000 had been used for this purpose. But by 1985, this sum had grown to a whopping $1.1 million. All this money was to no avail. The company declared bankruptcy in 1985.

Now the taxpayers will be standing in line in bankruptcy court to see if any of their money can be recovered. They stand a slim chance of that ever happening.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business until the hour of 1 p.m., with statements therein limited to 5 minutes each.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, so ordered.

TERRORISM

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, just a few days ago, the world was reminded that international terrorism remains a principal threat to human life and democratic values, and that all civilized nations must redouble their efforts to eradicate this scourge.

The bloody end to the hijacking of Pan American flight 73 in Karachi, Pakistan, and the murder of 22 Turkish Jews as they worshiped in their Istanbul synagogue, underscore the continuing need for action against international terrorism and the grievances which inspire it.

Our hearts go out to the victims of these latest terrorism crimes, and to their families. They have our deepest sympathies and condolences. They are the innocent victims in the diplomatic, political, and military struggles which comprise the context of international terrorism. We mourn those who have been killed, and we hope that those who have been injured will recover quickly.

Yet as we decry these latest terrorist crimes in Pakistan and Turkey, and offer sustenance to the victims of these outrages, we should deepen our resolve to act in concert with our friends and allies to combat international terrorism.

As the most powerful nation in the free world, the United States should lead these efforts. However, as I have stated before, the United States deserves the support of its allies and friends in this battle—not only of its allies, but the support of all civilized nations.

It was for that reason that I offered an amendment to the Diplomatic Security and Antiterrorism Act to encourage increased cooperation among our NATO allies to combat terrorism. That amendment urged the President to propose to our NATO allies that the alliance should create a permanent political committee to deal with terrorism.

I am pleased that this amendment was included in the final version of this act, because if such a NATO antiterrorism committee is established, it could become an important forum for government-to-government cooperation against terrorism.

The latest terrorism attack in Turkey, a NATO ally, should demonstrate to the alliance the need for such a forum.

The latest terrorism act in Pakistan demonstrates that such government-to-government cooperation among our friends and allies naturally extends beyond the membership of the NATO alliance. The war against international terrorism must be waged on a far wider scale.

Mr. President, the U.S. Government has increased its international efforts against terrorism, but it must give even further consideration to escalating this war through all possible means—diplomatic, political, economic, and, when appropriate, military.

To reinforce our ongoing antiterrorism campaign, I urge the President to make increased antiterrorism cooperation a high-priority subject of discussion in every new communication he has with any of our friends and allies, and even to consider proposing a special "antiterrorism summit meeting" to increase the multilateral efforts against terrorism.

I will join with the distinguished majority leader this afternoon in introducing a resolution condemning these latest terrorist acts. And I hope that the full Senate will consider this measure as early as tomorrow. Also it would be well if the Senate could have a rollcall vote immediately following the vote on the Daniloff matter tomorrow so that again the Senate might register its unanimous support for this resolution and its unanimous condemnation and protest against such horrifying terrorist acts.

No discussion of international terrorism can be complete without mentioning the role that the Soviet Union may play in encouraging such attacks. The Soviets condemn terrorism, and yet there is some evidence that they give both material and political support to it. I noted in the press during the last few days that some of the terrorists may be receiving their training in the Soviet Union.

If the Soviets are genuine in their opposition to international terrorism, they will cooperate with the United States and its friends and allies against it. I urge the President to challenge the Soviet leader at the summit—if, indeed, a summit occurs—to demonstrate this cooperation.

Ultimately, international terrorism affects all nations, so we must do all we can to mobilize as many nations as possible in the campaign to eradicate it.

I join with the majority leader in the effort to get other Senators on both sides of the aisle to join in cosponsorship of the resolution. I hope all Senators will do so. I hope that the vote when it comes on tomorrow will receive the unanimous support of the Senate.

I yield the floor.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I want to thank the distinguished minority leader for his statement, particularly the suggestion that the Soviet Union be a part of any process here if we are ever going to get to the root of terrorism. I think it is another challenge the Soviet Union needs to look at very carefully.

I would guess that over the past week millions of Americans and millions around the world wondered about precisely what was going on—first, the terrorist attack in Karachi, and, second, the attack in Instanbul. I guess just watching as I watched the news time after time after time it is pretty hard to comprehend or to describe the horror and revulsion that all of us feel over these inhuman acts.

Our hearts go out to the victims and their families, including the many Americans victimized in the Karachi hijack. Our appreciation goes to the Government of Pakistan, which I believe did provide some assistance although there is some doubt whether there was lax security at the airport or an adequate effort made to abort the hijacking. But in any event, we express our appreciation in the effort to contain and end the Karachi incident with minimum bloodshed.

Once again, we are painfully reminded of the fact that there are fanatical elements at loose in the international community, willing to murder and maim defenseless men, women, and children, in pursuit of their warped political beliefs. Once again, we must confront the bitter reality that there are no easy answers; that international terror is not going to go away; that, as sure as today turns into tomorrow, we will face even more attacks in the months ahead.

A TIME OF TESTING FOR THE NATION

This is a time of testing for America and for Americans, no less than we have faced in open war. It is a time for all of us to resolve once again to show quiet courage, not bravado; unity, not diviseness or partisanship; resolute determination, not knee-jerk reaction.

We must remain steadfast to a threefold strategy: We must be vigilant and strong, and be prepared to pay the high cost of that posture. We must never give in to the demands of terrorists, no matter what the circumstances. And, in the long run, we must make terrorists pay for their deeds—with the cooperation of our allies and friends and; as the distinguished minority leader indicated, the Soviet Union if we are ever going to bring an end to terrorism around the world.

If necessary, if all that fails, then we have to go it our own way if that becomes a necessity.

In this context, I might also note that the Israeli Parliament, the Knesset, will be holding a special session this week to express solidarity with the victims of the Istanbul attack. The distinguished minority leader and I, on behalf of the Senate, will be sending a message to the speaker of the Knesset, adding the Senate's voice to those of the Israeli parliamentarians expressing outrage at the Istanbul attack.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of that message be included in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit No. 1.)

Mr. DOLE. As the distinguished minority leader has indicated we will be working together on joint cosponsorship of a resolution urging unanimous Senate support for the resolution, and that will be circulated this afternoon.

Again I think it is a good idea to have the votes back-to-back perhaps after the policy luncheons tomorrow to express the feelings of the Senate on the tragedy of Karachi and Istanbul and reaffirming our determination to stand strong and together against international terrorism.

I want to thank the distinguished minority leader and his staff and the members of my staff who have been working on these matters in the past few days.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I want to thank the distinguished majority leader and his staff.

EXHIBIT No. 1

MESSAGE TO ISRAELI KNESSET FROM DOLE AND BYRD ON TERRORIST ATTACK IN ISTANBUL

To His Excellency SHLOMO HILLEL,
Speaker, the Knesset, Jerusalem, Israel.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: On the solemn occasion of the Knesset's special session, and on behalf of the Senate of the United States, we would like to join in expressing outrage at the terrorist attack on the Neve Shalom Synagogue in Istanbul and solidarity with the victims of that tragic incident.

Our countries and people have stood together on many occasions and on many issues. But never do we stand more united than in our condemnation of international terror and our sympathy for its innocent victims.

From the tragedy of Istanbul, let us take new resolve to continue to work together to contain and eventually to stamp out the scourge of terrorism.

Sincerely yours,

BOB DOLE,
Majority Leader.
ROBERT C. BYRD,
Minority Leader.

DROPOUT PREVENTION AND REENTRY DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will now read H.R. 3042.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 3042), to authorize the Secretary of Education to make grants to local educational agencies for dropout prevention and reentry demonstration projects.

Mr. BRYD. Mr. President, I object to any further proceedings on H.R. 3042 at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

AMENDMENT OF TRADE EXPANSION ACT 1972

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will now read S. 2765.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2765) to amend section 232(a) of the Trade Expansion Act of 1972 to improve its administration, and for other purposes.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I object to any further proceeding on S. 2765 at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. LEVIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

THE TAX BILL

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, at some point within the next month, we are going to consider the conference report on the tax bill. When we do, I believe it is important that we focus on what is in that bill rather than what is being said about it. There is a big difference between the two. For example, we are told that the public is clamoring for the bill. But the polls say that is not the case. And when I talked with my constituents in Michigan over the past few weeks they told me that was not the case.

The lack of public demand for this bill, indeed skepticism and cynicism, will grow as folks find out about some of the other differences between what they want in tax reform and what they would get if this bill passes.

They want a law to give middle-income Americans a break. They would get a law forcing one out of every five middle-income taxpayers to pay more in taxes.

They want a law to make the tax system fair. They would get a law creating and perpetuating a whole host of inequities.

They want a law to help reduce the deficit. They would get a law making deficit reduction harder and more unfair.

They want a law to encourage economic growth. They would get a law threatening to push the economy over the edge and pull a lot of us over along with it.

Those are some of the reasons why this is just the wrong bill at the wrong time.

Notwithstanding what the people want, virtually everyone in Washington says that Congress is poised to approve the conference report on the tax reform bill. They say that everyone supports reforming the Tax Code. Well, I support reforming the Tax Code, too. I support toughening the minimum tax on profitable corporations and on wealthy individuals to make sure that they do not shelter all their income. I agree with the aide to Chairman ROSTENKOWSKI of the Ways and Means Committee who described this as "the fire in the belly behind this issue." But, as was the case with the Senate version, I do not support the conference report.

If the passage of the conference report is a foregone conclusion, some may think that my remarks today and over the next few days, attempting to demythologize this bill, are just footnotes to a battle already fought. But I believe that there is a chance—admittedly a small chance—that they may not be just footnotes. I believe there is a chance that when people look at this bill closely, they will see that it is like a new house which is fashionable on the outside, but which is supported by too many matchstick beams.

Let me start out today with what is perhaps the most common myth about this bill—the myth that this bill is unambiguously good news for the average taxpayer. The day after the conference committee reported agreement, one of the television economics reporters said simply, "If you make under $50,000, you get a tax cut; if you make over $75,000, you get a tax increase." One of the chief proponents of the conference report has added:

What the Government is saying to middle-income Americans with this bill is: If you work hard, if you earn more money, you'll keep more of the money you earn.

That is a myth. The reality is a lot more clouded. Surely, according to the best information available from the Joint Committee on Taxation, most average Americans would get a small tax cut under this bill. But millions of average Americans would get a tax increase under this bill. In 1988, when fully phased in, this bill would increase taxes on 10 million taxpayers with incomes between $20,000 and $50,000. So much for the myth that this bill is good news for all middle-income people.

Some may respond by saying that although some average Americans would get tax increases under this bill, most of the people who would get tax increases are wealthy individuals who abuse tax shelters. Unfortunately, this is another myth. Based on the material from the joint committee, of the 20 million taxpayers who would get tax increases in 1988, 77 percent are making $50,000 or less. That 20 million includes not only the 10 million I mentioned a moment ago who make between $20,000 and $50,000, but also 5.8 million taxpayers making less than $20,000. Therefore, most of the people who would get tax increases under this bill come from the ranks of middle- and low-income taxpayers.

These are not the taxpayers who are investing in vacant office buildings to shelter their income, but rather taxpayers who have to work hard just to afford shelter for themselves and their families. They do not engage in exotic tax schemes, but rather are among the 35 million taxpayers with incomes under $50,000 who deduct State sales taxes, or the 31 million with incomes under $50,000 who deduct consumer interest. They are also among the 25 million taxpayers making under $50,000 who take the deduction for two-earner couples, which is designed to partially compensate for the fact that married couples with both spouses working would otherwise pay more in taxes than would two single individuals making the same total income—what is known as the marriage penalty tax.

Simply put, most of the taxpayers who would be asked to pay more in taxes under this bill are not among the privileged and powerful but rather are among the average and the struggling.

One particular group that appears likely to have more than its share of people getting tax increases under this bill are two-wage earner couples. There is a tendency among proponents of this bill to say flatly that it is pro-family because of the increase in the size of the dependency exemption for children. What this characterization ignores is that the bill is skewed to a particular definition of "family." It is not a valid generalization if both spouses work, as do over 50 percent of married couples. There are many two-wage earner couples for whom the increase in the dependency exemption and the lower tax rates would not compensate for the loss of the two-earner deduction and for deductions such as the ones for consumer interest and sales taxes. In many of these families, both spouses work because that is what is necessary to make ends meet. How are these families going to feel when, if this bill passes, they find out that they will get a tax increase because their definition of "family" does not match that of the people who supported the bill?

I will have more to say about the conference report over the next few days, based on the information that is available at this point and on additional information which I have requested of the Joint Committee on Taxation and the Finance Committee, and which I hope will be available shortly.

One thing that opponents and supporters of this bill have in common is that they recognize its monumental significance. That is why I trust that this bill will not be rushed to the floor for passage before there has been an adequate time for it to be carefully reviewed—by not only the Members of Congress but also by our constituents.

The supporters of this bill like to present it as a bill reflecting the general interest. It is only proper, then, that there be enough time after the conference report has actually been printed for our constituents to reflect on it and report to us. If it is as popular as its supporters suggest, this will only add to its momentum. If it is, in fact, not so popular among the people, we should certainly want to know that as well.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GORTON). Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have indicated to the distinguished majority leader that if the Senate is not prepared to transact any business at the present time, I am prepared to proceed with a speech on the subject of the U.S. Senate rather than continue with a prolonged recess. It is my understanding that the managers of the appropriation bill will be prepared later this afternoon to proceed with the action on that bill. But at the present time there is not the possibility that action would go forward. So rather than have the Senate engage in a very long quorum call, I thought it might be well to proceed with another in my series of speeches on the history of the U.S. Senate. I, therefore, ask unanimous consent that I may proceed to speak in morning business until such time as I yield the floor, and I will yield the floor at any time the distinguished majority leader wishes to transact any business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. I will also yield the floor if any other Senator should wish to have the floor, but until then I shall proceed.

May I say to those who are watching television that I have, since 1980, the month of March thereof, made a series of speeches on the history of the U.S. Senate, and more than 80 of such speeches have been made. Today, I shall speak on the subject "Mike Mansfield's Senate: The Great Society Years."

THE UNITED STATES SENATE

MIKE MANSFIELD'S SENATE: THE GREAT SOCIETY YEARS

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, United States senators, like baseball fans, love statistics. From time to time we stop to congratulate colleagues on their years of service, the number of votes they have cast, their tenure in a committee chairmanship. The cloakrooms present a "golden gavel" award to senators who preside for a hundred hours in the chamber. Various interest groups collect our roll call statistics, and rate how liberal or conservative we are, or how often we support or oppose the president's program, or how we voted on their favorite legislation. The American Enterprise Institute regularly publishes a volume of Vital Statistics on Congress, which accounts for everything from our religious affiliations to the number of staff we hire and the amount of mail we send out, measured in the millions of pieces. In this vast array of statistics, some record-holders stand out from the others. These senatorial Ty Cobbs and Babe Ruths have set standards of longevity and accomplishment that we know will take generations before they are surpassed, if ever.

On August 15, 1974, the Senate paid tribute to one of its champions, Montana's Mike Mansfield, on the 225th day of his 13th year as Senate Democratic Leader. On that occasion he passed the record held by Arkansas' Joseph T. Robinson, who served as Democratic leader from 1924 through 1937. Unlike Robinson, who had spent nine years as minority leader and four as majority leader, Mike Mansfield served only as Majority Leader. Indeed, when he retired in January 1977, he had spent the entire sixteen years of his leadership in the majority. By contrast, the Senate has had three majority leaders in the ten years since Senator Mansfield departed. If this were not a grand enough statistic to make the Guinness Book of Records, our former colleague has gone on to set another record as the longest serving American ambassador to Japan, a post he has held in both the Carter and Reagan administrations and which he continues to hold.

Mr. President, these statistics are not oddities to be dealt with lightly. They are the measure of a remarkable man. They reflect his lifelong commitment to public service, his persistence and endurance, and an abiding bipartisan respect for his wisdom and ability. The purpose of these remarks, in my continuing series of addresses on the history of the United States Senate, is to discuss Mike Mansfield's leadership. His service was so long, and covered an era so turbulent, that I plan to divide my discussion into two sections, one on the domestic policy issues and one on the foreign policy issues of the "Mansfield Senate." While some may consider this period more as one of current events than history, let me add one additional, startling statistic: sixty-three of the present one hundred members of the United States Senate came here after Mike Mansfield retired. It is to those sixty-three in particular that I direct my remarks today, as well to those who will read the history of the United States Senate in the years and decades and centuries to come.

Mike Mansfield and Montana are so synonymous that it is hard to believe he was not born on some windswept prairie or in a bustling mining town, but in Greenwich Village, New York, on March 16, 1903. "I was born of immigrants in New York City," he once recalled, "among immigrants, drawn from everywhere in the world. They had one thing in common: it was a belief in the promise of America." When Mike was three years old, his mother died, and his father sent the child to Great Falls, Montana, to live with an aunt and uncle. "From the age of three, my home was a general store in Montana," Mike said. "The people who came and went were miners, farmers and cowpunchers. They were prospectors, railroaders and teachers. They came from the South and from the Middle West. They were free souls who drifted or were driven to seek a new life on the Western frontier."

Before finishing the eighth grade, Mike Mansfield dropped out of school to begin an odyssey that took him around the world, and deep into the mines of Montana. Mike was fourteen when America entered World War I. Being patriotic, although underage, he ran away from home and enlisted in the United States Navy. For a man who likes to set records, it should perhaps not be too surprising that after service in the Navy, from 1918 to 1919, Mike went on to enlist in the Army, where he served from 1919 to 1920, and then in the Marine Corps, from 1920 to 1922. Mike Mansfield has been the only United States Senator to serve in these three branches of the military—and if there had been an Air Force in those days, he probably would have joined it as well! "The Army gave me the rank of private," he said; "the Navy, seaman 2d class; and the Marine Corps, P.F.C. In the training camps in the United States, on the North Atlantic, in barracks in the Philippines and China—I served with enlisted men from everywhere in the nation." [1]

After seeing the world, Mike returned to Montana as a mucker (or a shoveler) in the copper fields of Butte. When he was twenty-four, he enrolled in the Montana School of Mines to become a mining engineer. There he met and fell in love with Maureen Hayes. Maureen was a school teacher, and Mike was an eighth-grade dropout. She recognized his intelligence and wanted him to achieve his full potential. No matter how much he might have learned as the world traveler he was, she refused to marry him until he got a formal education. So Mike set out to win her hand by finishing high school and going to college. They married while he was a student at Montana State University. "It was my wife who really got me started, who pushed me, and thank the Lord she did," Mike said. He added that while his heroes were Montana Senator Tom Walsh and Western artist Charlie Russell, his heroine was his wife.[2]

Mike got his bachelor of arts degree in 1933, and set out to teach high school, but two Montana towns refused to hire him because he was a Roman Catholic—how deep grew the roots of religious intolerance in those days! Maureen, however, cashed in her life insurance policy to help her husband go back to Montana State University. There, in 1934, he earned his masters degree and joined the faculty as a professor of Latin American and Far Eastern history and political science. But the classroom could not hold him. Politics—Democratic politics—was in his blood. The Democratic party, he said, was "woven into all the years of my life," in the military, in the mining towns, and on campus.[3] So, it followed that the young professor, intrigued by politics; motivated by a concern for Montana, the nation and the world; and encouraged by his wife; would run for office as a Democrat. He lost a bid for nomination to Congress in 1940, running third in a three-man race. But in 1942, using his Montana State University students as his political organization, Mike Mansfield won the Democratic nomination and the election for a seat in the United States House of Representatives from the Western Montana district.

Interestingly enough, Mike replaced Representative Jeannette Rankin, whom the state of Montana recently memorialized with a statue in the U.S. Capitol Building. A Republican, Miss Rankin was a pacifist who had won notoriety by casting the sole vote in Congress against American entry into World War II. In this act she was consistent, for during her first term in the House she had opposed entry into the First World War. Her vote against the Second World War—when Pearl Harbor had just been attacked—was so unpopular that Miss Rankin stood no chance of reelection. Although she did not run in 1942, voters showed their disapproval of their Republican isolationist representative by choosing as her successor a Democratic internationalist with a military record in three branches of the armed forces. For all their differences, however, in later years, both Mike Mansfield and Jeannette Rankin found themselves in common opposition to the war in Vietnam—he as Senate Majority Leader, growing steadily disenchanted with the war; she as a peace activist, marching with protest groups in the streets.

The House Democratic leadership, under Speaker Sam Rayburn, was delighted to have the new Western moderate Democrat, elected at a time when Republican and conservative margins were increasing.

I am speaking of the House leadership. They rewarded him with an appropriate committee assignment on the House Foreign Affairs Committee, where he ranked in seniority just below another promising young Democrat elected in 1942, J. William Fulbright of Arkansas. That same class also included future senators J. Glenn Beall and Frank Barrett, future Secretary of State Christian Herter, and such later influential House members as Brooks Hays, Chet Holifield, Walter Judd, and Ray Madden. Other House members whom Mansfield first met in the 78th Congress, and with whom he would still be working decades later in the Senate, included Democrats Lyndon Johnson, Clinton Anderson, Warren Magnuson, Henry Jackson, Jennings Randolph, John Sparkman, Albert Gore, Sr., Estes Kefauver, Mike Monroney, and Republicans Everett Dirksen, Hugh Scott, and Margaret Chase Smith.

As one of the few members of the House of Representatives with an extensive knowledge of Far Eastern affairs, Congressman Mansfield came to the attention of President Franklin D. Roosevelt. Just after Mike finished his freshman term in the House, President Roosevelt sent him on a confidential mission to China, to inspect conditions there. Mike had first visited China as a Marine Private First Class in the 1920's. When he arrived on the Chinese Mainland in 1944, he found conditions there in turmoil. On one hand, the Chinese were waging war against Japan; on the other, they were engaged in a civil struggle between Nationalists under Chiang Kai-shek and Communists under Mao Tse-tung. Although Mansfield endorsed Chiang as "the one man who can make Chinese unity and independence a reality," he reported widespread disunity and dissatisfaction with the Nationalists. Reflecting the opinions of China specialists at the time, he also described the Communists as "more agrarian reformers than revolutionaries." This assessment may have accurately reflected the situation in the winter of 1944, but events changed much more rapidly than anyone anticipated. By 1949, Chiang's government had collapsed and the Chinese Communists had seized control. In the angry and bewildered debate over "Who Lost China?" Mansfield came in for fire for his report, and his race for the Senate in 1952 led to a smear campaign which labeled him "China Mike."

No political innocent, Mike did not absorb himself in foreign policy to the exclusion of his constituents. He went to the Far East armed with information on the location of every Montana serviceman in the region. John Kamps, later an Associated Press reporter on Capitol Hill, remembered returning one day to his camp in the jungles of Burma to find a note from Congressman Mansfield, who had ridden ten miles in a jeep to visit him. Montana may be a big state in geographic size—the fourth largest in the nation—but it has a small population, among whom word quickly spreads, and such diligent attention to constituents does not go unnoticed.[4]

Congressman Mansfield's support of the Roosevelt and Truman foreign policies, and his increasingly respected voice in the House of Representatives, led President Truman in 1949 to offer him the post of Assistant Secretary of State for Public Affairs. Mansfield declined the offer. He preferred to remain in Congress and had his ambition set on the Senate. In 1952, Republican Senator Zales Ecton was standing for reelection after a not particularly distinguished freshman term. Ecton was the first Republican elected to the Senate from Montana since 1913, and Mansfield considered him vulnerable. But the race was hard and bitter. Eisenhower's presidential campaign provided broad coattails for Republican candidates. Senator Joseph McCarthy also came to Montana to campaign for Ecton. In his typically irresponsible fashion, McCarthy accused Mansfield of being a Communist "dupe." Despite these tactics, Mike Mansfield won the election and entered the 83rd Congress as United States Senator from Montana. (Others in the Class of 1952 included John F. Kennedy, Henry Jackson, Albert Gore, Sr., Stuart Symington, John Sherman Cooper, and Barry Goldwater.)

The Senate Democratic leadership, under the command of the new Democratic leader Lyndon Johnson, recognized Mansfield's talents and appointed the freshman senator to the Foreign Relations Committee. Throughout most of the 1950's, Mansfield devoted himself primarily to foreign policy issues, about which I will have more to say at a later time. During this period, he established a reputation as a quiet, hardworking, thoughtful senator—a man of honor and integrity. After the 1956 election, when Democratic Whip Earle Clements was defeated, Majority Leader Johnson selected Mansfield as his new whip, unlike the way the whips have been selected in recent years when the whips have been selected by vote of the Democratic Conference. But at that time, the majority leader then, Lyndon Johnson, selected the Democratic whip.

Reporters Rowland Evans and Robert Novak have written that Johnson really wanted Florida Senator George Smathers for the post of whip, but that Democratic liberals objected to Smathers. Conservatives would not accept Johnson's next choice, Hubert Humphrey. Mansfield, as a moderate, appealed to both sides.[5]

There were some who said Johnson picked a whip whom he knew would never challenge his leadership, and that could very well be true. Certainly Johnson and Mansfield employed very different styles of Senate leadership, and it would be hard to find two different men. Johnson was loud; Mansfield quiet. Johnson was impatient, Mansfield had infinite patience. Johnson twisted arms, Mansfield took a low-key, conciliatory approach. Johnson wanted it known that he was totally in charge; Mansfield believed he was simply one among equals and treated all other senators as equals. Johnson in fact made little use of either Clements or Mansfield as whips, preferring to use party secretary Bobby Baker to count heads and control the flow of business on the floor. Former Assistant Secretary of the Senate Darrell St. Claire recalled how during Johnson absences "Again and again Mike Mansfield would try austerely to rise and be acting leader . . . and find he had no troops behind him because Bobby was circulating around the back of the Democratic side saying, 'Johnson wants this kept on the burner for a while.' "[6]

In 1960, Lyndon Johnson won election as vice president, and in January 1961, the Democratic conference selected Mike Mansfield to succeed him as Majority Leader, with Hubert Humphrey as Whip. To Bobby Baker's surprise, Mansfield asked him to stay on as Democratic Secretary. Although they had had their differences, and Mansfield had every right to feel resentful towards Baker, he recognized his talents for counting heads and keeping track of every detail, assignments Mansfield was more than happy to delegate. And I can vouch for his penchant for delegating such details myself, having worked as secretary to the Democratic Conference under Mike Mansfield for 4 years and then as majority whip under Mr. Mansfield for 6 years.

"Working for Mike Mansfield, compared to working for Lyndon Johnson, was like lolling on the beach as opposed to picking for cotton," Bobby Baker later recalled. "I truly liked Senator Mansfield. He was a decent, gentle, kind man, and keenly intelligent. Sometimes, however, I missed the fiery performances and gusto provided by Lyndon Johnson." Mansfield, Baker complained, would frequently disappear into his office to meditate. Because the new majority leader seemed to lack aggression in his political pursuits, Baker and Senator Robert Kerr, chairman of the Finance Committee, moved to fill what they saw as a political vacuum. "We wheeled and dealed while Senator Mansfield sat alone in a favorite hideway office, puffing his pipe and reading book after book."[7]

There were many who wondered how the Senate could ever operate without Lyndon Johnson at its helm—including Lyndon Johnson himself. He had been a part of Washington long enough not to expect much influence in his new post, nor did he anticipate much of a role in the executive branch. Instead, Johnson hoped to keep his hand in the Senate's leadership as a lobbyist for the Kennedy administration's legislative program. He even asked to keep the old office which was his as majority leader, which the press had dubbed the "Taj Mahal." Mansfield turned down the room request, but agreed to make a motion that Johnson be permitted to continue presiding over the Democratic Conference after he became vice president. Upon hearing this motion, after a moment of stunned silence, the Conference erupted into furor. Senators Joe Clark, Albert Gore, Sr., Clinton Anderson, Olin Johnston, and A. Willis Robertson, certainly representing a mixed bag of political ideology and influence, expressed outrage over this violation of the separation of powers. Johnson's sometimes heavy-handed tactics as majority leader apparently had built up much steam in the Senate, and Mansfield's motion finally blew off the lid.

Although the conference allowed Johnson to preside on that occasion the vocal opposition from old friends had wounded his pride, and he rarely returned to conference meetings.[8]

Mike Mansfield stepped into the Senate leadership at the start of the administration of his friend and former Senate colleague, John F. Kennedy. From all accounts, Kennedy deeply admired Mansfield. Arthur Schlesinger, Jr., wrote that Kennedy "particularly liked and valued Mike Mansfield, approved of Mansfield's announced principles of 'courtesy, self-restraint, and accommodation' and considered him underrated because he did his job with so little self-advertisement and fanfare." Theodore Sorenson recorded that Kennedy sometimes "was frustrated by what he felt were Mansfield's excessive pessimism, caution and delays. But in view of his consistent string of successes in the Senate, he was deeply appreciative of Mansfield's loyalty and labors, held him in close personal affection, and felt that no Senate leader those years could have done better in the long run."[9]

The Democrats had strong majorities in both houses of the 87th Congress—65 to 35 in the Senate, 262 to 174 in the House. But these numbers hid the ideological coalitions between conservatives from both parties opposed to Kennedy's liberal programs. Elected with an agenda that included civil rights legislation, medical care for the elderly, improvements in housing and education, and a desire to get the country economically moving again, Kennedy found that he could not command automatic majorities in either house, or even count on the support of committee chairmen from his own party. The administration suffered embarrassing defeats in its farm legislation, and on Medicare. Civil rights seemed bottled up in committee, and faced a probable filibuster on the Senate floor. In 1963, the respected political scientist James MacGregor Burns published a book, The Deadlock of Democracy, in which he despaired that any dynamic new programs could emerge from the ideologically divided and conservatively entrenched Congress.[10]

Given these frustrations to the Kennedy program, there were many who thought a majority leader like Lyndon Johnson could muscle recalcitrant senators into line. But this was not Mansfield's style. John G. Stewart, who served as special assistant to Democratic Whip Hubert Humphrey, published a revealing comparison of Johnson and Mansfield's methods of leadership. "Temperamentally unsuited to operate in the style of Lyndon Johnson, Mansfield based his leadership strategy on an appeal to the senatorial interests of institutional pride and personal participation, interests seemingly far removed from Johnson's harsh world of political reality," Stewart wrote. "As one observer remarked, 'Mansfield seemed to believe that belovedness would become the guiding force in the Senate.' " As Mike himself said at the end of his sixteen years as majority leader: "I don't collect any IOU's. I don't do any special favors. I try to treat all senators alike, and I think that's the best way to operate in the long run, because that way you maintain their respect and confidence. And that's what the ball game is all about."[11]

There is no question that the Senate changed dramatically between 1953 when Mike Mansfield arrived and 1977 when he left. And much of that change was attributable to his style of leadership. As political scientist Robert Peabody has written: "From the early 1950's to the mid-1970's, the Senate changed from a largely Southern-dominated, senior-controlled, committee centralized institution . . . to a relatively decentralized, much a more egalitarian institution characterized by democratized leadership and greatly expanded role for its junior members." In some ways, Lyndon Johnson started this ball rolling with his appointment of new senators to prestigious committees. But where Johnson had dominated the Policy and Steering committees and sought to make or influence all committee appointments, Mansfield allowed these committees fairly free reign, and permitted contested committee assignments to be decided by secret ballot. Under Mansfield, the Democratic Conference met more frequently than it had under Johnson, and acted more as a forum for party discussion. Mansfield encouraged committee chairmen and other senators to manage their own bills on the floor and take public credit for their passage. During his leadership, the number of subcommittees expanded, and with it the number of staff, giving freshmen senators more of a chance to be heard and to influence legislation.[12]

Not everyone appreciated Senator Mansfield's passive style. In a debate over President Kennedy's foreign aid bill in 1963, Senator Thomas J. Dodd of Connecticut, argued that the Senate should be working harder and for longer hours. "Mike Mansfield is a gentleman," said Senator Dodd. "But I worry about his leadership . . . . He must say 'No' at times. He must say 'Yes' at times." Such criticism disturbed Senator Mansfield, and one Friday in November 1963, he asked the Senate for unanimous consent that he be recognized the following Monday morning to address the Senate on the subject of leadership, in order to set his critics straight. But that Friday was November 22, the day President Kennedy was shot. The death of the President had a profound affect on Senator Mansfield, who had lost a friend as well as a leader. We still recall his moving eulogy to the President, with its haunting refrain: "And so she took her ring from her finger and placed it in his hands."[13] In the aftermath of those tragic days, Senator Mansfield said he had no heart to read his remarks about Senate leadership and instead inserted them in the record. As a result, the statement did not get the attention it deserved. In many ways it expresses the Mansfield credo of leadership.

"Mr. President, some days ago blunt words were said on the floor of the Senate," he began. "They dealt in critical fashion with the quality of the majority leadership and the minority opposition." Several senators had found the performance of the Senate wanting, and had raised a hue and cry that had been further magnified in the press. "There is reference, to be sure, to time-wasting, to laziness, to absenteeism, to standing still, and so forth. But who are the timewasters in the Senate, Mr. President? Who is lazy? Who is an absentee? Each Member can make his own judgment of his individual performance. I make no apologies for mine. Nor will I sit in judgment on any other Member."

The Senate was not more or less efficient, he maintained because it worked from 9 to 5 or around the clock. "It will be of no avail to install a time-clock at the entrance to the Chamber for Senators to punch when they enter or leave the floor." And he was proud of the Senate's record of productivity under his leadership, despite the many important bills still waiting for consideration. "It is not the record of the majority leader or the minority leader," Mansfield said. "It is the Senate's record and as the Senator from Montana, I, for one, will not make light of these achievements in the first two years of the Kennedy administration. And the achievement is no less because the 87th Congress did not meet at all hours of the night, because it rarely titillated the galleries or because it failed to impress the visiting newsmen and columnists."

Turning to the criticism of his personal style of leadership, Mansfield said: "Of late, Mr. President, the descriptions of the majority leader . . . have ranged from a benign Mr. Chips, to glamourless, to a tragic mistake . . . It is true, Mr. President, that I have taught school, although I cannot claim either the tenderness, the understanding, or the perception of Mr. Chips for his charges. I confess freely to a lack of glamour. As for being a tragic mistake, if that means, Mr. President, that I am neither a circus ringmaster, the master of ceremonies of a Senate night club, a tamer of Senate lions, or a wheeler and dealer, then I must accept, too, that title . . . But so long as I have this responsibility, it will be discharged to the best of my ability by me as I am. I would not, ever if I could, presume to a toughmindedness which, with all due respects to those who use this cliche, I have always had difficulty in distinguishing from soft-heartedness or simplemindedness. I shall not don any Mandarin's robe or any skin other than that to which I am accustomed in order that I may look like a majority leader or sound like a majority leader—however a majority leader is supposed to look or sound. I am what I am and no title, political facelifter, or imagemaker can alter it."

"Within this body," he concluded, "I believe that every Member ought to be equal in fact, no less than in theory, that they have a primary responsibility to the people whom they represent to face the legislative issues of the Nation. And to the extent that the Senate may be adequate in this connection, the remedy lies not, in the seeking of shortcuts, not in the cracking of nonexistent whips, not in wheeling and dealing, but in an honest facing of the situation and a resolution of it by the Senate itself, by accommodation, by respect for one another, by mutual restraint and, as necessary, adjustments in the procedures of this body." [14]

Whether one agreed or disagreed with Mike Mansfield's theories of leadership, there was no question of his straightforwardness in presenting and defending his position. In the years after inserting these remarks in the RECORD, Senator Mansfield never deviated from them.

One of the cornerstones of Mansfield's leadership strategies was that of developing good relations with the Republican minority leader, Everett McKinley Dirksen. Mansfield courted Dirksen, played straight and fair with him, and as a result won his cooperation at critical times in the legislative process. Without Dirksen's support, it is doubtful that the Senate would have ratified the Nuclear Test Ban Treaty in 1963, one of the most important treaties of the post-World War II era. Similarly, Dirksen played a pivotal role in passage of the Civil Rights bill of 1964. President Kennedy had proposed this legislation in June 1963, but it languished in committee. In his first address to Congress following Kennedy's death, President Johnson made the Civil Rights bill a top priority. As he faced election in his own right in 1964, Johnson knew that passage of the bill would be seen as a major test of his administration. But for all the influence Johnson could exert over legislation, not he but Mike Mansfield was Senate majority leader.

In their book, The Longest Debate: A Legislative History of the 1964 Civil Rights Act, former Representative Charles Whalen and his wife Barbara point out that Mansfield decided not to become involved in the day-to-day discussions and manuevering over the bill, as a way of preserving his negotiating status. But, they write, "in his own strong and deliberate way, he made two decisions that vitally affected the fate" of the Civil Rights bill. One was to appoint his Whip, Hubert Humphrey, as floor manager. The second was to reject President Johnson's plan to try to wear out filibustering Southern senators by enforcing Rule XIX, which limited each senator to two speeches during one "legislative day." Johnson wanted to keep the Senate in session day and night to wear down the opposition. But Mansfield decided that the best strategy was to go for cloture, and he began lining up the necessary 67 votes (at that time two-thirds of the Senate was needed to invoke cloture). This was the reason why Everett Dirksen was so vital to this strategy. Mansfield needed enough Republican votes to compensate for the Democrats who opposed the bill—and a few others who opposed cloture under any circumstances.

I was one of those who had never voted for cloture up to that time, and I had also opposed cloture under any circumstances.

Richard Russell, leading the opposition forces, also worked hard to entice Dirksen to his side, but in the end, Mansfield's long courtship of the Republican leader won him over. On June 10, 1964, the Senate voted 71 to 29, four votes more than the necessary two-thirds margin, to invoke cloture on the filibuster against the Civil Rights bill. Those 71 votes included 27 Republicans. A little over a week later, the same coalition passed the historic Civil Rights Act by a vote of 73 of 27.[15]

Mr. President, this capsule summary does not do justice to the long, involved and often passionate struggle over the Civil Rights Act of 1964, but the point I wish to make is that while Dirksen had his face on the cover of Time magazine, and Humphrey received kudos from the liberal community for floor managing the bill, and Johnson earned national praise for enactment of this landmark legislation, Mike Mansfield's quiet, behind-the-scenes strategies and efforts also deserved some of the credit for the victory.

The year 1964 belonged to Lyndon Johnson, and his sweeping victory in the presidential election that year, against our colleague BARRY GOLDWATER, carried along with him vastly expanded Democratic majorities in both houses of Congress. The election gave Democrats the widest margin of control in Congress since the depths of the Great Depression, thirty years earlier. In the House there were 295 Democrats to 140 Republicans—a gain of 38 seats; and in the Senate there were 68 Democrats to 32 Republicans—a gain of two seats. Although the increase in Senate Democrats was not as numerically significant as in the House, it was still a significant victory, for it meant the reelection of the predominantly liberal freshmen of the "Class of '58," who would direct much of the legislative explosion of the "Great Society" years.

Lyndon Johnson gave the title "Great Society" to his program, which represented Democratic aspirations for a fairer, more equitable, and economically secure nation. Reform legislation which had been bottled up in committees, stymied by the conservative House Rules Committee, and seemingly immobile during the Eisenhower and Kennedy years, suddenly burst forth into the floor and was passed with breathtaking speed. Stewart McClure, chief clerk of the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee, from which much of the Great Society's legislation originated, in his oral history described the change: "Lyndon . . . came in like a tiger, and everything that had been dormant and stuck in conference or committee went woosh, like a great reverse whirlpool spinning it out. We passed everything within the next year or two." Recalling these events years later, McClure was still amazed: "I had never seen so much activity around here!" he said. "We passed major bills every week. It was unbelievable. Just a great dam broke. Everything but national health insurance, everything that had been piled up since Truman plus of lot of new stuff. It was fun!" [16]

A shining example was the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965. For years education bills had bogged down over the issue of aid to parochial schools, and the issue of separation of church and state. The Johnson administration proposed a new approach—from an idea developed by the staff of the Senate Labor Committee. As Stewart McClure recalled, the committee had just been dealing with the issue of impacted aid—that is federal aid to school districts to compensate for the children of military personnel stationed there, but who paid no local taxes. Charles Lee of the committee staff commented on what a good idea impacted aid was, and then connected it to federal aid to education in general. As McClure explained it: "A child going to a poor school in a poor district should be considered suffering a national impact caused by the failure of the whole society to upgrade his disadvantaged area." To this they added the entitlement idea behind the GI bill. "We thought that poor children living in disadvantaged areas should be entitled, as were veterans, to special attention and assistance to help them climb out of the hole in which they had been placed by the entire society."

The staff took their plan to Senator Wayne Morse, chairman of the education subcommittee, who immediately recognized its value. Since the aid went to the children in poor areas, rather than to their schools, it avoided the whole church-state controversy. Senator Morse presented the concept to the Johnson administration, which embraced it warmly and then sold it to the education community. As McClure described it: "I think the ground was ready and the populace was prepared / for federal aid to education/, but the Congress was not, until Lyndon, using the Kennedy martyrdom, so to speak, raised the torch and cracked the whip and made the phone calls." The Education bill, stymied for so long, now moved so quickly, as the Congressional Quarterly observed, that "the word was passed to approve the bill and worry about perfecting details later." In January the President requested the bill; by March 26, the House had passed it. Two weeks later the Senate committee reported it without amendment, and three days after that the Senate voted 73 to 18 to make it law. Significantly, the majority leader played no appreciable public role in passing this landmark legislation. As McClure recalled: "In terms of the operation of the Senate you didn't even know he was around. . . . I don't recall Mansfield's intervening in anything at any time." But he added: "Nor did he have to, much." [17]

Mr. President, the Congress enacted so many major pieces of legislation during that period that I cannot tell the story of each individually. Let me just list in chronological order the domestic legislative achievements of the Johnson administration and the "Mansfield Senate" in the years from 1964 to 1966. Beginning in February of 1964, there was the Tax Reduction Act, which reduced both personal and corporate income taxes. In April, came the Economic Opportunity Act, which embodied President Johnson's call for a War on Poverty. This Act created the Office of Economic Opportunity, the Job Corps, and VISTA (Volunteers in Service to America), to fight against illiteracy, unemployment, and inadequate public services for the poor. In July the Civil Rights Act was passed. That same month also saw passage of the Urban Mass Transportation Act. In September we enacted the Wilderness Act.[18]

April 1965, saw passage of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act. In July, Medicare was enacted. In August came the Voting Rights Act, and the Omnibus Housing Act. In September we created the Department of Housing and Urban Development. Also in September the National Endowments for the Arts and Humanities were established. In October the Water Quality Act, the Air Quality Act, the Higher Education Act, and the Immigration Act all became law. The year 1966 saw passage of the Veterans' Educational Benefits in March. The National Traffic and Motor Vehicle Safety Act was passed in September. Also in September, Congress raised the minimum wage, extending wage, extending coverage to restaurant and retail workers, and farm workers previously excluded from minimum wage requirements. In October we created the Department of Transportation. In November the Clean Water Restoration Act passed, as did the Model Cities bill.

By any standard, this was the greatest legislative record of any Congress with the exception of the First Hundred Days of the New Deal. Lyndon Johnson, who had begun his political career during the Franklin Roosevelt years, had donned the mantle of his hero. Now, in recent years it has become fashionable for critics to dismiss much of the Great Society as "too much, too soon," to charge that the Great Society programs did not amount to all that Johnson has promised, and to imply that Johnson's programs has been undone. It is true that for a variety of reasons Johnson never again achieved the legislative momemtum he enjoyed in 1965. It is also true that he exagerated and oversold many of his programs, and perhaps raised hopes too high for quick solution of long and entrenched social programs. But from this list of legislation which I have just enumerated—and there is more—I can only conclude that Johnson's Great Society legislation had a lasting impact on American society, from health to environment and equal opportunity. Also in reading through this list, it is striking how much of the Great Society's legislation remains even today.

Despite the efforts of succeeding administrations to dismantle the Great Society, Medicare survives, as do the departments of Transportation and Housing and Urban Development and the many programs they administer. The National Endowments for the Arts and Humanities still do their good work in promoting our cultural resources. The Federal Government still aids education, promotes traffic safety, and protects the environment. We have continued and strengthened the Civil Rights Act and Voting Rights Act. In addition, we have, during the current administration, enacted new tax cuts in the spirit of the tax reduction passed during the Johnson administration. The work of the Johnson administration, and of Congress, in the 1960's was not in vain. Like Social Security and other reforms of the 1930's, its legacy has become entrenched in our way of life.

During all this legislative activity, Mike Mansfield presided, seemingly passive, puffing on his pipe, behaving no differently in the leadership than he had during the previous, frustrating years of inactivity. He still had his critics, but by now many had come to appreciate his purpose, his style and his contributions. As Senator Edmund Muskie reminded us of the majority leader: "We must never forget that the legislative accomplishments of these years were also his accomplishments." [19]

For his own part, Senator Mansfield willingly conceded the spotlight and shared the credit for these accomplishments with his colleagues. When asked by the press about his proudest accomplishments, the bill that he delighted in citing was not one of the monumental Great Society laws, but the Twenty-Sixth Amendment to the Constitution, ratified in 1971, which gave eighteen-year-olds the right to vote. The idea had gained popularity during the Vietnam War, when so many teenage young men were inducted into the armed services. If one was old enough to die for his country, the reasoning went, he was old enough to vote. Several senators had considered the idea, but it seemed to be getting nowhere. The Senator Warren Magnuson raised the issue with Mike Mansfield. Magnuson recalled having proposed the eighteen-year-old voting level while he served in the state legislature in the State of Washington back in 1933, and he still thought it a good idea. "Suppose you introduce the amendment," Magnuson suggested. Mansfield thought it over and agreed. With his prestige behind it, the amendment cleared the Senate and House by wide margins, and was quickly ratified by the States. It was an appropriate act by a man whose first political organization consisted of the students from his university classes.[20]

After listing the eighteen-year-old-vote as his proudest accomplishment,

Mansfield cited three other items: his role in initiating the Watergate investigation, his part in initiating the Senate inquiry into the activities of American intelligence agencies (chaired by Senator Frank Church), and finally, the "evolution, unpublicized, in the conduct of the Senate." He repeated to the reporter his by now familiar refrain: "All senators are equal in my opinion . . . there are no superstar senators, there are no second-rate senators, no senators who should spend months or years saying nothing, while their elders speak out on any and all subjects. There is no club in the Senate any more." [21] This was the way Mike Mansfield ran the Senate. No one ever accused him of twisting a single arm, of going back on his word, of using unfair tactics. He held the Senate up to its full responsibilities, and expected it to behave properly by itself. This philosophy carried over even to the election of other party leaders. Senator Mansfield never intervened in the Democratic Conference elections, never endorsed one candidate over another. During his years as majority leader the Conference elected four Whips: Hubert Humphrey in 1961, Russell Long in 1965, Edward Kennedy in 1969, and Robert C. Byrd in 1971. In none of those elections, even when incumbents were challenged, did Senator Mansfield take sides.

Mr. President, in future addresses I will talk about other aspects of the Senate during the years in which Mike Mansfield served as majority leader, about the wrenching Vietnam war years, about the traumatic Watergate period. For now however, let me conclude my focus on Mike Mansfield's career in the Senate with a mention of his retirement. Among his favorite mementoes was a huge photograph from 1962 showing congressional leaders milling aimlessly around the White House rose garden, while Senator Mansfield can be seen walking resolutely away from the group. On the photograph, President Kennedy inscribed: "To Mike, who knows when to stay and when to go." [22] After ten years in the House and twenty-four in the Senate, he decided it was time to go. "It is not a long time," he said, "but it is time enough." The Mike Mansfield who left was remarkably unchanged from the much younger man who had arrived years before. His administrative assistant, Peggy DeMichele, who had worked for him for many years, testified that he had "stayed the same." She commented that "There are so many little things he has done for the people in his state, things no one has ever heard about and he doesn't want anyone to know about. He has always tried to let others take the credit. Time after time he has worked hard for some project, and when the ribbon cutting time came he let others hold the scissors." [23]

On the last day that the Senate was in session during his term, his colleagues paid him special tribute. I was pleased to introduce Senate Resolution 551, designating room S-207 in the Capitol as the Mike Mansfield Room. I knew Senator Mansfield, out of his typical modesty, would have objected when the resolution was introduced, so I waited until he was off the floor in the cloakroom. So the room was named, and in it a large portrait of Mike, pipe in hand, watches down upon us today, as it will upon Senators in the future.

Mr. President, during that last tribute to Senator Mansfield, in September 1976, I said these words: "Each Member of the Senate, I believe, looks forward to the culmination of his years of service here with the hope that his actions and decisions have advanced the Nation toward the realization of the ideals of our American heritage. Each of us wants to help the American dream to acquire a more evident reality. Mike Mansfield has not been disappointed in these aspirations during his years in the Senate. In an historian's terms, he will deserve more than a footnote in the annals of the Congress; he has already warranted a full chapter in any such account." [24]

Mr. President, I am a man of my word. With this address I have made Senator Mansfield a full chapter in my history of the United States Senate. He deserves no less.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert at the close of my remarks Notes for Mike Mansfield's Senate.

There being no objection, the notes were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEATH OF ROLAND BERARDO

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, a very real community leader in Rhode Island who was also an old and dear friend, Roland Berardo, died shortly before the recent congressional recess.

Roland Berardo was a leading citizen of Westerly, RI, whom I knew, worked with and admired for many years. He was a warm and caring person who inspired respect and affection among all who met and worked with him. These qualities were well expressed in a fine tribute to Roland Berardo by Henry Nardone of Westerly. I ask that this tribute as it appeared in the Westerly Sun be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

I want to take this opportunity also to express my own sense of sadness and loss at the departure of Roland Berardo.

There being no objection, the tribute was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Westerly Sun, Aug. 13, 1986]

A TRIBUTE TO ROLAND A.J. BERARDO

July 30, 1986. Roland Berardo was a good man. This large gathering is a tribute to Roland and an outward demonstration to his family of the high regard in which he is held by his many friends.

Our hearts go out to you, Mariette and Stephen, and to Roland's brothers and sisters. We share your great loss and are saddened—not because Roland has gone on but because we remain without him—and we shall miss him.

But we shall also remember him. We'll remember the kid from Dayton Street who started working as a young boy—not even in his teens—for Charlie Lem. Many Westerly students at R.I. State College got extra portions and indeed even free meals at the dinner in Wakefield—through Roland (and Charlie Lem—although unknown to him many times). I know, because I was one of those students.

Roland had an insatiable desire for education—and despite the adversities of a depression, a large family headed by a widowed mother, Roland resolved to complete high school in spite of interruptions to work. He continued on, encouraged by Emily, to complete college after serving in the Army during World War II.

During his successful and full career in the Foreign Service of his country—Roland never forgot his roots—his family—his friends and his home town. No matter where he went in the Foreign Service—no matter how lofty his position he always carried with him a little bit of Dayton Street—Charlie Lem—Sal Serra and the A&P Store—Westerly High School—the Town of Westerly and his family whom he loved so much.

On his retirement from the Foreign Service in 1971 he returned to Westerly much to the joy of his family and friends. How proud we all were of Roland and his accomplishments! We all felt that we shared in his successes and his family was justifiably proud and of course happy to have Rollie back home. Not many kids from Dayton Street rubbed shoulders and raised elbows with the great and near great people in the embassies of the world and with the powerful and important people of national government. It didn't change Roland—but we're sure that in some way, everyone who came in contact with him was affected.

Upon his retirement Roland embarked on a second and third career—always finding time for friends and family. Always participating in the affairs of his state and local government. Roland was always at the scene of action and leadership, always encouraging and helping others to do more and to do better. He was never at a loss for an opinion on almost any subject—and never at a loss of words to express his opinion. We can be sure that there is one good discussion going on up there right now—and Roland is in the middle of it!

A man's life is not measured by the material things he leaves behind but by the things he give to his fellow human beings while he was here. We are all a little better off for having known Roland. We may even be better people because of it. Roland will be remembered for his love of friends, family and country—for his faith in the goodness of God—and for his belief in the honor and dignity of his fellow man and for his pride and loyalty to his ethnic roots and heritage. We are saddened that we can no longer share his presence, but we are joyous that he no longer suffers and that he has gone on to his eternal reward.

Roland was a good husband—he was a good father and a good friend. Roland Berardo was a good man—Henry J. Nardone, Westerly, R.I.

WILLIAM BENNETT, SECRETARY OF EDUCATION

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, my colleagues have often heard me assert that the real strength and health of our Nation lies not in our weapons of destruction, and not in our machinery of construction, but in the education and character of our people. That is a belief that has consistently guided me in my efforts on behalf of education at the elementary, secondary, and post-secondary levels.

When William Bennett was asked by President Reagan to become Secretary of Education over 18 months ago, I strongly supported his nomination. I had worked with him during his tenure as Chairman of the National Endowment for the Humanities and was impressed with the commendable job he had done in that capacity. I saw in him the kind of person who could articulate the importance of both education and character to the strength and vitality of the American nation.

During his service as Secretary, I have retained my confidence in his abilities, even though I have disagreed with him from time to time. He is without question an intelligent and thoughtful person, and I have always found him to be one who is willing to listen and to consider seriously other points of view. I know him as an individual who cares deeply for this Nation and for the betterment of the education and character of our people.

In a sense, the Secretary of Education is our Nation's top educator. In that capacity, he has the opportunity to grab our attention and to focus it upon issues of critical national importance. Over time, Secretary Bennett has increasingly earned high marks for the issues to which he has drawn our attention, be it the importance of values in education, the need for greater discipline in our schools, the critical role of the family in education, or the dire threat which drug abuse poses to our young people.

Because of the faith I have in his abilities, I was very glad to read the "Bill Bennett Reconsidered" column by David Broder that appeared in the Wednesday, September 3, 1986, edition of the Washington Post. That article provides a very fair and balanced view of the Secretary and the work he is doing. It is an article that I would most certainly place on the recommended list for my colleagues and I ask unanimous consent that the text of that article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BILL BENNETT RECONSIDERED . . .

(By David S. Broder)

Back in February 1985, when William J. Bennett had barely been installed as the new secretary of education, I offered the unflattering judgment that he was a strong contender "for the dubious award as the James Watt of the second Reagan Cabinet."

Bennett earned that distinction by his rhetorical assault on the college student-loan program and his ardent defense of David Stockman's misconceived effort to slash its benefits. Bennett, the new boy trying to prove his credentials, said student aid was a boondoggle benefiting kids who wouldn't give up their cars, stereos and "three weeks at the beach" in order to pay their own tuition fees.

He followed up that opening salvo of demagoguery with a dozen other doozies, delivered to such "education groups" as Phyllis Schlafly's Eagle Forum, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and the Supreme Council of the Knights of Columbus. His performance conveyed the impression that this fellow was a lot less concerned with improving the quality of the nation's schools than with proving to President Reagan's most conservative followers that despite the misfortune of being a PhD, he shared their fervent faith in school prayer, tuition tax credits and American policy in Nicaragua.

I have seen a lot of Bennett lately—at education meetings, not right-wing rallies—and want to update the report and set the record straight. The man has settled down to talking seriously and sensibly about education issues and is beginning to make a significant contribution to the cause of better schools.

He's dropped the bombast in favor of direct, understandable suggestions. He's quit bashing people and is instead lending his support to worthy local, state and national efforts to upgrade education standards and attract better people into teaching.

A speech he made on Aug. 21 to some 6,000 Duval County, Fla., public-school teachers, assembled for the opening of schools in and around Jacksonville, is a good example of the new Bennett. "Given the job they do," he said, "teachers deseve as much praise and thanks and honor as . . . any . . . in our society."

He went on to define, in compelling language, the three tasks Americans expect their schools to perform, tasks so vital that "there is no one more important than teachers to the way of life and the system of government that Americans have chosen":

First, the nurturing of individual abilities to help each child achieve his or her potential, recognizing that "a fulfilled life" is the real definition of freedom.

Second, the transmission to a new generation of "the common culture," the heritage of ideas and experiences, of literature and history, which "define us as the kind of people we are."

And third, the inculcation by precept and example of the values of honesty, generosity, loyalty and self-discipline, which "ultimately determine the kind of nation we are."

Bennett has not stopped at exhortation and praise. Under his leadership, the Department of Education is applying itself to the only function it can really perform in a system where the financing and administration of schools and colleges are almost entirely in the hands of state and local authorities and private citizens.

That function is to serve as a clearinghouse for good ideas and a prod to useful actions. A while back, Bennett introduced a book called "What Works," a casebook of successful education efforts. A couple of days ago, he followed up with "First Lessons," a report on elementary education with further suggestions of how to shape up the schools. Soon there will be a handbook on what can be done to rid schools of drugs.

At recent meetings with governors and legislators, Bennett has put his prestige behind the effort, now taking shape, to improve the quality of teacher education, to set higher standards for their certification and to recognize schools to enhance both the professional opportunities and the accountability of those in charge. He is supporting much higher pay for superior performance in the classroom, though the Reagan administration has no plans to underwrite these salary improvements.

He does his part in these discussions with a becoming modesty, never failing to point out to those state and local officials, "You have schools. I don't." In corridor conversations he uses what has always been a quick mind to identify areas of agreement with other key players—superintendents, teachers' union officials, students—not to antagonize them.

There are parts of his prescription for education reform that I still oppose—but that's fine. There is plenty of room for experiment and disagreement. But the new Bennett strikes me as a man who is building bridges and using his rhetorical talents to keep the cause of education at the top of the public agenda, where it belongs.

CONSUMER PRODUCT SAFETY

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, recently, I read an article authored by Nancy Harvey Steorts, a former Chairman of the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission.

I believe her comments to be well informed and thought provoking. Accordingly, I commend it to the attention of my colleagues.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article be included in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMBINE FEDERAL REGULATION OF HEALTH AND SAFETY UNDER ONE AUTHORITY

(By Nancy Harvey Steorts)

As chairman of the Consumer Product Safety Commission duing the first term of the Reagan Administration, I feel the agency developed programs that were beneficial to the individual consumer of our nation and resulted in a safer marketplace.

Where does corporate responsibility begin and end? What in fact is the consumer's responsibility? And last buy certainly not least, what is the responsibility of government today?

Deregulation has brought about many pluses, but also some serious minuses. During my tenure as CPSC chairman, we worked closely with industry on the development of standards to protect and benefit the consumer and ultimately the manufacturer as well. Most of the standards improved during my chairmanship were developed with the cooperation of the affected industry and were brought into being on a voluntary basis.

I believe in the "carrot and stick approach" for a regulatory agency. The threat of potential regulation, for most industries, leads to their voluntary development of appropriate standards to ensure a safe product for the customer.

Unsafe products cannot and should not be in the marketplace. Under the Consumer Product Safety Act, any product that is deemed to be unsafe must be reported to the CPSC. The judgment is made after thorough investigation as to whether it will be recalled and/or banned. Some manufacturers fight removal or corrective action programs and spend thousands of dollars in costly legal fees to try to disprove adverse judgment and to avoid penalizing actions. Some are less overt; they deny responsibility and drag their feet. Then there were a few role models from industry who, without a doubt, have the interest and concern of their customers as a No. 1 priority.

Even with the latter, everything is not going to be perfect. There are times in any company's history when the best intentioned manufacturing process has turned out a flawed product. There are times when expected customers' use changes and unexpected problems and crises arise. There are also societal changes that can bring different circumstances and problems to the marketplace.

Over the past few weeks, consumers have once again been threatened and frightened by tampering with consumer products. One headache, one over-the-counter remedy, one death. How sad, how tragic. Tragic for the victim, the family, the manufacturer, the retailer and the free enterprise, over-the-counter system.

Let us examine how this most recent tragic scenario with Tylenol was handled. Johnson & Johnson, under the leadership of chairman James Burke, reacted expeditiously, effectively and wisely. As a management consultant, I find this corporation stands as a leader and the industry role model.

When Burke received the first notification of another potential problem—a possible Tylenol-related death—he did not bury his head, pass the buck, go to the lawyers, close out the press or have a subordinate face the consumer. Let us take a look at what I consider the crucial elements of Johnson & Johnson's responsible corporate behavior:

1. There was no moment of paralysis; there was an immediate take-charge attitude.

2. Concern and attention to detail was at all times apparent. There was gathering of information to see all of the pieces as well the whole.

3. There was two-way communication between the press and the public. The communication has been continuous, welcomed, responded to and appreciated.

4. There was a single spokesman, and one from the top. Burke has been accessible and forthright. (President David Clare was also available and in concert).

As a result Johnson & Johnson appeared united, strong, objective and personally compassionate. This is a corporation on the offensive not the defensive as they instigated their own investigations and cooperated with others. Their corporate objective was to maintain their company confidence—in their own product and to restore public confidence. Their final decision to recall all of their capsules, to scrap their production and in addition to create new emphasis and direction by promoting the elongated tablets called Caplets will cost Johnson & Johnson as much as $150 million. A small price, however, for credibility and future success.

What was their alternative? Was this the right decision for Johnson & Johnson? They thought so and consumers seem to agree. Should other companies follow suit? This is a tough decision and one that needs to be looked at realistically and individually.

We are not at a stage where, as consumers, we can no longer take our products for granted. We too have a responsibility. We must exert more care when purchasing products to be sure that they have not been tampered with—we need to spend a little longer choosing medication today. We may need to make more choices at the drug counter. If we want a certain brand of medicine, we may not be able to obtain it in the form we have become accustomed to buying; a new consumer attitude may be necessary.

What is the responsibility of government today? Government has the responsibility to serve as a catalyst—to bring about greater awareness of new major consumer issues. Protecting the health and safety of the consumer is an essential function of the federal government. I feel strongly that the time has come for a total review of how the government is addressing these concerns. Is the consumer confused by the various safety agencies and the issues they address? Is the industry confused as to which agency addresses which products?

Just three short years ago, when Johnson & Johnson developed their tamper-resistant packaging through the Food and Drug Administration, it was found (after the new packaging was completed and marketed)—that the tamper resistant packaging affected by $\frac{1}{1000}$ of an inch the child resistant closures that came under the jurisdiction of the CPSC. Confusion! Confusion—both for the manufacturer and for the consumer.

The time has come for a thorough review of the health and safety functions of the United States government. With budget constraints what they are and cutbacks being put into place, the time has come for a coordinated, well-focused health and safety agency that has total regulatory authority, not piecemeal as we have it today.

The time has come to make some changes. A concerned consumer and a concerned industry would be better served if all health and safety functions were put under one agency.

RECESS UNTIL 4:30 P.M.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, we are in the process of preparing resolutions with reference to Nick Daniloff, who is being illegally held by the Soviet Government, and also a resolution with reference to the Karachi hijacking incident and the senseless murder in Istanbul that Senators BYRD and myself will introduce but they are not prepared; they have not been cleared with Senators LUGAR and PELL. I guess it would probably take another 30 or 45 minutes to do that. In the meantime, I know the distinguished minority leader is about to meet with 20 mayors and I will be meeting with them following that. So I would ask unanimous consent that we stand in recess until 4:30 p.m.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 3:21 p.m., recessed until 4:30 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer [Mr. DURENBERGER].

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further proceedings under the quorum call be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

UNBALANCED U.S. ECONOMIC FORCES

Mr. MELCHER. The dominant and demanding unbalanced U.S. economic forces are the trade and Treasury deficits. If only one of these were in the red, one might bail out the other but the combination, each swimming in $170 billion of red ink, is the making of a national economic catastrophe with severe reverberations throughout the world.

When Kansans see cyclone funnels in the sky, they head for the cellar. President Reagan, an adopted Californian, where earthquakes are recorded after the fact, must be awaiting the reading of the Richter scale to measure the threatened economic disaster after it occurs.

Looming ominously over the U.S. economy is the failure of this administration and Congress to attend to these twin hazards. There is no Reagan trade policy and there is no Reagan deficit policy.

Consider trade first. Each year, the U.S. trade imbalance worsens. And it worsens even in basic industries where we are dominant and more competitive and efficient than other countries.

American agriculture excels in productivity, yet for the past 3 months the United States has imported more food than we export, which apparently does not alarm the White House. It is not that Americans are eating more imported foods Rather, it is that our food exports are dwindling dismally.

We have piles of surplus wheat on the ground for lack of storage in the Wheat Belt. Those piles will be matched in the Corn Belt when this fall's corn crop is harvested. We have spent over $1 billion this year buying up dairy cows to lessen surplus dairy commodities. The additional cows slaughtered drove down beef prices, aggravating cattle producers' losses, without appreciably reducing surplus milk. Government purchase of that surplus adds to the dried milk, butter, and cheese stored in Federal warehouses and along with the other surplus commodities adds to the Treasury deficit by some $2 billion annually just in storage costs.

With all this, the administration has not yet adopted the congressionally mandated agricultural trade policy signed into law by the President last December when he signed the 1985 farm bill. The bill, while permitting basic target price subsidies for farmers to encourage large U.S. agricultural production, set a series of legislated goals to increase agricultural exports. It recognized that those goals could only be met with various types of export promotion and enhancement programs which vary from country to country.

But the Reagan administration has been bogged down in conflicting interdepartmental failures. The Agriculture and State Department are intertwined with the Office of Management and Budget, and all are bogged down in a morass of redtape, each thwarting the other. The President has yet to appoint his Special Adviser on Agricultural Trade and Food Assistance, as mandated in the farm bill, to unsnarl this bureaucratic redtape. The loss of exports in agricultural products, down 40 percent from 1981, is both from commercial sales and from the Food-for-Peace trade building shipments to developing countries.

The strong dollar has declined dramatically and cannot be blamed for the lack of Food-for-Peace shipments of surplus commodities. What must be blamed is the lack of policy.

The second deficit, that is, the Federal deficit, can only be partially corrected by the mechanisms of Gramm-Rudman. Cutting Federal expenditures is a necessity but these cuts do not sufficiently reduce the deficit because of dwindling tax receipts. And revenues decline in part because of the trade imbalance with its consequent loss of jobs and loss of economic activity in the United States. Both deficits must be reduced simultaneously. Without a unified and strong effort to address both concurrently, the U.S. economic future is very grave. Gramm-Rudman is cumbersome at best and might not even produce deficit reduction unless the underlying U.S. economy improves.

In sum and substance, the Reagan administration has failed to address both of these deficits simultaneously. Likewise, Congress has failed. It is a big failure now and a disastrous one unless soon corrected.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PAY ADJUSTMENT FOR FEDERAL EMPLOYEES—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT RECEIVED DURING THE ADJOURNMENT—PM 166

Under the authority of the order of the Senate of January 3, 1985, the Secretary of the Senate, on August 28, 1986, during the adjournment of the Senate, received the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Governmental Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

Under the Federal Pay Comparability Act of 1970, the President is required to make a decision each year on what, if any, pay adjustment should be provided for Federal employees under the General Schedule and the related statutory pay systems.

My pay advisers have reported to me that an increase in pay rates averaging 23.79 percent, to be effective in October 1986, would be required under existing procedures to raise Federal pay rates to comparability with private sector pay rates for the same levels of work. However, the law also empowers me to prepare and transmit to the Congress an alternative plan for the pay adjustment if I consider such an alternative plan appropriate because of "national emergency or economic conditions affecting the general welfare." Furthermore, section 15201(a) of the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985, Public Law 99-272, requires that, in adjusting rates of pay under the Comparability Act, I achieve savings of at least $746 million in fiscal year 1987 compared to the "baseline" the Congress has used in its budget process. Section 15201(a) also requires that the effective date of the pay adjustment be delayed until January 1987.

Accordingly, after reviewing the reports of my Pay Agent and the Advisory Committee on Federal Pay, after considering the adverse effect that a 23.79 percent increase in Federal pay rates might have on our national economy, and in order to implement the requirements of the Reconciliation Act, I have determined that economic conditions affecting the general welfare require the following alternative plan for this pay adjustment:

"In accordance with section 5305(c)(1) of title 5, United States Code, the pay rates of the General Schedule and the related statutory pay schedules shall be increased by an overall percentage of 2 percent for each schedule, with such increase to become effective on the first day of the first applicable pay period beginning on or after January 1, 1987."

Accompanying this report and made a part hereof are the pay schedules that will result from this alternative plan, including, as required by section 5382(c) of title 5, United States Code, the rates of basic pay for the Senior Executive Service.

EXTENSION OF NATIONAL EMERGENCY WITH RESPECT TO SOUTH AFRICA—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT RECEIVED DURING THE ADJOURNMENT—PM 167

Under the authority of the order of the Senate of January 3, 1985, the Secretary of the Senate, on September 4, 1986, during the adjournment of the Senate, received the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

Section 202(d) of the National Emergencies Act (50 U.S.C. 1622(d)) provides for the automatic termination of a national emergency unless, prior to the anniversary date of its declaration, the President publishes in the Federal Register and transmits to the Congress a notice stating that the emergency is to continue in effect beyond the anniversary date. In accordance with this provision, I have sent the enclosed notice, stating that the South African emergency is to continue in effect beyond September 9, 1986, to the Federal Register for publication.

The failure of the South African Government to take adequate step to eliminate apartheid, that Government's security practices, including the recent imposition of another state of emergency, and the persistence of widespread violence continue to endanger prospects for peaceful change in South Africa and threaten stability in the region as a whole. Under these circumstances, I have determined that it is necessary to continue in effect the national emergency with respect to South Africa after September 9, 1986, in order to deal with this unusual and extraordinary threat to the foreign policy and economy of the United States. Additional measures to deal with this threat will be considered upon the completion of consultations with key Allies on joint, effective measures to eliminate apartheid and encourage negotiations for peaceful change in South Africa.

RONALD REAGAN.

S. 2795. A bill to improve agricultural price support programs for the 1987 through 1990 crops, and other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry:

AGRICULTURAL PROGRAMS IMPROVEMENT ACT

● Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, the bill I am introducing today along with Senator PRYOR is a bold response to a crisis in agriculture that demands bold and decisive action. Thousands of farmers in Arkansas, and hundreds of thousands of farmers across America, are literally hanging on by their thumbs.

It was imperative that we pass a Farm Act late last year, and I joined the effort to get a bill adopted. I realized that there were serious deficiencies in the bill and I promised my farmers that I would work to correct those deficiencies. A few were corrected this spring, but many problems remain.

Too many features of the 1985 farm bill were discretionary with the Secretary, and he has consistently adopted the option that is the least beneficial to our farmers. The lack of effective action by the Secretary, coupled with the flaws found in the 1985 Farm Act, has caused the condition of American agriculture to deteriorate even more.

During the past 5 years, farm income has fallen to $16 billion a year, 55 percent below the 1977-80 average. Also, over the last 5 years, the market value of farmland and equipment has plummeted $76 billion annually, meaning that the financial condition of our farmers has declined $60 billion a year. Over one-third of all commercial farms still face severe financial distress, a sector that accounts for 90 percent of all production. Total agricultural debt exceeds $215 billion, more than the debt owed by Brazil and Mexico combined, an amount far too large for farmers to cash flow at present prices. The United States now imports more food products than it exports and our agriculture exports have plummeted from $41.3 billion in 1981 to the projected $26.5 billion in 1986.

And I have not even talked about the severe emotional distress this situation is causing our farm families. I wish every Member of this body could come back to Arkansas with me and visit with my farmers, and to see the hollow look in some of their eyes. Many of them are so discouraged because they see no hope in sight and they see a government which they think is willing to hang them out to dry.

Mr. President, we must save our family farmers. We in Congress must take bold and decisive action to save our agriculture economy.

I am inserting a detailed summary of the legislation I have drafted. In a nutshell, it would:

Provide export assistance by implementing a marketing loan program for wheat, soybeans, and feed grains to complement the similar programs already in place for rice and cotton. This will help us expand our export sales, protect net farm income, aid U.S. livestock producers, and reduce our burdensome commodity carryovers.

Reduce the spread between the loan rate and the target price by raising the loan rate. This in turn will:

Ease pressure on producers bumping the $50,000 limit;

Reduce total U.S. income support payments while increasing price support protection; and Provide more up-front money to producers during the critical months;

Eliminate cross compliance and offsetting compliance;

Revise the base and program yield formulas so that our southern crops will not be discriminated against;

Require the Secretary to provide timely advance CCC recourse loans to prevent at least in part the kind of credit disaster many faced attempting to arrange financing for 1986 crop production.

Provide assistance to soybean producers by maintaining the $5.02 loan rate while requiring the Secretary to implement either a marketing loan or a producer option payment program.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a more detailed summary of the legislation be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the summary was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUMMARY OF BUMPERS-PRYOR FARM BILL PROPOSAL

The bill simplifies the Food Security Act of 1985 by implementing a variation of the marketing loan concept for each program crop, including soybeans. The bill will also freeze price support loan levels and target prices through 1990, and it provides for a simpler and more equitable method for determining bases and program yields. Here is a summary of the bill's provisions.

(A) Soybeans.—The bill will require the Secretary to freeze the price support loan rate at $5.02 per bushel through 1990. The Secretary is required to choose between two export enhancement programs: Plan A, which calls for a marketing loan, or Plan B, which provides for a producer option payment (POP). The POP is set at 20% of the loan rate or $1 per bushel. A producer who agrees to forgo loan protection or who redeems soybeans under loan will be eligible for this payment. Both options will prevent massive amounts of soybeans from being forfeited to the government.

(B) Cotton.—The bill freezes the price support loan rate ($.57 per lb.) and the target price ($.81 per lb.) at the 1985 levels for the 1987 through 1990 crop years. The marketing loan price floor is reduced to 75% of the loan rate to compensate for the higher loan rate.

(C) Rice.—As with cotton, the bill makes few changes. The price support loan rate ($8 per cwt.) and the target price ($11.90 per cwt.) are frozen at the 1985 levels for the 1987 through 1990 crop years. The marketing loan price floor is reduced to 45% in 1987, 55% in 1988, and 65% in 1989 and 1990. The Secretary, as in all the program crop sections, is required to offer loan deficiency protection to rice producers who opt to forgo loan and target protection.

(D) Wheat.—For 1987 through 1990, the loan rate will be frozen at the 1985 level of $3.30 per bushel, and the target price will be frozen at $4.38 per bushel. For the same years, the Secretary will be required to implement a marketing loan whereby a producer will be allowed to redeem a wheat loan at the world market price level. For producers who wish to forgo loan and target protection, the Secretary is also required to offer a loan deficiency payment, the difference between the world market price and the loan rate, as an incentive.

The bill gives the Secretary the authority to use marketing certificates, guaranteed in value, in the marketing loan program for up to one-half of the loan deficiency that a producer is allowed to retain. The price floor for the marketing loan program is set at 65% of the loan rate. Also, the Secretary is required to implement a marketing certificate program for exporters should the marketing loan repayment rate exceed the prevailing world marketing price for wheat.

(E) Feed grains.—This section of the bill closely resembles the wheat section. The price support loan rate (2.55 per bushel) and the target price ($3.03 per bushel) for the years 1987 through 1990 will be frozen at the 1985 levels. The Secretary will be required to implement a marketing loan and to provide loan deficiency payments to producers who wish to forgo loan and target protection.

As with wheat, the Secretary will have the authority to use marketing certificates in conjunction with the marketing loan program. The price floor for the marketing loan is set at 65% of the loan rate. Also, the Secretary must implement a marketing certificate program for exporters if the marketing loan repayment rate exceeds the prevailing world price for feed grains.

(F) Cross compliance.—The bill eliminates the Secretary's authority to announce cross compliance, limited cross compliance, or offsetting compliance in any form.

(G) Advance recourse commodity loans.—The Secretary is required to make advance recourse CCC loans available to producers of program crops and soybeans beginning with the 1987 crop year.

(H) Crop acreage bases.—The acreage base provisions of the 1985 farm bill are simplified. Producers of rice, cotton, wheat, and feed grains will have bases for these crops equal to the average of the acreage planted or considered planted to these crops over the last five years, excluding those years in which no crop was planted or considered planted. However, no more than three crop years can be excluded.

(I) Farm program payment yield.—The revisions included in my bill will eliminate the penalty against productive farmers and it will return the 1985 crop years into the yield calculations. For 1987 through 1990, the payment yield will be the average of the actual yield for that crop over the five crop years immediately preceding, throwing out the high and low years. The Secretary is required to allow use of area averages, not just county averages, for farms with new production of program crops, and he may establish a new yield for farms that have been hit by natural disaster. Also, if the use of the above formula does not adequately reflect the productive potential of any farm, the Secretary must establish a more accurate program yield.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I want to urge every Member of the Senate, and especially those Senators from farm States, to take a close look at this legislation. It contains provisions which are vitally important to our farmers and must be adopted. Of immediate concern to me is the plight of our soybean farmers. Just last week Secretary Lyng announced that he was dropping the soybean price support from $5.02 per bushel down to $4.77 per bushel. In doing this, he is essentially thumbing his nose at the Senate, which unanimously adopted my amendment to the debt limit extension bill strongly urging him to retain the $5.02 rate. This legislation retains the $5.02 rate through 1990.

I want to urge the Senate Agriculture Committee to schedule immediate hearings on this legislation and to give it thoughtful and serious consideration.●

● Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, today, Senator BUMPERS and I are introducing a piece of agricultural legislation that mandates the expansion of the marketing loan concept originally set forth in the 1985 Food Security Act to all program crops, including soybeans.

The 1985 farm bill incorporated a mandatory marketing loan program for rice—a concept Senator COCHRAN and I had originally proposed for all program crops. At the same time it gave the Secretary of Agriculture the discretion to implement this program for all other program crops.

Despite the success of the marketing loan program for rice, the Secretary of Agriculture has failed to act in utilizing this authority for other programs.

The bill we are introducing today will mandate a variation of the marketing loan concept for each program crop, including soybeans, while freezing price support loan levels and target prices through 1990. It also provides for a simpler, more equitable method for determining bases and program yields. After spending over a year's time in debating and formulating a new farm program the Congress finally passed a new program in late December of 1985. This new farm bill provided hope for all of agriculture to once again become price competitive while at the same time redefining Government's relationship with the American farmer.

Throughout that bill, we provided the Secretary of Agriculture discretionary authority so that he could have greater flexibility in utilizing the tools needed to allow American agriculture once again to compete and hopefully recover and prosper. However, from the writing of program regulations to program announcements, we have seen a complete ignoring of these discretionary authorities. It has been frustrating at best to see many parts of our new bill being totally ignored or the intent completely misinterpreted by bureaucratic regulation writers.

American agriculture needs help. It is time to do what has to be done. No longer can we allow the Department of Agriculture to issue program regulations that fit their ideas of how agriculture programs should be written and snub their nose at the Congress and how the laws were actually written and meant to be implemented.

It is put up or shut up time for farm programs. The 1985 farm bill implemented Senator COCHRAN's and my marketing loan concept. This concept defined Government's support to farmers while at the same time allowing his commodity to be market competitive. It encourages sales and not production for Government storage. The rice marketing loan was implemented on April 15 and terminated on June 30. In that short space of time American rice producers recaptured markets and sold the majority of the 1985 crop that was destined for Government forfeiture without a marketing loan option.

I hear all the criticism about cost but I have yet seen figures from anyone that talk about net costs—costs that take into consideration savings from interest, storage, and acquisition costs. By some of my crude calculations the April 15 to June 30 marketing loan period netted savings in excess of $200 million for the rice program while at the same time recapturing lost rice markets. Cotton's similar program is also looking good at allowing cotton producers once again to compete and hopefully regain lost traditional American cotton markets.

Mr. President, I want all our commodities to have the marketing loan. I believe wheat, corn, soybeans, and our other major commodities can also enjoy the benefits a marketing loan presents. Our farmers deserve for our Government to utilize all its available tools to help strengthen American agriculture. We have waited for the Secretary to announce a marketing loan for other major programs—an announcement that can be made within his broad discretionary authority, but it hasn't come. Therefore, I am joining Senator BUMPERS in an effort to mandate a program that I think will allow our American commodities to compete and allow American agriculture to recover.

The freezing of target prices and loan rates provides the needed income to allow farmers to survive and cashflow their loans. By freezing these rates till 1990, we stabilize income to our producers when they need it the most and by implementing the marketing loan, we allow the crops to be price competitive.

Mr. President, we have debated farm programs back and forth, over and over, countless times in the Senate. Let's realize how serious agriculture's future is and let's finally realize it's time to take action. Let's define Government's support of agriculture and at the same time provide a program that is aggressive and profarmer in helping him recapture his lost traditional marketplace.

Mr. President, I am reaffirming my support for American agriculture. I am proud to join my colleague Senator BUMPERS in working for solutions to agriculture's problems.

Mr. President, at this point I would like to ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a summary of our legislation.

There being no objection, the summary was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The bill we have drafted embodies a simple concept. It simplifies the Food Security Act of 1985 by implementing a variation of the marketing loan concept for each program crop, including soybeans. The bill will also freeze price support loan levels and target prices through 1990, and it provides for a simpler, more equitable method for determining bases and program yields. Here is a summary of the bill's provisions.

(A) Wheat.—for 1987 through 1990, the loan rate will be frozen at the 1985 level of $3.30 per bushel, and the target price will be frozen at $4.38 per bushel. For the same years, the Secretary will be required to implement a marketing loan whereby a producer will be allowed to redeem a wheat loan at the world market price level. For producers who wish to forgo loan and target protection, the Secretary is also required to offer a loan deficiency payment, the difference between the world market price and the loan rate, as an incentive.

The bill gives the Secretary the authority to use marketing certificates, guaranteed in value, in the marketing loan program for up to one-half of the loan deficiency that a producer is allowed to retain. The price floor for the marketing loan program is set at 65% of the loan rate. Also, the Secretary is required to implement a marketing certificate program for exporters should the marketing loan repayment rate exceed the prevailing world marketing price for wheat.

(B) Feed grains.—This section of the bill closely resembles the wheat section. The price support loan rate ($2.55 per bushel) and the target price ($3.03 per bushel) for the years 1987 through 1990 will be frozen at the 1985 levels listed above. The Secretary will be required to implement a marketing loan and to provide deficiency payments to producers who wish to forgo loan and target protection.

As with wheat, the Secretary will have the authority to use marketing certificates in conjunction with the marketing loan program. The price floor for the marketing loan is set at 65% of the loan rate. Also, the Secretary must implement a marketing certificate program for exporters if the marketing loan repayment rate exceeds the prevailing world price for feed grains.

(C) Cotton.—Fewer changes have been suggested for the cotton section. As with all program crops, the price support loan rate ($.57 per lb.) and the target price ($.81 per lb.) are frozen at the 1985 levels for the 1987 through 1990 crop years. The marketing loan price floor is reduced to 75% of the loan rate to compensate for the higher loan rate.

(D) Rice.—As with cotton, the bill makes few changes. The price support loan rate ($8 per cwt.) and the target price ($11.90 per cwt.) are frozen at the 1985 levels for the 1987 through 1990 crop years. The marketing loan price floor is reduced to 45% in 1987, 55% in 1988, and 65% in 1989 and 1990. The Secretary, as in all the program crop sections, is required to offer loan deficiency protection to rice producers who opt to forgo loan and target protection.

(E) Soybeans.—This bill will require the Secretary to freeze the price support loan rate at $5.02 per bushel through 1990. The Secretary is required to choose between two expert enhancement programs: Plan A, which calls for a marketing loan, or Plan B, which provides for a producer option payment (POP). The POP is set at 20% of the loan rate on $1 per bushel. A producer who agrees to forego loan protection or who redeems soybeans under loan will be eligible for this payment. Both options will prevent massive amounts of soybeans from being forfeited to the government.

(F) Cross Compliance.—The bill eliminates the Secretary's authority to announce cross compliance, limited cross compliance, or off-setting compliance in any form.

(G) Advance recourse commodity loans.—The Secretary is required to make advance recourse CCC loans available to producers of program crops and soybeans beginning with the 1987 crop year.

(H) Crop acreage bases.—The provisions of the 1985 farm bill are simplified. Producers of rice, cotton, wheat, and feed grains will have bases for these crops equal to the average of the acreage planted or considered planted to these crops over the last five years, excluding those years in which no crop was planted or considered planted. However, no more than three crop years can be excluded.

(I) Farm program payment yield.—The revisions included in my bill will eliminate the penalty against productive farmers and it will return the 1985 crop years into the yield calculations. For 1987 through 1990, the payment yield will be the average of the actual yield for that crop over the five crop years immediately preceding, throwing out the high and low years. For farms with new production of program crops or that have been hit by natural disasters, the Secretary is required to allow use of area average, not just county average, for the farmers, and he may establish a new yield for the latter. Also, if the use of the above formula does not adequately reflect the productive potential of any farm, the Secretary must establish a more accurate program yield.●

By Mr. CHILES:

S.J. Res. 407. Joint resolution designating November 12, 1986, as "Salute to School Volunteers Day;" to the Committee on the Judicary.

SALUTE TO SCHOOL VOLUNTEERS DAY

● Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, I hope my colleagues will join me supporting this joint resolution which would designate November 12, 1986, as "Salute to School Volunteers Day."

The joint resolution provides national recognition of and support for one of the truly remarkable features of the school reform movement which is now sweeping the country, namely, an explosion of citizen volunteerism on behalf of better schools for our children. Sparked by the National School Volunteer Program, spontaneous local school-sponsored efforts, and a host of school-business partnerships and adopt-a-school programs in hundreds of communities, volunteers—over 4 million of them—are helping our dedicated professional staffs to reach and teach the children and young people who will determine the quality of America's future.

The joint resolution recognizes and honors "the magnitude, quality, and selflessness" of those who, in a long and honorable American tradition, volunteer to help others. I believe that it will encourage more school districts and States to setup volunteer efforts and, in that way, tap the wisdom and skills of millions of Americans who care about our schools.●

SENATE RESOLUTION 464

At the request of Mr. ROTH, the name of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPECTER], was added as a cosponsor of Senate Resolution 464, a resolution to designate October 1986 as "Crack/Cocaine Awareness Month."

SENATE RESOLUTION 486—RELATING TO THE ARREST OF U.S. CORRESPONDENT NICHOLAS DANILOFF

Mr. DOLE (for himself, Mr. BYRD, Mr. LUGAR, Mr. PELL, Mr. GORTON, Mr. DURENBERGER, Mr. CRANSTON, Mr. BOSCHWITZ, Mr. FORD, Mr. EXON, Mr. BENTSEN, Mr. DECONCINI, and Mr. MATTINGLY) submitted the following resolution; which was laid before the Senate:

I. Whereas the arrest and indictment on trumped up charges by the government of the Soviet Union of Nicholas Daniloff, American correspondent for U.S. News & World Report, is in clear contravention of accepted standards of international law and civil liberties;

II. Whereas the treatment of Mr. Daniloff is an inexcusable denial of the rights of a journalist to engage in the legitimate pursuit of his profession and a violation of Soviet obligations as a signatory of the Final Act of the Helsinki Accords guiding relations between participating states, specifically Basket III, Section 2, Article (c), Principles for the Improvement of Working Conditions for Journalists, which state that "• • • the participating states reaffirm that the legitimate pursuit of their professional activity will neither render journalists liable to expulsion nor otherwise penalize them."

III. Whereas the actions of the Soviet government further violate the spirit and letter of the provisions adopted at the review of the Helsinki Accords held in Madrid in March, 1983, specifically Basket III, Cooperation in Humanitarian and other Fields, which affirms that the participaint states ". . . will also consider ways and means to assist journalists from other participating states and thus enable them to resolve practical problems they may encounter . . ." and ". . . further increase the possibilities and, when necessary, improve the conditions for journalists from other participating States to establish and maintain personal contacts and communication with their sources: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the Senate

1. condemns the Soviet Union for the unjustifiable arrest and indictment of Nicholas Daniloff and demands his immediate and unconditional release from custody by the Soviet Union,

2. expresses it deep concern that the failure of the Soviet Union to immediately and justly resolve this matter threatens to undermine constructive relations between the United States and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and jeopardizes the hoped for Summit Meeting between President Reagan and General Secretary Gorbachev, and

3. urges that all responsible news gathering and news accrediting organizations that provide support, membership or other privileges to Soviet news organizations should consider appropriate actions to underscore the demand for Daniloff's release.

SENATE RESOLUTION 487—CONDEMNING RECENT ACTS OF TERRORISM IN PAKISTAN AND TURKEY

Mr. BYRD (for himself, Mr. DOLE, Mr. PELL, Mr. LUGAR, Mr. CRANSTON, Mr. GORTON, Mr. BENTSEN, Mr. FORD, and Mr. DECONCINI) submitted the following resolution; which was laid before the Senate:

Whereas the recent terrorist attacks in Karachi, Pakistan, and Istanbul, Turkey, demonstrate that international terrorism remains a principal threat to human life and democratic values;

Whereas the hijacking of Pan American Flight 73, which ended in the loss of many lives at Karachi International Airport, and the murder of 22 Turkish Jews as they worshiped in an Istanbul Synagogue, underscore the continued need for action against international terrorism and for all civilized nations to redouble their efforts to eradicate this scourge; and

Whereas the United States should seize the initiative to expand international cooperation and coordination in the campaign against terrorism, and should be supported in that effort by its allies, and all other responsible nations: Now, therefore, be it resolved that, the Senate

(1) condemns vigorously the most recent terrorist acts in Karachi, Pakistan, and Istanbul, Turkey, and offers its deepest sympathies and condolences to the victims of those attacks, and to their families;

(2) declares that international terrorism is a scourge which effects, ultimately, all nations, and that all civilized and responsible nations of the world should expand their efforts to combat this scourge;

(3) urges close international cooperation in the swift prosecution and punishment of those responsible for these crimes; and

(4) urges the President to take the following actions—

(A) place the subject of terrorism and the urgent need for international cooperation, including cooperation between the United States and the Soviet Union, in combatting this scourge on the agenda of any future U.S.-Soviet summit meeting;

(B) make increased antiterrorism cooperation a high priority subject at every appropriate opportunity he has with the leaders of the allies and friends of the United States;

(C) Redouble efforts to establish an international antiterrorism committee as called for in recently enacted legislation (PL 99-399) so that civilized countries may better cooperate in responding to these barbarous acts.

(D) actively utilize existing rewards-for-information authorities to assist in apprehending and bringing to justice all those responsible for these reprehensible crimes.

(E) consider taking appropriate constiutional measures against the individuals responsible for these heinous crimes.

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED

REHABILIATION ACT AMENDMENTS

EAGLETON (AND DANFORTH) AMENDMENT NO. 2773

Mr. BYRD (for Mr. EAGLETON, for himself and Mr. DANFORTH) proposed an amendment to the bill (S. 2515) to reauthorize the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, and for other purposes; as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

MAINTENANCE OF EFFORT

SEC. . ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

BUDGET SCOREKEEPING REPORT

● Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I hereby submit to the Senate the budget scorekeeping report for this week, prepared by the Congressional Budget Office in response to section 308(b) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, as amended. This report also serves as the scorekeeping report for the purposes of section 311 of the Budget Act.

The report follows:

CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
U.S. CONGRESS,
Washington, DC, September 8, 1986.

Hon. PETE V. DOMENICI,
Chairman, Committee on the Budget, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The attached report shows the effects of Congressional action on the budget for fiscal years 1986 and 1987. The estimated totals of budget authority, outlays, and revenues for each fiscal year are compared to the appropriate or recommended levels contained in the most recent budget resolutions, S. Con. Res. 32 for fiscal years 1986, and S. Con. Res. 120 for fiscal year 1987. This report meets the requirements for Senate scorekeeping of Section 5 of S. Con. Res. 32 and is current through August 15, 1986. The report is submitted under Section 308(b) and in aid of Section 311 of the Congressional Budget Act, as amended.

Since my last report the President has signed the Financial Assistance for the Northern Marianas Act, Public Law 99-396, the Omnibus Diplomatic Security and Anti-Terrorism Act, Public Law 99-399, the Children's Justice and Assistance Act of 1986, Public Law 99-401, and Public Law 99-384, increasing the limit on the public debt.

With best wishes,
Sincerely,

RUDOLPH G. PENNER.

CRIME AND PUNISHMENT IN MODERN AMERICA

● Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, as the Members of this body know, the attention of the country is focused as never before upon the problem of drug abuse. Well before the media spotlight was aimed at the drug abuse problem, First Lady Nancy Reagan led the way in publicizing the dangers of drug use. The South Florida Task Force, which Vice President GEORGE BUSH established, is an example of the fine leadership the administration has shown in this area.

Sadly, drug abuse is but one aspect of an even larger problem: crime in America. The crime problem touches each American—the inner city grade school student, pressured by his peers to try marijuana, crack, and other drugs; the elderly woman who during the heat of August is too afraid of burglars to open her apartment window; the Wall Street broker who is pressured to look the other way while his clients and peers engage in insider trading. Crime in America saps our moral vigor and robs us of our hard-earned savings.

The Institute for Government and Politics will shortly publish a collection of essays entitled, "Crime and Punishment in Modern America," to which I have contributed an article outlining legislation that will contribute to our efforts to stem the rising tide of drug abuse in our Nation.

This essay, "Drugs and Crime: A Legislative Perspective," examines the scope and magnitude of drug-related crime in the United States and gives recommendations for immediate legislative action, designed to:

Stop drugs at the source;

Ensure existence of effective drug abuse education and prevention programs;

Increase interdiction efforts; and Support local, State, and Federal drug law enforcement efforts.

I hope that my colleagues in both Houses will take the time to read "Crime and Punishment in Modern America," which is being released in just a few weeks. It is a timely work which presents a variety of views on a number of issues which will confront us in this legislative session—and on the campaign trail this fall. Among the contributors to "Crime and Punishment in Modern America," are Attorney General Edwin Meese, Senators STROM THURMOND, WILLIAM L. ARMSTRONG, SAM NUNN, and CHARLES E. GRASSLEY; Congressman JACK KEMP; former Gov. Peter du Pont of Delaware; the Honorable J. Clifford Wallace of the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals; Patrick B. McGuigan, director of the Judicial Reform project; and Daniel J. Popeo, general counsel for the Washington Legal Foundation.

As this legislative session begins, we find ourselves at a crossroads. The American people are asking if the Congress has the courage to pass comprehensive legislation which will stem the rising tide of drug use. Polls show that Americans are willing to make the sacrifices necessary to rid our country of this plague. They demand action from us now; they will be watching this November. Let us give them this legislation, before the latest swell of drug abuse becomes a tidal wave which engulfs us all. As we confront the myriad issues of crime and punishment, this book will be an invaluable source of useful and innovative solutions.●

THE 1986 WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE ON SMALL BUSINESS

● Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, during the Labor Day recess, small business leaders from across America gathered in Washington for the 1986 White House Conference on Small Business. From August 17-21, the delegates to the conference debated and voted upon a series of issues important to our small business community.

The delegates approved a list of 60 final recommendations which have been forwarded to each Member of Congress. These recommendations reflect the priority concerns of small firms across the country. I believe my colleagues would do well to pay particular attention to these recommendations in the weeks ahead.

The No. 1 recommendation, receiving 1,419 votes out of some 1,715 cast, is coming to grips with the continuing commercial liability insurance crisis. And I am very pleased to see that the delegates adopted a broad approach to this particular problem. Rather than focus on one or two aspects of this crisis, the delegates have propounded a comprehensive approach to this national problem.

Other priority issues of our small business leaders include a recommendation dealing with employee benefits, a call to protect small business from unfair competition from Government units and nonprofit organizations, a recommendation demanding action to reduce the Federal deficit, and a call for the creation of a new Cabinet-level Office of International Trade.

The entire list of recommendations coming out of the White House conference will help shape our legislative agenda for weeks to come. My colleagues will recall how the 1980 White House conference galvanized action on a wide variety of small business issues. I anticipate a similar course of action on these 60 recommendations. Indeed, as a member of the Small Business Committee, I am already reviewing this list closely.

Mr. President, I would be remiss if I failed to mention the central role played by Tennessee's delegation to the 1986 White House Conference on Small Business. Under the able leadership of Bill Nourse, the Tennessee delegation played a vocal and active role in the many workshops which helped shape the issues considered by the full conference. The issues of greatest concern to the Tennessee delegation were among the top recommendations voted on by the full conference.

I had the privilege of meeting many members of the Tennessee delegation when they came to Washington several weeks in advance of the White House conference. The fact that these men and women would take time out from their various business ventures to attend a series of briefings in advance of the conference reflected admirably on their commitment to Tennessee's small business community. I was impressed with their ready grasp of issues of concern to them and their desire to learn about the legislative process. I came away from those meetings convinced that the Tennessee delegation would play a key role in the activities of the 1986 White House conference. The results of the conference have only confirmed my earlier belief.

Mr. President, I wish to congratulate not only the members of the Tennessee delegation, but all of those who attended the White House Conference on Small Business for a job well done. Their thoughts and recommendations will help shape the legislative landscape on many issues of national importance. In closing, I again urge my colleagues to carefully review the final recommendations of this important gathering.●

THE DILEMMA OF SOVIET JEWS

● Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I ask my fellow colleagues to take a moment to contemplate the dilemma of the Soviet Jews.

Our forefathers founded the United States on the ideals of religious freedom and personal liberty.

While we enjoy these privileges, the Soviet Jews face imprisonment and harassment for trying to perpetuate their religion and culture.

Each year thousands of Soviet Jews express their desire to emigrate, yet they cannot rejoin their families outside the U.S.S.R.

Instead, they receive job dismissal, school expulsion, and public denouncement as traitors.

The Soviet Government has agreed to respect religious, cultural, and emigration freedoms in the Helsinki accord of 1975 and other international human rights agreements.

I urge the U.S.S.R. to stop this harsh treatment of Jews and to honor their commitment to human rights.●

KIWANIS CLUB OF ERIE, PA

● Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I wish to call the Senate's attention to the Kiwanis Club of Erie, PA, which celebrated its 70th anniversary on September 5, 1986.

The Kiwanis Club of Erie was formed on August 26, 1918. They are the second oldest club in Pennsylvania and the first to form in Erie.

Kiwanis is a service organization whose motto is "We Build." Their goals are to: Give primacy to human and spiritual values alike; provide fellowship; encourage the daily living of the Golden Rule; and promote higher social, business, and professional standards.

The Kiwanis' activities include giving assistance to youth and aged in the Erie community. Their past and current projects include: Involvement with 4-H Club; boys and girls summer camp; purchase of civil defense ambulance; Kiwanis-State Police Camp Cadet Program for boys and girls; Kiwanis Silent Club for hearing impaired children; Kiwanis Boy's Choir; scholarships for Erie high school seniors; and their own youth sponsored clubs, Circle K and Key Club.

I am sure my colleagues join me in commending the Kiwanis Club of Erie, PA, for their long and devoted service to the community.●

REHNQUIST SCHOOL SEGREGATION CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT

● Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, this week, the Senate will begin consideration of the nomination of William H. Rehnquist to be the Chief Justice of the United States.

Over the weekend, after the close of the Judiciary Committee's hearings on the nomination, two memos proposing a constitutional amendment to legalize school segregation, written by Mr. Rehnquist while he was the Assistant Attorney General for the Office of Legal Counsel, came to light.

If the Rehnquist amendment had been proposed and adopted, it would effectively have nullified the Supreme Court's landmark decision in Brown versus Board of Education and would have permitted the continuation of deliberate racial segregation of the public schools in both the North and South.

This proposed constitutional amendment is another significant piece of evidence of Mr. Rehnquist's unremitting hostility to racial equality. He is an arch enemy of civil rights and unfit to be the Chief Justice of the United States. I ask that the Rehnquist memoranda, analyses by civil rights experts, and news reports about the memos be inserted in the RECORD at this point. I urge my colleagues to read these materials carefully before deciding how to cast their vote on this nomination.

The material follows:

(Re Constitutional Amendment to Validate "Freedom of Choice" and "Neighborhood Schools")

1. Description of Plans that are to be Validated.

The words, "freedom of choice" and "neighborhood schools" do not arise in a vacuum but arise instead in the context of more than 15 years of litigation over what the Constitution does and does not permit local school boards to do when those boards deal with racially mixed student populations. The critical issue in the South now, which has in the past of course had in its schools a system of enforced segregation by race, appears to be the "freedom of choice" plan, whereunder a student is free to choose to attend some school or schools in the district other than the one to which he is initially assigned. In the North, the critical issue (though less in public focus at the moment than the issue of "freedom of choice" in the South.) is that of de facto segregation, or the permissibility of neighborhood schools; does the Constitution require a school district to take affirmative steps to achieve "racial balance" among its schools, even though the "imbalance" existing stems from residential segregation or other factors for which the school board is not responsible? Each of these two subjects is treated in greater detail below though the treatment is by no means exhaustive or compete.

(a) "Freedom of Choice." When the school board in Knoxville, Tennessee, sought to comply with the mandate of the Supreme Court of the United States in Brown v. Board of Education, it adopted a plan of geographic zoning for school attendance without regard to race, but it added to the plan a provision permitting a student whose race was in the minority in the school which he attended to transfer to any school in which his race was in the majority. This plan was attached by Negro plaintiffs, and in 1963 was held unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. Goss v. Board of Education of Knoxville, 373 U.S. (1963). The Court held that no "official transfer plan or provision of which racial segregation is the inevitable consequence may stand under the Fourteenth Amendment." 373 U.S. at 689. The Court specifically reserved the question, however, of whether or not a transfer plan which was available to every student, regardless of the racial composition of his school, would be constitutional:

"* * * We note that if the transfer provisions were made available to all students regardless of their race and regardless as well of the racial composition of the school to which he requested transfer they would have an entirely different case. Pupils could then at their option (or that of their parents) choose, entirely free of any imposed racial considerations, to remain in the school of their zone or to transfer to another." Id. at 687.

The Supreme Court obviously could have decided Goss on the very narrow ground that since race was a factor in determining whether or not a student had a right to transfer, and race as a criterion for classifying students had been invalidated by Brown, the transfer plan adopted in Knoxville could not stand. However, by using the broader language—that no transfer plan "of which racial segregation is the inevitable consequence," the Goss opinion perhaps inadvertently led the way to much more sweeping pronouncements by the Court in the following years.

In 1968, the Supreme Court dealt with three transfer or "freedom of choice" plans which were available to all students within the district involved. In Green v. County School Board of New Kent County, 391 U.S. 430 (1968), and Raney v. Board of Education, 391 U.S. 443 (1968), both involved situations in which the school board had not fundamentally altered the earlier de jure structure which had segregated schools by race, but now allowed unlimited transfer by any student to another school in the district.

The Supreme Court in both cases held that the "freedom of choice" plan was unconstitutional in what must be described as a "muddy" opinion. The Court appears to have been impressed by the fact that geographic zoning would have more effectively ended segregation, as would a system of zoning in which one of the schools involved has been made entirely elemantary, and the other, entirely secondary. The Court appears to be saying that where such methods are available, a heavy burden is on the school board to explain why it chose a system of attendance zoning which would not be likely to produce integration. The facts of Green and Raney themselves are rather limited, but the opinion of the Court is sufficiently vague and general as to project the rationale beyond the facts. The problem is increased by the decision handed down at the same time in the case of Monroe v. Board of Commissioners of the City of Jackson, 391 U.S. 450 (1968). Here the school board had changed from the old de jure segregated system of attendance zoning to a genuinely geographical section which divided the city into three zones. Negroes were more heavily concentrated in the central zone than in the east or west zones, but there were some in all zones; there were likewise whites in all zones. A provision of the plan allowed any student to transfer to any other school in the district in which space was available. The result of the combined geographic zoning and transfer provisions was that the west school was almost entirely white, the central school was entirely Negro, and the east school was genuinely mixed.

The Supreme Court, again speaking through Justice Brennan, held this plan unconstitutional. The Court's opinion, relying heavily on the Goss case as it did (and remembering that Goss had specifically reserved this point) can only be described as disingenuous: The Court objected to the plan because it had the effect of "resegregating" these schools, apparently reasoning that a school board which once had de jure segregation must pick the plan most likely to achieve integration, even though another school board would be perfectly free to choose a racially neutral plan which resulted in "de facto" segregation of some of the schools within a district.

It is apparent from the foregoing discussion that "freedom of choice" plans may vary from one another, It would be quite possible to provide in a constitutional amendment that freedom of choice available to all students aimiflarly situated (without regard to race) should be valid, but that a plan depending upon the racial composition of the school to trigger the transfer right (such as was involved in Goss) should remain invalid under the Fourteenth Amendment. If the constitutional amendment in question is to be urged on what seem to me to be the very tenable grounds that schools ought to be able to apply racially neutral principles in assigning pupils or otherwise classifying them, it is probably better that it limit itself to validation of the type of freedom of choice plans used in Monroe, Green, and Raney and not attempt to revive the type of plan used in Goss. On the other hand, if one wishes to go all the way with freedom of choice, an amendment of broader scope could be drafted.

(b) Many school districts, south and north, applying geographic attendance zoning, nonetheless end up with large concentrations of Negroes or other racial minorities in one or two schools in the district, and only a small sprinkling of these racial minorities in other schools of the district. Frequently such "racial imbalance" results from various forms of residential segregation, or other factors over which the school board has no control. It has been contended in various cases throughout the United States in the past decade that "de facto" segregation, characterized by "racial imbalance", is itself violative of the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. The lower federal courts have divided in their answer to this question, and no case involving it has been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States. In the course of litigating this issue, however, subsidiary and related issues have been developed in some of the cases. The United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, in Dell v. School Board of Gary, Indiana, 324 F.2d 209 (7th Cir., 1963), and the United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit in Downs v. Board of Education, 336 F.2d 988, have both held that "de facto" segregation does not violate the Fourteenth Amendment. In each case, the Supreme Court of the United States denied certiorari: 377 U.S. 924; 380 U.S. 914. On the other hand, the United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts, in Barksdale v. Springfield School Committee, 237 F.Supp. 543 (1965) held that the neighbor/school policy "must be abandoned or modified when it results in segregation in fact." Other federal district courts, either in holding or in dicta, have adopted the same position.

Therefore, while there is no authoritative final judicial holding from the Supreme Court that neighborhood schools or "de facto" segregation violate the Fourteenth Amendments, there is likewise no solid body of judicial authority from the lower courts holding to the contrary. In view of what appears to be a large body of public support for the idea of neighborhood schools, free from the supervision by the federal courts, it would appear to be sound policy to couple with any amendment validating "freedom of choice" plans a related provision validating "neighborhood school" plans.

2. Should validation of plans be done by constitutional amendment or by statute? There are arguments pro and con on this point, but I believe that once the decision is made to validate them, the arguments in favor of doing it by a constitutional amendment heavily preponderate.

(a) The subject is a sufficiently detailed and specialized one that it ought not be the subject of a constitutional amendment. This argument certainly must be given some weight, but its import depends largely on how detailed the proposed validation is to be. If one were to go on for several pages describing the exact responsibilities of federal courts, school boards, and the like, it would of course be ridiculous to put in the form of a constitutional amendment. However, if one were to state principles in one or two paragraphs, such a statement would be quite consistent with other constitutional amendments that have been adopted.

Embodiment of the validation in a statute would invite unnecessary detail and would likewise invite frequent reopening of heated debates on the subject. To the extent that the validation or partial validation of these plans turns into a detailed catalogue of what school boards may and may not do in particular situations, it has the collateral effect of inserting federal courts still further into the business of operating schools, rather than at least partially withdrawing them from that business. Likewise, what is validated by statute may likewise be invalidated by repeal or amendment of the statute, and the temptation would be constant, in a subject as controversial as this, to at least argue about reopening the debate or amending the statute in every session of Congress.

(b) Any statute (like most constitutional amendments) will involve compromise and some concession by a wide spectrum of public opinion; some will feel the statute validates less than they would like in the way of local school autonomy, while others will doubtless feel that it grants more than it should in the way of such autonomy. Unfortunately, from a constitutional point of view, as stated by Alex Bickel in our conversation on Sunday, the political "left" cannot deliver its vote in the same manner as the political "right" can, since any member of the political "left" has available to him a court challenge to those parts of the measure which he does not like on the grounds that they violate the Fourteenth Amendment. The basis for a congressional authority over the subject is the power granted under the Fourteenth Amendment to enforce the terms of the amendment by appropriate legislation; however, in Katzenbach v. Morgan, 384 U.S. 641, the majority noted in a footnote that while Congress could by legislation enlarge rights conferred by the Fourteenth Amendment, it could not circumscribe those rights by legislation. Since any significant validation of "freedom of choice" would clearly impinge on the court's opinion in Monroe, it is questionable whether the validation provisions of any statute would withstand constitutional attack.

(c) Precedents are ample for constitutional amendments which overrule a particular holding of the Supreme Court of the United States—the Twelfth Amendment, overruling the Supreme Court's decision in Chisholm v. Georgia, and the Sixteenth Amendment, overruling the Court's decision in Pollack v. Farmers Loan and Trust, are but two examples.

3. What should be the coverage of the validating provision?

Several possible limits to the constitutional validation of these plans suggest themselves, from the narrowest to the broadest.

(a) The validation could be limited to simply removing from the Federal Constitution any prohibition against "freedom of choice" or neighborhood school plans of school attendance. The result of this limitation would be that Congress, to the extent of its constitutional power, would be authorized to prohibit or curtail such plans, and states or local governments would likewise be free to choose them or reject them as they saw fit.

(b) The middle ground would be to validate them so far as the federal government was concerned—to state that not only the Constitution does not prohibit them, but that Congress should have no power to prohibit or curtail them—leaving to the states and local governments the option to adopt or reject them as they saw fit.

Since the Republican Party has traditionally favored local control on matters such as schools, it seems to me that the breadth of this last proposal is undesirable. I also have some doubt as to whether one would want to disable Congress from addressing itself to this subject at some future date, although the choice between the first two possibilities appears to be a rather close one compared to the choice between either of them and the third.

Section 1. No provision of the Constitution shall be construed to prohibit the United States, any State, or any subdivision of either, from assigning persons to its educational facilities on the basis of geographic boundaries, provided only that such boundaries are reasonably related to school capacity, availability of transportation, safety or other similar considerations.

Section 2. No provision of the Constitution shall be construed to prohibit the United States, any States, any State, or any subdivision of either, from permitting persons to transfer voluntarily among its educational facilities, provided only that such transfers are uniformly available to all persons within its jurisdiction.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE HONORABLE EGIL KROGH, JR., DEPUTY ASSISTANT TO THE PRESIDENT FOR DOMESTIC AFFAIRS

(Re: Supplemental Comments: Constitutional Amendment, Together with Second Draft of Proposed Article 26)

I enclose a revised draft of the proposed constitutional amendment which you had earlier requested.

The second draft differs from the first draft in that section 2 has been lengthened to make clear that "freedom of choice" plans are to be protected in two different situations—(a) where all persons within a school district have the right to transfer, or (b) where the right of transfer is accorded to less than all persons on a basis related to school capacity, availability of transportation, availability of curriculum, safety, or similar non-racial considerations. The second draft also makes clear that the "freedom of choice" protection extends not only to plans calling for transfers on the basis of freedom of choice, but also to those which call for initial assignment on the basis of freedom of choice.

I wish to supplement my earlier memorandum with an additional observation as to the problem with which we seek to deal, and some of its manifestations. There has been traditionally thought to be a rather sharp line dividing "de jure" segregation from "de facto" segregation, and it is commonly accepted that although most "de jure" segregation is in the South, there are scattered examples of it in the North. If "de jure" segregation is taken to mean that imposed by law, it could conceivably cover any of three different situations, depending on how broadly one wishes to take the definitional language:

(a) statute or school board regulation which by its terms requires all blacks to go to one set of schools, and all whites to another set of schools. This is the type of school system which prevailed in the South prior to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Brown v. Board of Education in 1954; it is the classical type of "de jure" segregation, and is largely now abandoned throughout the South and really has not been employed in the North (apart from the so-called border states) for a long time.

(b) The "gerrymander" in which the governing school regulation speaks in terms of geography, but in fact the district is carved up in such a way that one can tell merely by the way the lines are drawn that the basis for drawing them was race, or some other consideration external to school administration.

(c) The system which may prevail in some northern communities, whereby a perfectly rational system of geographic attendance zones is established, which are perfectly justifiable in terms of administrative considerations, and yet which were adopted by the local school board at least partly because they would make some schools largely white, and others largely black.

The courts have been by no means clear in distinguishing between these three different types of segregation which might fall under the brand definition of "de jure", but I think that in drafting a constitutional amendment one must consider the broadest possible definition as well as the narrower one. Section 1 of proposed Article 26 is designed to avoid validating types (a) and (b), which are the classical situations referred to by the term "de jure", but to validate type (c). The argument against validating the type of system described in (c) is that if it was adopted with a motive or partial motive of separating the races in the schools, it is "tainted" under the general principle of Brown and should be cast out. The arguments contrary, which I believe to be more weighty are basically practical ones; it is simply not feasible to try, as an issue of fact in a law suit, the intent of a multi-member school board in adopting one districting plan as opposed to another. If one were to make intent critical, it is conceivable that a district court could find a zoning plan of one city invalid under the Fourteenth Amendment, whereas a district court in the next state might find an identical zoning plan of an identical city valid on identical facts, giving the usual latitude to the trier of fact in assessing intent. This is simply not the way to "run a railroad"; and the principle decisions dealing with de lure segregation in the North have tended to go on the basis that a particular decision as to zoning could only have resulted from racial considerations.

Section 1 in effect substitutes the classical due process "rational connection" test for a test of actual intent of the various school board members. If the zoning plan adopted bears a reasonable relationship to educational needs—if fair-minded school board members could have selected it for non-racial reasons—it is valid regardless of the intent with which a particular school board may have chosen it. The result is to give some certainty to school boards, and not make every zoning attendance plan in a multi-racial school district depends on how the local federal district judge sizes up the state of mind of the various school board members.

Section 1. No provision of the Constitution shall be construed to prohibit the United States, any State, or any subdivision of either, from assigning persons to its educational facilities on the basis of geographic boundaries, provided only that such boundaries are reasonably related to school capacity, availability of transportation, safety or other similar considerations.

Section 2. No provision of the Constitution shall be construed to prohibit the United States, any State, or any subdivision of either, from permitting persons to choose or transfer voluntarily among its educational facilities, provided only that the opportunity to choose or transfer is available either to all persons within its jurisdiction or to any eligible person, when standards of eligibility are reasonably related to school capacity, availability of transportation, availability of curriculum, safety or other similar considerations.

ANALYSIS OF PROPOSED REHNQUIST AMENDMENT

(By William Taylor)

I. INTRODUCTION

In March 1970, William Rehnquist, as Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Office of Legal Counsel, wrote two memoranda to the Nixon White House proposing an amendment to the Constitution which would have sharply curtailed the powers of federal courts to remedy unlawful segregation of the public schools. The Rehnquist memo states that it is submitted in response to a request from Egil (Bud) Krogh, Jr., a White House assistant to John Erlichman.

Rehnquist's proposal, if it had become law, would effectively have nullified the Supreme Court's landmark decision in Brown v. Board of Education (347 U.S. 483) and would have permitted the continuation of deliberate racial segregation of the public schools by state and local officials in both the North and the South.

It is important to note that Rehnquist's amendment was not intended as an "anti-busing" proposal, i.e., one which would limit the use of a particular remedy for segregation. The amendment was proposed a year before the Supreme Court in the Swann case validated the use of busing as a tool for desegration and nowhere in his memo does Rehnquist mention "busing" as the issue. Rather, the memo is a straight-out pro-segregation proposal explicitly designed to legitimate deliberate racial segregation.

II. THE REHNQUIST AMENDMENT

Rehnquist's proposal for a 26th Amendment to the Constitution, as contained in a "second draft" on March 5, 1970, consists of two independent sections. Section I deals with "geographic" assignments to public schools and Section 2 deals with "freedom of choice." They will be analyzed in reverse order.

A. Freedom of choice

No provision of the Constitution shall be construed to prohibit the United States, or any State, or any subdivision of either from permitting persons to choose or transfer voluntarily among its education facilities, provided only that the opportunity to choose or transfer is available either to all persons within its jurisdiction or to any eligible person, when standards of eligibility are reasonably related to school capacity, availability of transportation, availability of curriculum, safety or other similar consideration.

To explicit purpose of this amendment was "validation of the type of freedom of choice plans used in Monroe, Green, and Raney," [1] three recent Supreme Court decisions that had determined that the plans were constitutionally inadequate remedies because they did not result in desegregation of the public schools.

In the mid 1960's "freedom of choice" plans were the last weapon left in the arsenal of massive resistance in the South. Under such plans, white and black parents were offered a choice of public schools in which their children could be enrolled. If they did not exercise their option to "transfer," their children would continue to be assigned to their previously racially segregated schools. Few white parents chose to enroll their children in previously all black schools. Many black parents did not exercise the transfer option either. In 1967, after an investigation, the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights found that among the factors which deterred transfer were "a fear (by black citizens) of retaliation and hostility from the white community," "actual violence, threats of violence and economic reprisal by white parents" in some areas of the South during the 1966–67 school year, and improper influence by public officials on black families.[2]

Freedom of choice was a very effective device in limiting school desegregation. In the 1964–65 school year, 10 years after the Brown decision and in the year that the Civil Rights Act of 1964 was enacted, only 2 black children in 100 in the 11 states of the Deep South were attending public school with whites. In 1968–69, after HEW in enforcing Title VI of the Civil Rights Act had declared that freedom of choice was impermissible unless it produced desegregation and right after the Supreme Court's decision to the same effect, 1 black child in 5 in the Deep South was attending school with whites. By 1972–73 when the Green decision had become fully effective almost half (46.3 percent) of black children were in desegregated schools.

Rehnquist's proposed constitutional amendment would have returned the South to the old order with only a handful of courageous black families standing as exceptions to the general regime of segregation. It is true that Rehnquist was ready to place a limit on his effort to legitimate freedom of choice plans. His memo suggests that it might not be prudent to "revive the type of plan used in [the] Goss [case]," a plan under which students were allowed to transfer only if they were in the minority race in the school to which they were assigned.

Rehnquist had no problem, however, in reviving a Green-type freedom of choice plan—a school district with only two schools, one which remained all black after the plan was instituted and the other almost all white, a district where any kind of geographic plan would have resulted in substantial desegregation (in fact, busing was being used to maintain segregation). And despite the explicit racial character of Goss-type plans, Rehnquist was amenable to reviving them as well, stating that "if one wishes to go all the way with freedom of choice, an amendment of broader scope could be drafted." [3]

B. Geographic assignment

Section 1 of the Rehnquist amendment reads as follows:

No provision of the Constitution shall be construed to prohibit the United States, any State, or any subdivision of either from assigning persons to its education facilities on the basis of geographic boundaries, provided only that such boundaries are reasonably related to school capacity, availability of transportation, safety or other similar considerations.

While on first reading, this provision may seem fairly innocuous, Rehnquist makes it plain in his memos that it is drafted to permit school boards to adopt geographic assignment plans that are consciously designed to segregate black and white students.

Rehnquist acknowledges that there is an argument against validating a geographic assignment system that was adopted by a school board "at least partly because they would make some schools largely white and others largely black." The argument, he says, is that such a system "is 'tainted' under the general principle of Brown and should be cast out." But, Rehnquist says, there are "more weighty" arguments on the other side, basically that "the intent of a multi-member school board" is difficult to determine and that an intent test could lead to different results in different jurisdictions.[4]

So, what Rehnquist arrives at is neither an intent test nor an effects test, but a "rational connection" test that would allow school boards very wide latitude to engage in all kinds of racially discriminatory schemes. He puts it this way:

If the zoning plan adopted bears a reasonable relationship to educational needs—if fair-minded school board members could have selected it for non-racial reasons—it is valid regardless of the intent with which a particular school board may have chosen it.[5]

The impact of the Rehnquist amendment would have been devastating. In the North, the amendment would anticipatorily have prevented the rulings of the Supreme Court in the Denver, Columbus, and Dayton cases that intentionally segregative actions by school boards violated the 14th Amendment even where there was no official policy of segregation. (These were all rulings from which Justice Rehnquist strongly dissented.) The Rehnquist amendment would have allowed a school board to deliberately select sites for schools in the heart of black neighborhoods, draw attandance zones to assure that the schools would be black and then justify its actions on grounds that a "fair-minded" school board "could have" adopted that type of plan for non-racial reasons.

In addition, the Rehnquist amendment would have allowed a school board to add mobile classrooms to overcrowded black schools rather than transfer students to nearly white schools that were under-enrolled. This would occur even if the president of the school board, in proposing the action said, "We must find a way to keep the niggers ' their own schools." Under the Rehnquist .mendment, the school board president's statement would be legally irrelevant because the use of mobile classrooms in geographic attendance zones is in some circumstances a standard technique "reasonably related": to dealing with problems of "school capacity."

If, in the North, the Rehnquist amendment would have barred whites from finding racially discriminatory schemes violative of the Constitution, in the South, it would have sanctioned racially discriminatory remedies for official segregation. A school board that for more than half a century had run a state-sanctioned racially dual school system could simply, with malice aforethought, substitute a racially discriminatory "geographic attendance" or "freedom of choice" plan and continue with very little change.

III. WHY REHNQUIST WANTED A CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT RATHER THAN A STATUTE

Some might say that in recommending that the Nixon Administration might proceed to curtail 14th Amendment rights by constitutional amendment rather than statute, Rehnquist was taking the responsible course, i.e., not tampering with the separation of powers. But the reasons stated by Rehnquist are far less elevated. He was concerned that if his proposals were put in statutory form they could well be ruled unconstitutional by the Supreme Court (". . . (A)ny Member of the political 'left' has available to him a court challenge . . ." "It is questionable whether the validation provisions of any statute would withstand Constitutional attack.")[6]

Moreover, Rehnquist says, passage of a constitutional amendment would insulate his proposals from easy change ("Likewise, what is validated by statute may be invalidated by repeal or amendment of the statute.") [7]

In short, Rehnquist wanted a constitutional amendment because he wanted to work foundamental and permanent change in the 14th Amendment.

IV. CONCLUSION

The implications of the Rehnquist amendment go far beyond the text of the amendment itself, as drastic as that is. Rehnquist clearly wanted to make fundamental changes in 14th Amendment jurisprudence. Even in the years when Plessy was still the law, the Supreme Court had set down some basic principles for the protection of black people. It had said that statutes that operate to discriminate violated equal protection even if they were not discriminatory on their face. (Yick Wo v. Hopkins) It had said that the Constitution requires the nullification of discriminatory schemes whether they are "ingenious or ingenuous, sophisticated or simple-minded" (Lane v. Wilson). It had said that racial classifications, explicit or implicit, were suspect and subject to the strictest scrutiny.

Rehnquist's amendment would have violated all those principles. It would have validated laws that operated to discriminate. It would have sanctioned discrimination as long as it was "sophisticated" rather than "simple-minded." And it would have used the loosest test of constitutionality—the "rational connection" test, one that had never been used where racial discrimination was at stake.

Rather than hinging the validity of freedom of choice plans on the presence or absence of physical or economic threats (which would have set off a new, time consuming round of litigation throughout the South), the Court chose the simpler gauge of whether the plan actually produced desegregation.

The great purposes for which the 14th Amendment was adopted to secure equal treatment under law for the newly emancipated slave would have been impaired by Rehnquist's amendment, perhaps forever.

It is not clear from the memo itself whose idea it initially was to attack school desegregation. But it is clear that in William Rehnquist, the Nixon Administration had an architect without peer—one who would tear down the newly built structure of equality and rebuild the old one of racism.

ANALYSIS OF PROPOSED REHNQUIST AMENDMENT

(By Eric Schapper)

"FREEDOM OF CHOICE" PLANS

"Freedom of choice" was in 1970 the primary technique adopted by southern officials to segregate the public schools. In the wake of Brown v. Board of Education many segregated school districts in the south adopted so-called "freedom of choice" plans. This approach marked a reversal of the normal educational practice of assigning students to specific schools, and was taken by school boards for the purpose of preserving segregation. Freedom of choice plans were overwhelming successful as methods to preserve segregation in the public schools. White parents refused to transfer their children to schools attended by blacks, and black parents were generally afraid to transfer their children to white schools. Harassment of the few black children who sought to attend white schools was widespread. U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, "Survey of School Desegregation in the Southern and Border States 1965-66," pp. 35-41, 51-52. Under freedom of choice plans across the south less than 1% of blacks ever attended schools with any whites. Id., p. 30.

In 1968 the Supreme Court unanimously held in three decisions that the use of freedom-of-choice plans was unconstitutional where they resulted in continued segregation of the public schools. Green v. School Board of New Kent County, 391 U.S. 430 (1968); Raney v. Board of Education of Gould School District, 391 U.S. 443 (1968); Monroe v. Board of Commissioners of City of Jackson, 391 U.S. 450 (1968). The Supreme Court noted that in one of these cases school officials frankly conceded the plan was adopted to assure continued segregation of the races. Monroe v. Board of Commissioners, 391 U.S. at 459. Under the freedom of choice plans in Green, Raney, and Monroe no white children opted to attend school with blacks, and only a handful of black children dared to attend white schools.

The Rehnquist proposal to constitutionalize freedom of choice was intended to preserve, not limit, the busing of school children. Because blacks and whites in rural southern counties frequently lived in the same neighborhoods, the operation of segregationist freedom of choice plans often resulted in the massive busing of students out of the neighborhoods in which they lived:

"The vehicles traveled long distances to carry Negro children past white schools to Negro schools, and white children past Negro schools to white schools."

U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, "Racial Isolation in the Public Schools," v. 1, p. 68. (1967). Green, was just such a case in which massive busing was used to preserve segregation under freedom of choice.

"There is no residential segregation in the country; persons of both races reside throughout. . . . The record indicates that . . . school buses . . . travel overlapping routes throughout the county to transport pupils to and from the . . . schools."

391 U.S. at 432.

"[H]ere the Board, by separately busing Negro children across the entire county to the "Negro" school, and the white children to the "white" school, is deliberately maintaining a segregated system.'

391 U.S. at 442 n. 6. In Green it was the civil rights plaintiffs who urged a return to neighborhood schools, and the proponents of freedom-of-choice that favored continued busing.

The Rehnquist Amendment would have overruled Brown and its progeny in two critical respects. First, the Amendment would have rendered freedom-of-choice plans constitutional regardless of the purpose for which they were adopted. This proposal to immunize the motives of school officials from judicial scrutiny was of considerable importance, since in many cases, including both Green and Monroe, those motives were clearly racial. Second, the Amendment would have relieved southern school officials of any obligation to desegregate the public schools once a freedom-of-choice plan was adopted. Had such a constitutional amendment been ratified, the public schools in the south would be virtually as segregated today as they were prior to Brown.

GERRYMANDERING OF ATTENDANCE ZONES

As of 1970 racial gerrymandering of school attendance zones was the primary method utilized by northern officials to segregate the public schools in that region. In 1967 the U.S. Commission Civil Rights concluded:

"In determining such discretionary matters as the location and size of schools, and the boundaries of attendance zones, the decisions of school officials may serve . . . to intensify . . . racial concentrations . . . [D]ecisions by school officials in these areas frequently have had the effect of reinforcing racial separation of students."

"Racial Isolation in the Public Schools," v. 1, p. 202. The Commission's report contained a detailed discussion of instances of international racial gerrymandering of attendance zones. Id. at 42-51.

As of 1970 it was clear that such intentionally discriminatory conduct was unconstitutional, and the federal courts had repeatedly invalidated such racist schemes Clemons v. Board of Education, 228 F. 2d 853 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 350 U.S. 1006 (1956); Taylor v. Board of Education, 191 F. Supp. 181 (S.D.N.Y.), aff'd 294 U.S. 940 (1961); Wheeler v. Durham City Board of Education, 346 F.2d 768 (4th Cir. 1965); Evans v. Buchanan, 207 F. Supp. 820 (D. Del. 1962); Northcross v. Board of Education, 333 F.2d 661, 663 (1964); Monroe v. Board of Commissioners, 244 F. Supp. 353 (W.D. Tenn. 1965); Webb v. Board of Education, 223 F. Supp. 466, 468-69 (N.D. Ill. 1963).

The Rehnquist Amendment was expressly intended to overturn these decisions, and to overrule Brown insofar as that case forbade intentional racial gerrymandering to segregate the public schools. The Amendment forbade racial gerrymandering in some extremely blatant cases, but the existence of a racist motive would itself have been entirely permissible. With that exception, a deliberate return to separate-but-equal school would have been permitted by the Rehnquist plan to the extent that segregation could be achieved by international racial discrimination in the drawing of school attendance zones.

REHNQUIST PLAN SOUGHT HALT OF DESEGREGATION

(By David G. Savage)

WASHINGTON.—Chief Justice-designate William H. Rehnquist, while a top attorney in the Nixon Administration, drafted a proposed constitutional amendment that would have halted the desegregation of the nation's public schools.

Rehnquist's plan, evidently prepared at the request of the White House in 1970 but never publicly proposed, sought to overturn Supreme Court rulings in the late 1960s that brought about desegregation in the South. The amendment also would have halted busing for desegregation in the rest of the nation.

NOT PREVIOUSLY RELEASED

In a memo accompanying the proposal, Rehnquist says his amendment would stop federal courts from interfering even if local officials set up school attendance boundaries "with a motive of partial motive of separating the races in the schools."

The memo and the proposed amendment, made available to The Times on Saturday, were not included in material released to the Senate last month by the Justice Department.

Veteran civil rights attorney William Taylor said Saturday that the proposed amendment, if adopted, would have "effectively nullified" the Supreme Court's landmark desegregation decision in the 1954 case of Brown vs. Board of Education "and preserved segregated schools."

Eric Schnapper, an attorney for the NAACP Legal Defense Fund, called the memo "a smoking gun * * * which confirms everybody's worst fears about his views on racial segregation."

But Justice Department spokesman Terry Eastland downplayed the memo. "I don't see much that's new in this. The civil rights groups are pulling out all the stops, but I don't see any reason why this will change any vote one way or the other," Eastland said.

The Senate begins debate this week on Rehnquist's nomination as chief justice. Although civil rights groups and some Senate Democrats have bitterly opposed President Reagan's choice of Rehnquist to lead the high court, his supporters have been confident that he will win confirmation with a solid majority.

Under the constitutional revision drafted by Rehnquist, then an assistant attorney general in the Justice Department's Office of Legal Counsel, school officials would be immune from federal court suits if they assigned children to schools in their neighborhood or if they permitted them a "freedom of choice" among schools.

In 1968, a unanimous Supreme Court, frustrated by Southern resistance to desegregation, struck down a "freedom of choice" plan in Virginia. Although said to be a remedy for official segregation, the court concluded that "freedom of choice" was actually a dodge for it, because white parents were permitted to bus their children to the one predominantly white school in the county.

PROVIDES CRITERIA FOR CHOICE

Rehnquist's proposal, dated March 4, 1970, would have revised the Constitution so courts could not prohibit plans from "permitting persons to choose or transfer voluntarily among its educational facilities, provided only that the opportunity . . . is available to all persons within its jurisdiction or to any eligible person" whose numbers could be limited by "school capacity, availability of transportation, safety or other similar considerations."

Another part of the proposed Article 26 of the Constitution would have declared legal any school plans that assign "persons to its educational facilities on the basis of geographic boundaries, provided only that such boundaries are reasonably related to school capacity, availability of transportation safety or other similar considerations."

Rehnquist's memo was sent to Egil Krogh Jr., then a deputy assistant to President Richard M. Nixon for domestic affairs. His proposal did not endorse de jure segregation, "the type of school system which prevailed in the South prior to the decision of the Supreme Court in Brown vs Board of Education in 1954," Rehnquist noted. Before this decision, black students were sent by law to all-black schools, and white students were assigned to all-white schools.

GEOGRAPHIC ATTENDANCE ZONES

Neither would it support a "gerrymander" of school boundaries where a "district is carved up in such a way that one can tell merely by the way the lines are drawn that the basis for drawing them was race," Rehnquist wrote.

However, he wrote, school officials may have set up a "perfectly rational system of geographic attendance zones" that are "perfectly justifiable * * * and yet which were adopted by the local school board at least partly because they would make some schools largely white and others largely black."

Rehnquist continued: "The argument against validating the type of system described (above) is that if it was adopted with a motive or partial motive of separating the races in the schools, it is 'tainted' under the general principle of Brown and should be cast out. The arguments contrary, which I believe to be more weighty, are basically practical ones."

Courts should not be asked to discern the "intent of a multimember school board in adopting one districting plan as opposed to another," he argued.

"If the zoning plan adopted bears a reasonable relationship to educational needs—if fair-minded school board members could have selected it for non-racial reasons—it is valid regardless of the intent which a particular school board may have chosen it," Rehnquist concluded.

SEPARATING BLACKS, WHITES

Schnapper, a civil rights lawyer, said the Rehnquist proposal "makes it crystal clear that intentional segregation by government officials ought to be permitted."

After 1971, federal courts throughout the nation ordered desegregation when school boards were found to have juggled attendance zones or built new schools in a way that tended to separate black and white children.

Rehnquist's proposal was "a well-thought-out plan to overrule the Brown decision," Schnapper said. "He had one part to facilitate segregation in the North through gerrymandering and another part to facilitate it in the South through freedom of choice. This is also absolutely consistent with the view expressed in the memo to Justice (Robert H.) Jackson."

In a controversial memo written in 1952, Rehnquist, then a Supreme Court law clerk for Jackson, said the "separate but equal" doctrine of racial segregation enunciated in 1896 was "right." In his confirmation hearings in 1971 and again this year, Rehnquist has maintained that the views expressed were Jackson's, not his.

JUSTICE REFUSES COMMENT

Rehnquist, contacted Saturday through Supreme Court spokeswoman Toni House, refused to comment on the newly disclosed memo.

In 14 years on the high court, Rehnquist has repeatedly dissented from decisions in favor of desegregation or affirmative action, saying that the Constitution requires "racially neutral" actions. In 1973, in his second year on the court, Rehnquist filed a lone dissent against a desegregation order for Denver, saying that the Constitution does not "require school boards to affirmatively undertake to achieve racial mixing in the schools."

Eastland of the Justice Department defended the 1970 memo, saying: "There were a lot of questions unsettled then. This would not have been an extreme or unusual position. There was also a lot of anti-busing sentiment in the country that helped elect Richard Nixon."

TEXT OF THE PROPOSED AMENDMENT

Following is the text of the second (and apparently final) draft of a proposed constitutional amendment on school desegregation drafted in 1970 when William H. Rehnquist was assistant attorney general in charge of the Office of Legal Counsel.

PROPOSED ARTICLE 26

Section 1. No provision of the Constitution shall be construed to prohibit the United States, any State, or any subdivision of either, from assigning persons to its educational facilities on the basis of geographic boundaries, provided only that such boundaries are reasonably related to school capacity, availability of transportation, safety or other similar considerations.

Section 2. No provision of the Constitution shall be construed to prohibit the United States, any State, or any subdivision of either, from permitting persons to choose or transfer voluntarily among its educational facilities, provided only that the opportunity to choose or transfer is available to all persons within its jurisdiction or to any eligible person, when standards of eligibility are reasonably related to school capacity, availability of transportation, safety or other similar considerations.

REHNQUIST AND JUSTICE

(By Dorothy Gilliam)

In an article in the New York Times in 1985, Supreme Court Justice William Rehnquist said "I don't think that my views have changed much from the time" when he was a law clerk to Justice Robert H. Jackson in the early 1950s. That may be exactly the problem with Justice Rehnquist. He hasn't changed over the years.

The Senate Judiciary Committee voted 13 to 5 last month, after lengthy hearings, to approve Justice Rehnquist's nomination as chief justice of the United States.

Sometime this week the full Senate will take up Justice Rehnquist's nomination to an office that would make him guardian of our traditions of rule of law and equal justice for all.

The Senate should reject Justice Rehnquist, not because of his conservative ideology, but because he has displayed a consistent hostility to equal justice under law in three interrelated areas—commitment to the principles of nondiscrimination, enforcement of the Bill of Rights and enforcement of civil rights statutes.

Setting out his early views regarding discrimination in several memoranda that he wrote for Justice Jackson during his clerkship, Rehnquist argued that the infamous-separate-but-equal doctrine of Plessy v. Ferguson that gave legal sanction to segregation "was right."

For Rehnquist the principle of majority rule included a right on the part of the majority to rule unpopular minorities in a discriminatory manner.

Therefore, on the eve of the 1954 Supreme Court school desegregation decision that helped open up the society to black Americans, Rehnquist, the young law clerk, was urging that racial segregation not be ruled unconstitutional.

During Rehnquist's 15 years on the bench, the Supreme Court has decided 14 race discrimination cases brought by or on behalf of blacks in which he cast the deciding vote.

In every one of these race discrimination cases, he cast that vote against the black complainant. (Although he has in some instances voted to uphold a claim of racial discrimination against a black, he has done that only in cases in which all other members of the court, or all but one other member, agreed that the black complainant should prevail.)

Moreover, Rehnquist was the only member of the Supreme Court who favored granting tax-exempt status for racially segregated private schools. According to Elaine Jones of the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund Inc. in a recent analysis of the Rehnquist judicial record, "Judge Rehnquist reached the wrong result . . . not because he did not understand the tax code, but because, as was the case when he wrote his memoranda for Justice Jackson, [he] did not understand that racial discrimination is an evil of extraordinary gravity."

But Justice Rehnquist showed a similar blind consistency in sex discrimination cases. The only member of the court who says that the government can deny unemployment benefits to a jobless woman who is seeking work if she is pregnant or has recently given birth, Rehnquist also was the sole dissenter in six cases in which a statute or practice that discriminated on the basis of sex was held unconstitutional.

In 124 Supreme Court cases regarding enforcement of the Bill of Rights, Justice Rehnquist cast the deciding vote against enforcement of the constitutional claim 120 times. The society of professional journalists, Sigma Delta Chi, found that on First Amendment free speech rights alone, Rehnquist cast an unfavorable vote in 69 of 80 cases. And if Rehnquist's views about religion were to prevail, the federal and state governments would be free to champion religious worship aggressively.

His record on enforcing civil rights statutes is equally dismal. Among 83 cases in which members of the court have disagreed about how to interpret or apply a statute, Rehnquist has voted on 80 occasions for the interpretation or application least favorable to minorities, women, the elderly or the disabled, according to the NAACP/LEDF analysis.

"To put someone like this in a public office so entrusted with responsibility would be tragic and perverse," said Ralph Neas of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights.

Anyone who has the welfare of our nation at heart must agree. Our country's emergency from the long night of inequality and oppression was too costly and painful, and the gains too fragile, to jeopardize with Rehnquist's elevation.●

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further morning business?

If not, morning business is closed.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS, FISCAL YEAR 1987

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now turn to the consideration of Calendar No. 833, H.R. 5234, the Interior appropriations bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 5234) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations, with amendments, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the Department of the Interior and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987, and for other purposes, namely:

TITLE I—DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

BUREAU OF LAND MANAGEMENT

MANAGEMENT OF LANDS AND RESOURCES

For expenses necessary for protection, use, improvement, development, disposal, cadastral surveying, classification, and performance of other functions, including maintenance of facilities, as authorized by law, in the management of lands and their resources under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Land Management, including the general administration of the Bureau of Land Management, [$380,370,000] *$474,029,000, of which $75,000,000 for firefighting and $5,000,000 for insect and disease control projects, including grasshoppers, shall remain available until expended[: Provided, That none of the funds appropriated herein may be expended to approve mining operations conducted under the Mining Law of 1872 (30 U.S.C. 22, et seq.) unless operators are required to post a reclamation bond for all operations involving significant surface disturbance, including all disturbances of more than five acres per year, such bond to be for an amount estimated by the Bureau of Land Management to cover the costs of reclamation: Provided further, That evidence of an equivalent bond posted with a State agency may be accepted in lieu of a separate bond].

CONSTRUCTION AND ACCESS

For acquisition of lands and interests therein, and construction of buildings, recreation facilities, roads, trails, and appurtenant facilities, [$1,200,000] $2,800,000, to remain available until expended.

PAYMENTS IN LIEU OF TAXES

[SEC. 107. (a) No funds provided in this title may be expended by the Department of the Interior for the preparation for, or conduct of, pre-leasing and leasing activities (including but not limited to: calls for information, tract selection, notices of sale, receipt of bids and award of leases) of lands within: An area of the Outer Continental Shelf, as defined in section 2(a) of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act (43 U.S.C. 1331(a)), located in the Atlantic Ocean, bounded by the following line: from the intersection of the seaward limit of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts territorial sea and the 71 degree west longitude line south along that longitude line to its intersection with the line which passes between blocks 598 and 642 on Outer Continental Shelf protraction diagram NK 19-10; then along that line in an easterly direction to its intersection with the line between blocks 600 and 601 of protraction diagram NK 19-11; then in a northerly direction along that line to the intersection with the 60 meter isobath between blocks 204 and 205 of protraction diagram NK 19-11; then along the 60 meter isobath, starting in a roughly southeasterly direction; then turning northeast and north until such isobath intersects the maritime boundary between Canada and the United States of America, then north northeasterly along this boundary until this line intersects the 60 meter isobath at the northern edge of block 851 of protraction diagram NK 19-6; then along a line that lies between blocks 851 and 807 of protraction diagram NK 19-6 in a westerly direction to the first point of intersection with the seaward limit of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts territorial sea; then southwesterly along the seaward limit of the territorial sea to the point of beginning at the intersection of the seaward limit of the territorial sea and the 71 degree west longitude line.

[(b) The following blocks are excluded from the described area: In protraction diagram NK 19-10, blocks numbered 474 through 478, 516 through 524, 560 through 568, and 604 through 612; in protraction diagram NK 19-6, blocks numbered 969 through 971; in protraction diagram NK 19-5, blocks numbered 1005 through 1008; and in protraction diagram NK 19-8, blocks numbered 37 through 40, 80 through 84, 124 through 127, and 168 through 169.

[(c) The following blocks are included in the described area: In protraction diagram NK 19-11, blocks numbered 633 through 644, 677 through 686, 721 through 724, 765 through 767, 809 through 810, and 853; in protraction diagram NK 19-9, blocks numbered 106, 150, 194, 238, 239, and 283; and in protraction diagram NK 19-6, blocks numbered 854, 899, 929, 943, 944, and 987.

[(2) On Outer Continental Shelf protraction diagram NJ 19-2; blocks 8, 9, 17-19, 51-52, 53, 54, 61-63, 95-98, 139, 140.

[(3) On Outer Continental Shelf protraction diagram NK 19-10; blocks 916, 917, 921, 922, 960, 961, 965, 966, 1003-1005, 1009, 1011.

[(f) Nothing in this section shall prohibit the Secretary of the Interior from granting contracts for scientific study, the results of which could be used in making future leasing decisions in the planning area and in preparing environmental impact statements as required by the National Environmental Policy Act.

[(g) References made to blocks, protraction diagrams, and isobaths are to such blocks, protraction diagrams, and isobaths as they appear on the map entitled Outer Continental Shelf of the North Atlantic from 39° to 45° North Latitude (Map No. MMS-10), prepared by the United States Department of the Interior, Minerals Management Service, Atlantic OCS Region.]

SEC. [108.] 107. None of the funds appropriated or otherwise made available pursuant to this Act shall be obligated or expended to finance changing the name of the mountain located 63 degrees, 04 minutes, 15 seconds west, presently named and referred to as Mount McKinley.

SEC. [109.] 108. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, appropriations in this title shall be available to provide insurance on official motor vehicles, aircraft, and boats operated by the Department of the Interior in Canada and Mexico.

SEC. [110.] 109. No funds provided in this title may be used to detail any employee to an organization unless such detail is in accordance with Office of Personnel Management regulations.

[SEC. 111. (a) The Secretary of the Interior may consider and accept, as part of the Outer Continental Shelf oil and gas leasing program for 1987 to 1992, any recommendation included in any proposal submitted to him with respect to lease sales on the California Outer Continental Shelf by the cochairmen of the Congressional panel established pursuant to Public Law 99-190 or by the Governor of California on May 7, 1986. The major components of those proposals shall be examined in the final environmental impact statement for the program. Consideration or acceptance of any such recommendation shall not require the preparation of a revised or supplemental draft environmental impact statement.

[(b) The Secretary shall submit a copy of the draft proposed final leasing program for offshore California to the cochairmen of the negotiating group referred to in subsection (a) who shall have a period of 30 days in which to review such program and provide their comments and the comments of the negotiating group on it to the Secretary prior to its submission to the President and the Congress. When submitting the proposed final leasing program to the President and the Congress in accordance with section 18(d) (43 U.S.C. section 1344 (d)) of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act, such submission shall indicate in detail why any specific portion of the proposals referred to in subsection (a) of this section was not accepted.

[(c) Prior to the approval of the Final Program, referenced in subsection (a), the Secretary may conduct prelease activities for proposed California OCS Lease Sales 95, 91, and 119 and may make changes in those sales on the basis of comments submitted by the Congressional negotiating group or others, except that the Secretary may not issue a: (1) call for information and nominations for Sale 95 prior to March 1, 1987, and no draft environmental impact statement shall be published for Sale 91 sooner than 90 days after the Secretary's submission of the draft of the proposed Final Five Year Program to the members of the Congressional panel, and (2) final notice of lease sale for Lease Sale 91 prior to January 1, 1989.

[(d) The members of Congress designated under Sec. 111 of Public Law 99-190 (99 Stat. 1243) are hereby authorized to continue as the Congressional negotiating group and to negotiate with the Department of the Interior, to provide the Secretary of the Interior with the appropriate range of advice, including proposals, and to review and comment on proposals by the Department of the Interior with respect to future oil and gas leasing and protection of lands on the California Outer Continental Shelf.]

SEC. [112.] 110. Notwithstanding any other law, the Secretary of the Interior shall convey without reimbursement to the State of Montana no later than December 31, 1986, all of the right, including all water rights, title, and interest of the United States in and to the fish hatchery property located south of Miles City, Montana, and known as the Miles City National Fish Hatchery, consisting of 168.22 acres, more or less, of land, together with any improvements and related personal property thereon.

["(j)(1) Any vessel, rig, platform, or other structure used for the purpose of exploration or production of oil and gas on the Outer Continental Shelf south of 49 degrees North latitude shall be built—

["(A) in the United States; and

["(B) from articles, materials, or supplies at least 50 percent of which, by cost, shall have been mined, produced, or manufactured, as the case may be, in the United States.

["(2) The requirements of paragraph (1) shall not apply to any vessel, rig, platform, or other structure which was built, which is being built, or for which a building contract has been executed, on or before October 1, 1986.

["(3) The Secretary may waive—

["(A) the requirement in paragraph (1)(B) whenever the Secretary determines that 50 percent of the articles, materials, or supplies for a vessel, rig, platform, or other structure cannot be mined, produced, or manufactured, as the case may be, in the United States; and

["(B) the requirement in paragraph (1)(A) upon application, with respect to any classification of vessels, rigs, platforms, or other structures on a specific lease, when the Secretary determines that at least 50 percent of such classification, as calculated by number and by weight, which are to be built for exploration or production activities under such lease will be built in the United States in compliance with the requirements of paragraph (1)(A).".

[SEC. 115. None of the funds made available by this Act for fiscal year 1987 to the Office of the Secretary, Department of the Interior, shall be expended to submit to the United States District Court for Eastern California any settlement with respect to Westlands v. the United States, et al. (CV-F-81-245-EDP).

[SEC. 116. The Secretary of the Interior shall designate the visitor center to be associated with the headquarters of the Illinois and Michigan Canal National Heritage Corridor as the "George M. O'Brien Visitor Center" in recognition of the leadership and contributions of Representative George M. O'Brien with respect to the creation and establishment of this national heritage corridor.

[SEC. 117. Notwithstanding any other provisions of the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act of 1965, Public Law 88-578, as amended, or other law, Land and Water Conservation Fund assisted land in Berkeley, Illinois, assisted under project No. 17-00180, may be exchanged for existing public lands if Land and Water Conservation Fund conversion criteria regarding equal fair market value and reasonably equivalent use and location are met.]

SEC. 111. None of the funds provided by this Act shall be expended by the Secretary of the Interior to promulgate final regulations concerning paleontological research on Federal lands until the Secretary has received the National Academy of Sciences' report concerning the permitting and post-permitting regulations concerning paleontological research and until the Secretary has, within 30 days, submitted a report to the appropriate committees of the Congress comparing the National Academy of Sciences' report with the proposed regulations of the Department of the Interior.

TITLE II—RELATED AGENCIES

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

FOREST SERVICE

FOREST RESEARCH

For necessary expenses of forest research as authorized by law, [$129,183,000] $123,282,000, of which [$3,400,000] $6,500,000 shall remain available until expended for competitive research grants, as authorized by section 5 of Public Law 95-307.

STATE AND PRIVATE FORESTRY

For necessary expenses of cooperating with, and providing technical and financial assistance to States, Territories, possessions, and others; and for forest pest management activities, [$57,671,000] $61,771,000, to remain available until expended, to carry out activities authorized in Public Law 95-313: Provided, That a grant of [$3,000,000] $2,800,000 shall be made to the State of Minnesota for the purposes authorized by section 6 of Public Law 95-495.

NATIONAL FOREST SYSTEM

For necessary expenses of the Forest Service, not otherwise provided for, for management, protection, improvement, and utilization of the National Forest System, and for repayment of advances made in the preceding fiscal year pursuant to 16 U.S.C. 556d for forest fire protection and emergency rehabilitation of National Forest System lands, and including administrative expenses associated with the management of funds provided under the heads "Forest Research", "State and Private Forestry", "National Forest System", "Construction", and "Land Acquisition", [$996,687,000] $1,144,894,000, of which [$144,767,000] $245,780,000 for reforestation and timber stand improvement, cooperative law enforcement, firefighting, and maintenance of forest development roads and trails shall remain available for obligation until September 30, 1988.

The Forest Service is encouraged to complete as expeditiously as possible development of land and resource management plans to meet the requirements of the National Forest Management Act (NFMA) of 1976. Under the provisions of section 6(c) of the NFMA (16 U.S.C. 1600), and notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Forest Service shall continue the management of units of the National Forest System under existing management plans pending the completion of land and resource management plans developed in accordance with the Act.

CONSTRUCTION

For necessary expenses of the Forest Service, not otherwise provided for, for construction, [$192,409,000] $276,130,000, to remain available until expended, of which [$36,736,000] $15,476,000 is for construction and acquisition of buildings and other facilities; and [$155,673,000] $260,654,000 is for construction of forest roads and trails by the Forest Service as authorized by 16 U.S.C. 532-538 and 23 U.S.C. 101 and 205: Provided, That funds becoming available in fiscal year 1987 under the Act of March 4, 1913 (16 U.S.C. 501), shall be transferred to the General Fund of the Treasury of the United States: Provided further, That the Forest Service shall achieve a 5 per centum reduction in the average cost per road mile as compared to the adjusted fiscal year 1985 average cost by a combination of the following two actions: (1) the application of road construction standards used to construct or reconstruct Forest Service roads, purchaser credit roads, or purchaser elect roads, and (2) reducing the direct personnel cost of designing and constructing roads to these standards: Provided further, That the Forest Service shall take administrative cost saving actions, including reductions in indirect personnel, overhead charges, and productivity improvements, in fiscal year 1987 in a manner so as to achieve a 5 per centum reduction in the average cost per road mile as compared to the adjusted fiscal year 1985 average cost: Provided further, That such actions shall be taken so as to achieve these 5 per centum reductions in each Forest Service region.

Pursuant to section (b)(2), The Act of December 23, 1980, Public Law 96-581 (94 Stat. 3372), not to exceed $300,000 from the sale of 18.13 acres to the Flagstaff Medical Regional Center, Flagstaff, Arizona, are hereby appropriated and made available, until expended, to the Forest Service for the specific purpose of contract administration and overruns resulting from the construction of administrative improvements at the Mt. Elden Work Center, Flagstaff, Arizona: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall ensure that outlays associated with such action shall not cause the total outlays during fiscal year 1987 from Forest Service land acquisition and construction activities and construction activities in region 3 (including Arizona and New Mexico) to exceed the total that otherwise would have occurred as a result of enactment of this or previous appropriations Acts.

There is authorized to be appropriated out of the Highway Trust Fund (other than the Mass Transit Account), $9,915,000 to be transferred to the Forest Service for road construction to serve the Mount St. Helens National Volcanic Monument, Washington: Provided, That the funds authorized by this section shall be available for obligation in the same manner and to the same extent as if such funds were apportioned under chapter 1 of title 23, United States Code, except the Federal share of the cost of this project shall be 100 per centum, and such funds shall remain available until expended: Provided further, That the foregoing shall not alter the amount of funds or contract authority that would otherwise be available for road construction to serve any State other than the State of Washington.

LAND ACQUISITION

For expenses necessary to carry out the provisions of the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act of 1965, as amended (16 U.S.C. 4601-4-11), including administrative expenses, and for acquisition of land or waters, or interest therein, in accordance with statutory authority applicable to the Forest Service, [$39,936,000] $31,906,000, to be derived from the Land and Water Conservation Fund, and $3,000,000 for acquisition of land and interests therein in the Columbia River Gorge, Oregon and Washington, as depicted on a map entitled "Columbia Gorge Acquisitions—1986" on file with the Forest Service, pursuant to the Department of Agriculture Organic Act of 1956 (7 U.S.C. 428(a)), to remain available until expended.

ACQUISITION OF LANDS FOR NATIONAL FORESTS SPECIAL ACTS

For acquisition of land within the exterior boundaries of the Cache and Uinta National Forests, Utah; the Toiyabe National Forest, Nevada; and the Angeles, San Bernardino, and Cleveland National Forests, California, as authorized by law, $966,000, to be derived from forest receipts.

ACQUISITION OF LANDS TO COMPLETE LAND EXCHANGES

For acquisition of lands, to be derived from funds deposited by State, county, or municipal governments, public school districts, or other public school authorities pursuant to the Act of December 4, 1967, as amended (16 U.S.C. 484a), to remain available until expended.

RANGE BETTERMENT FUND

For necessary expenses of range rehabilitation, protection, and improvement, 50 per centum of all moneys received during the prior fiscal year, as fees for grazing domestic livestock on lands in National Forests in the sixteen Western States, pursuant to section 401(b)(1) of Public Law 94-579, as amended, to remain available until expended.

MISCELLANEOUS TRUST FUNDS

For expenses authorized by 16 U.S.C. 1643(b), $90,000 to remain available until expended, to be derived from the fund established pursuant to the above Act.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS, FOREST SERVICE

Appropriations to the Forest Service for the current fiscal year shall be available for: (a) purchase of not to exceed 245 passenger motor vehicles of which eight will be used primarily for law enforcement purposes and of which 235 shall be for replacement only, of which acquisition of 148 passenger motor vehicles shall be from excess sources, and hire of such vehicles; operation and maintenance of aircraft, the purchase of not to exceed two for replacement only, and acquisition of 58 aircraft from excess sources; notwithstanding other provisions of law, existing aircraft being replaced may be sold, with proceeds derived or trade-in value used to offset the purchase price for the replacement aircraft; (b) services pursuant to the second sentence of section 706(a) of the Organic Act of 1944 (7 U.S.C. 2225), and not to exceed $100,000 for employment under 5 U.S.C. 3109; (c) uniform allowances for each uniformed employee of the Forest Service, not in excess of $400 annually; (d) purchase, erection, and alteration of buildings and other public improvements (7 U.S.C. 2250); (e) acquisition of land, waters, and interests therein, pursuant to the Act of August 3, 1956 (7 U.S.C. 428a); (f) for expenses pursuant to the Volunteers in the National Forest Act of 1972 (16 U.S.C. 558a, 558d, 558a note); and (g) for debt collection contracts in accordance with 31 U.S.C. 3718(c).

None of the funds made available under this Act shall be obligated or expended to change the boundaries of any region, to abolish any region, to move or close any regional office for research, State and private forestry, or National Forest System administration of the Forest Service, Department of Agriculture, without the consent of the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations and the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry in the United States Senate and the Committee on Agriculture in the United States House of Representatives.

Any appropriations or funds available to the Forest Service may be advanced to the National Forest System appropriation for the emergency rehabilitation of burned-over lands under its jurisdiction.

[Appropriations and funds available to the Forest Service shall be available to comply with the requirements of section 313(a) of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, as amended (33 U.S.C. 1323(a)).]

The appropriation structure for the Forest Service may not be altered without advance approval of the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations.

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any appropriations or funds available to the Forest Service may be used to reimburse employees for the cost of State licenses and certification fees pursuant to their Forest Service position and that are necessary to comply with State laws, regulations, and requirements.

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of Agriculture is hereafter authorized to use from any receipts from the sale of timber a sum equal to the lowest acceptable bid for the construction of roads under the purchaser election program as described and authorized in section 14(i) of the National Forest Management Act of 1976.

Funds appropriated to the Forest Service shall be available for assistance to or through the Agency for International Development and the Office of International Cooperation and Development in connection with forest and rangeland research, and technical information and assistance in foreign countries.

Funds previously appropriated for timber salvage sales may be recovered from receipts deposited for use by the applicable national forest and credited to the Forest Service Permanent Appropriations to be expended for timber salvage sales from any national forest: Provided, That no less than [$26,781,000] $26,000,000 shall be made available to the Forest Service for obligation in fiscal year 1987 from the Timber Salvage Sales Fund appropriation.

None of the funds made available to the Forest Service under this Act shall be subject to transfer under the provisions of section 702(b) of the Department of Agriculture Organic Act of 1944 (7 U.S.C. 2257) or 7 U.S.C. 147b unless the proposed transfer is approved in advance by the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations in compliance with the reprograming procedures contained in House Report 97-942.

No funds appropriated to the Forest Service shall be transferred to the Working Capital Fund of the Department of Agriculture without the approval of the Chief of the Forest Service.

[Funds available to the Forest Service shall be available to conduct a program of not less than $1,000,000 for high priority projects within the scope of the approved budget which shall be carried out by Youth Conservation Corps as if authorized by the Act of August 13, 1970, as amended by Public Law 93-408.

The Forest Service is authorized and directed to negotiate, within 90 days after the enactment of this Act, settlement of claims against the United States resulting from a forest fire in the Black Hills National Forest.]

The Forest Service is hereby authorized and directed to pay certain claims against the United States resulting from a forest fire in the Black Hills National Forest on August 21-25, 1985. The Forest Service is directed to pay the eleven claims filed September 18, 1985, in the amount of $605,538.44, and to negotiate any other claims filed within 60 days of the date of enactment of this Act. The Forest Service is directed to pay these claims from funds available for firefighting purposes and is also directed to submit a budget request to replace firefighting funds expended for this purpose.

In order to provide for more comprehensive and effective management, the exterior boundary of the Gifford Pinchot National Forest in the State of Washington is hereby modified as generally depicted on a map entitled "Boundary Modification, Gifford Pinchot National Forest," dated August 1986. Such map and legal description of the boundary modification of said National Forest shall be on file and available for public inspection in the Office of the Chief, Forest Service, Department of Agriculture and in appropriate field offices of that agency. This boundary modification shall not affect valid existing rights or interests in existing land use authorizations.

No more than $500,000 made available to the Forest Service for obligation in fiscal year 1987 shall be expended to implement the provisions of sections 3 and 4 of the Forest and Rangeland Renewable Resources Planning Act of 1974 (the Act of August 17, 1974; 88 Stat. 476, as amended; 16 U.S.C. 1601 (note), 1600-1614).

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

CLEAN COAL TECHNOLOGY

The Secretary of Energy pursuant to the Federal Nonnuclear Energy Research and Development Act of 1974 (Public Law 93-577), shall—

(1) no later than thirty days after the date of the enactment of this Act, publish in the Federal Register a notice soliciting statements of interest in, and informational proposals for, projects meeting the cost-sharing criteria contained under this head in Public Law 99-190 and employing emerging clean coal technologies which are capable of retrofitting, repowering, or modernizing existing facilities, which statements and informational proposals are to be submitted to the Secretary within [sixty] eighty days after the publication of such notice; and

(2) no later than [one hundred and twenty days after the receipt of statements of interest and informational proposals] March 6, 1987, submit to Congress a report that analyzes the information contained in such statements of interest and informational proposals and assesses the potential usefulness and commercial viability of each emerging clean coal technology for which a statement of interest or informational proposal has been received.

FOSSIL ENERGY RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

(INCLUDING TRANSFER OF FUNDS)

For necessary expenses in carrying out fossil energy research and development activities, under the authority of the Department of Energy Organization Act (Public Law 95-91), including the acquisition of interest, including defeasible and equitable interests in any real property or any facility or for plant or facility acquisition or expansion, [$314,512,000] $242,947,000, to remain available until expended, of which $221,000 is for the functions of the Office of the Federal Inspector for the Alaska Natural Gas Transportation System established pursuant to the authority of Public Law 94-586 (90 Stat. 2908-2909), and $2,074,000 to be derived by transfer from unobligated balances in the "Fossil energy construction" account, and in addition, $437,000 to be derived by transfer from amounts derived from fees for guarantees of obligations collected pursuant to section 19 of the Federal Nonnuclear Energy Research and Development Act of 1974, as amended (42 U.S.C. 5919), and deposited in the "Energy security reserve" established by Public Law 96-126: Provided, That no part of the sum herein made available shall be used for the field testing of nuclear explosives in the recovery of oil and gas.

Of the funds herein provided, [$30,000,000] $23,500,000 is for implementation of the June, 1984 multiyear, cost-shared magnetohydrodynamics program targeted on proof-of-concept testing: Provided further, That 20 per centum private sector cash or in-kind contributions shall be required for obligations in fiscal year 1987, and for each subsequent fiscal year's obligations private sector contributions shall increase by 5 per centum over the life of the proof-of-concept plan: Provided further, That existing facilities, equipment, and supplies, or previously expended research or development funds are not cost-sharing for the purposes of this appropriation, except as amortized, depreciated, or expensed in normal business practice: Provided further, That cost-sharing shall not be required for the costs of constructing or operating Government-owned facilities or for the costs of Government organizations, National Laboratories, or universities and such costs shall not be used in calculating the required percentage for private sector contributions: Provided further, That private sector contribution percentages need not be met on each contract but must be met in total for each fiscal year.

NAVAL PETROLEUM AND OIL SHALE RESERVES

For necessary expenses in carrying out naval petroleum and oil shale reserves activities, including the purchase of not to exceed 1 passenger motor vehicle, for replacement only, $122,177,000, to remain available until expended.

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, including Public Law 81-152, the Secretary of Energy (hereafter "the Secretary") is directed to sell all of the United States' interest in Naval Petroleum Reserves Numbered 1 and 3 (hereafter "NPR Nos. 1 and 3"), including its interest in any contract for joint, unit, or other cooperative plans covering NPR 1 and 3 or in any corporate, partnership or other business entity to which the United States' interests in NPR Nos. 1 and 3 has been transferred. The provisions of chapter 641 of title 10, United States Code, shall cease to apply with respect to NPR Nos. 1 and 3 from the date the Secretary prescribes in arranging the sale of the United States interest therein.

The Secretary is directed to arrange sale of the United States' interest in Naval Petroleum Reserves Numbered 1 and 3; the Secretary is directed to attempt, insofar as practicable and consistent with the provisions of this section, to consummate such sales by June 30, 1987 with the initial minimum payment of $200,000,000 to the Treasury on or before September 30, 1987. In order to arrange and conduct a sale, the Secretary is authorized to: (1) create new corporations, partnerships or other business entities, and transfer the United States' interest to the new entities, without their being subject to the requirements of the Government Corporation Control Act (31 U.S.C. 919 et seq.); (2) enter into contracts, including contracts for investment banking and other professional services, without regard to any provision of law or regulation prescribing procedures to be followed in the formation of contracts or terms and conditions to be included in contracts, or regulating the performance of contracts; (3) use funds appropriated for any function or program of the Department of Energy, including the Naval Petroleum Reserves; and (4) negotiate, in consultation with the Secretary of the Interior, a settlement of the State of California's claim of entitlement to lands granted under the Act of March 3, 1953 (10 Stat. 244), and settle such claim out of the proceeds of sale, without paying such funds into the U.S. Treasury.

Before any condemnation proceedings are instituted, an effort shall be made to acquire the property by negotiation, unless, in the judgment of the Secretary, the effort to acquire the property by negotiation would be futile or unduly time-consuming, or otherwise not in the public interest.

In arranging the sale of the United States interest in NPR No. 1, the Secretary shall assure through the provisions in any contract of sale of such interest that: (1) the interest of small and independent refiners is protected by affording small refiners the right of first refusal to purchase at least 50 percent of the crude oil produced from NPR No. 1 for a period of five years from the date of sale and at least 25 percent of the crude oil produced from NPR No. 1 for a period of five years thereafter; (2) no subsequent contract for the purchase of crude oil from the United States share of NPR No. 1 would result in any person obtaining control, directly or indirectly, over more than 20 percent of the estimated annual crude oil production produced from NPR No. 1; and (3) any offer to sell crude oil from NPR No. 1 will be preceded by written notification to each of the small or independent refiners in existence which purchased crude oil from NPR No. 1 within the past 24 months.

Following the sale, the Secretary shall report to Congress on the steps that were taken to protect the interests of small refiners.

Sections 160 (a), (b), and (d) of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (42 U.S.C. 6240 (a), (b), and (d)) shall cease to apply to the Naval Petroleum Reserves Numbered 1 and 3.

ENERGY CONSERVATION

For necessary expenses in carrying out energy conservation activities, [$285,825,000] $246,413,000, to remain available until expended[, of which $10,000,000 shall be available for a grant for an energy research facility at Tufts University when specifically authorized by an Act of Congress: Provided, That award of such grant may be made only upon approval of an appropriate peer review panel convened by the Department of Energy for the specific purpose of reviewing such grant application and subject to conditions, if any, contained, in legislation specifically authorizing such project: Provided further, That $2,500,000 of the amount provided under this heading shall be available for continuing a research and development initiative with the National Laboratories for new technologies up to proof-of-concept testing to increase significantly the energy efficiency of processes that produce steel: Provided further, That obligation of funds for these activities shall be contingent on an agreement to provide cash or in-kind contributions to the initiative or to other collaborative research and development activities related to the purpose of the initiative equal to 30 percent of the amount of Federal Government obligations: Provided further, That existing facilities, equipment, and supplies, or previously expended research or development funds are not acceptable as contributions for the purposes of this appropriation, except as amortized, depreciated, or expensed in normal business practice: Provided further, That the total Federal expenditure under this proviso shall be repaid up to one and one-half times from the proceeds of the commercial sale, lease, manufacture, or use of technologies developed under this proviso, at a rate of one-fourth of all net proceeds: Provided further, That none of the funds included in this appropriation may be used to carry out the requirements of Part E of title III of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (42 U.S.C. 6341–6346)].

ENERGY INFORMATION ADMINISTRATION

For necessary expenses in carrying out the activities of the Energy Information Administration, [$60,361,000] $59,651,000[: Provided, That hereafter the information survey entitled "Manufacturing Energy Consumption Survey (EIA–846F)" shall contain a section III entitled "Fuel Switching Capability To and From Oil" in essentially the form submitted to the Office of Management and Budget on March 14, 1986, and shall be issued to survey energy consumption in 1985 and every three years thereafter].

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS, DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appropriations under this Act for the current fiscal year shall be available for hire of passenger motor vehicles; hire, maintenance, and operation of aircraft; purchase, repair, and cleaning of uniforms; and reimbursement to the General Services Administration for security guard services.

From appropriations under this Act, transfers of sums may be made to other agencies of the Government for the performance of work for which the appropriation is made.

None of the funds made available to the Department of Energy under this Act shall be used to implement or finance authorized price support or loan guarantee programs unless specific provision is made for such programs in an appropriations Act.

The Secretary is authorized to accept lands, buildings, equipment, and other contributions from public and private sources and to prosecute projects in cooperation with other agencies, Federal, State, private, or foreign: Provided, That revenues and other moneys received by or for the account of the Department of Energy or otherwise generated by sale of products in connection with projects of the Department appropriated under this Act may be retained by the Secretary of Energy, to be available until expended, and used only for plant construction, operation, costs, and payments to cost-sharing entities as provided in appropriate cost-sharing contracts or agreements: Provided further, That the remainder of revenues after the making of such payments shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts: Provided further, That any contract, agreement, or provision thereof entered into by the Secretary pursuant to this authority shall not be executed prior to the expiration of 30 calendar days (not including any day in which either House of Congress is not in session because of adjournment of more than three calendar days to a day certain) from the receipt by the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate of a full and comprehensive report on such project, including the facts and circumstances relied upon in support of the proposed project.

The Secretary of Energy may transfer to the Emergency Preparedness appropriation such funds as are necessary to meet any unforeseen emergency needs from any funds available to the Department of Energy from this Act.

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES

HEALTH RESOURCES AND SERVICES ADMINISTRATION

INDIAN HEALTH SERVICES

For expenses necessary to carry out the Act of August 5, 1954 (68 Stat. 674), the Indian Self-Determination Act, the Indian Health Care Improvement Act, and titles III and XXI and section 338G of the Public Health Service Act with respect to the Indian Health Service, including hire of passenger motor vehicles and aircraft; purchase of reprints; purchase and erection of portable buildings; payments for telephone service in private residences in the field, when authorized under regulations approved by the Secretary; [$836,336,000] $833,106,000: Provided, That funds made available to tribes and tribal organizations through grants and contracts authorized by the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act of 1975 (88 Stat. 2203; 25 U.S.C. 450), shall remain available until September 30, 1988*; and $10,000,000 shall remain available until expended, for the establishment of an Indian Catastrophic Health Emergency Fund (hereinafter referred to as the "Fund"). Hereafter, the Fund is to cover the Indian Health Service portion of the medical expenses of catastrophic illness falling within the responsibility of the Service and shall be administered by the Secretary of Health and Human Services, acting through the central office of the Indian Health Service. No part of the Fund or its administration shall be subject to contract or grant under the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act (Public Law 93-638). There shall be deposited into the Fund all amounts recovered under the authority of the Federal Medical Care Recovery Act (42 U.S.C. 2651, et seq.), which shall become available for obligation upon receipt and which shall remain available for obligation until expended. The Fund shall not be used to pay for health services provided to eligible Indians to the extent that alternate Federal, State, local, or private insurance resources for payment: (1) are available and accessible to the beneficiary; or (2) would be available and accessible if the beneficiary were to apply for them; or (3) would be available and accessible to other citizens similarly situated under Federal, State, or local law or regulation or private insurance program notwithstanding Indian Health Service eligibility or residency on or off a Federal Indian reservation.* Funds provided in this Act may be used for one-year contracts and grants which are to be performed in two fiscal years, so long as the total obligation is recorded in the year for which the funds are appropriated: Provided further, That the amounts collected by the Secretary of Health and Human Services under the authority of title IV of the Indian Health Care Improvement Act shall be available until September 30, 1988, for the purpose of achieving compliance with the applicable conditions and requirements of titles XVIII and XIX of the Social Security Act (exclusive of planning, design, construction of new facilities, or major renovation of existing Indian Health Service facilities): Provided further, That funding contained herein, and in any earlier appropriations Acts for scholarship programs under section 103 of the Indian Health Care Improvement Act and section 338G of the Public Health Service Act with respect to the Indian Health Service shall remain available for expenditure until September 30, 1988.

INDIAN HEALTH FACILITIES

For construction, major repair, improvement, and equipment of health and related auxiliary facilities, including quarters for personnel; preparation of plans, specifications, and drawings; acquisition of sites, purchase and erection of portable buildings, purchases of trailers and for provision of domestic and community sanitation facilities for Indians, as authorized by section 7 of the Act of August 5, 1954 (42 U.S.C. 2004a), the Indian Self-Determination Act and the Indian Health Care Improvement Act, [$54,921,000] $60,920,000, to remain available until expended.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS, INDIAN HEALTH SERVICE

Appropriations in this Act to the Indian Health Service, available for salaries and expenses, shall be available for services as authorized by 5 U.S.C. 3109 but at rates not to exceed the per diem equivalent to the rate for GS–18, and for uniforms or allowances therefor as authorized by law (35 U.S.C. 5901–5902), and for expenses of attendance at meetings which are concerned with the functions or activities for which the appropriation is made or which will contribute to improved conduct, supervision, or management of those functions or activities: Provided, That none of the funds appropriated under this Act to the Indian Health Service shall be available for the initial lease of permanent structures without advance provision therefor in appropriations Acts: Provided further, That non-Indian patients may be extended health care at all Indian Health Service facilities, if such care can be extended without impairing the ability of the Indian Health Service to fulfill its responsibility to provide health care to Indians served by such facilities and subject to such reasonable charges as the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall prescribe, the proceeds of which, together with funds recovered under the Federal Medical Care Recovery Act (42 U.S.C. 2651–53), shall be deposited in the fund established by sections 401 and 402 of the Indian Health Care Improvement Act: Provided further, That funds appropriated to the Indian Health Service in this Act, except those used for administrative and program direction purposes, shall not be subject to limitations directed at curtailing Federal travel and transportation: Provided further, That with the exception of service units which currently have a billing policy, the Indian Health Service shall not initiate any further action to bill Indians in order to collect from third-party payers nor to charge those Indians who may have the economic means to pay unless and until such time as Congress has agreed upon a specific policy to do so and has directed the Indian Health Service to implement such a policy: Provided further, That the Secretary of Health and Human Services may authorize special retention pay under paragraph (4) of 37 U.S.C. 302(a) to any regular or reserve officer for the period during which the officer is obligated under section 338B of the Public Health Service Act and assigned and providing direct health services or serving the officer's obligation as a specialist: Provided further, That hereafter the Indian Health Service may seek subrogation of claims including but not limited to auto accident claims, including no-fault claims, personal injury, disease, or disability claims, and worker's compensation claims, the proceeds of which shall be credited to the funds established by sections 401 and 402 of the Indian Health Care Improvement Act[: Provided further, That none of the funds made available in this Act to the Indian Health Service shall be used to implement additional changes in resource allocation methodology until the proposed changes in detail for fiscal year 1987 and the long-range plans for such changes have been submitted to and approved by the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations]: Provided further, That section 103(c) of the Indian Self-Determination Act (88 Stat. 2206) is amended by adding the following sentence at the end thereof: "For purposes of section 224 of the Public Health Service Act of July 1, 1944 (42 U.S.C. 233(a)), as added by section 4 of the Act of December 31, 1970 (84 Stat. 1870) and redesignated by section 301(c) of the Act of November 18, 1971 (85 Stat. 463), and chapter 171 and section 1346 of title 28, United States Code, with respect to claims for personal injury, including death, resulting from the performance of medical, surgical, dental, or related functions, including the conduct of clinical studies or investigations, a tribal organization or Indian contractor carrying out a contract, grant agreement, or cooperative agreement under sections 103 or 104(b) of this Act or the so called Buy-Indian Act in the Act of April 30, 1908 (35 Stat. 71) or section 23 of the Act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. 861) (25 U.S.C. 47) is deemed to be part of the Public Health Service in the Department of Health and Human Services while carrying out such contract or agreement and its employees (including those acting on behalf of the organization or contractor as provided in section 2671 of title 28) are deemed employees of the Service while acting within the scope of their employment in carrying out the contract or agreement.": Provided further, That notwithstanding any other provision of law or regulation, for purposes of acquiring sites for new hospital facilities in Anchorage, Alaska and in Kotzebue, Alaska, the Secretary of Health and Human Services may exchange any or all interests in any land administered by the Secretary in Alaska for any or all interests in any land of the State of Alaska, any political subdivision of the State, or any corporation, including the University of Alaska and may receive money if necessary to equalize the exchange: Provided further, That any such receipts shall be credited to the Indian Health facilities appropriation and be used to offset the cost of construction of these two facilities.

SEC. 306. None of the funds provided in this Act to any department or agency shall be obligated or expended to provide a personal cook, chauffeur, or other personal servants to any officer or employee of such department or agency.

SEC. 307. Except for lands described by sections 105 and 106 of Public Law 96-560, section 103 of Public Law 96-550, section 5(d)(1) of Public Law 96-312, and except for land in the States of Alaska, and lands in the National Forest system released to management for any use the Secretary of Agriculture deems appropriate through the land management planning process by any statement or other Act of Congress designating components of the National Wilderness Preservation System now in effect or hereinafter enacted, and except to carry out the obligations and responsibilities of the Secretary of the Interior under section 17(k)(1)(A) and (B) of the Mineral Leasing Act of 1920 (30 U.S.C. 226), none of the funds provided in this Act shall be obligated for any aspect of the processing or issuance of permits or leases pertaining to exploration for or development of coal, oil, gas, oil shale, phosphate, potassium, sulphur, gilsonite, or geothermal resources on Federal lands within any component of the National Wilderness Preservation System or within any Forest Service RARE II areas recommended for wilderness designation or allocated to further planning in Executive Communication 1504, Ninety-sixth Congress (House Document numbered 96-119); or within any lands designated by Congress as wilderness study areas or within Bureau of Land Management wilderness study areas: Provided, That nothing in this section shall prohibit the expenditure of funds for any aspect of the processing or issuance of permits pertaining to exploration for or development of the mineral resources described in this section, within any component of the National Wilderness Preservation System now in effect or hereinafter enacted, any Forest Service RARE II areas recommended for wilderness designation or allocated to further planning, within any lands designated by Congress as wilderness study areas, or Bureau of Land Management wilderness study areas, under valid existing rights, or leases validly issued in accordance with all applicable Federal, State, and local laws or valid mineral rights in existence prior to October 1, 1982: Provided further, That funds provided in this Act may be used by the Secretary of Agriculture in any area of National Forest lands or the Secretary of the Interior to issue under their existing authority in any area of National Forest or public lands withdrawn pursuant to this Act such permits as may be necessary to conduct prospecting, seismic surveys, and core sampling conducted by helicopter or other means not requiring construction of roads or improvement of existing roads or ways, for the purpose of gathering information about and inventorying energy, mineral, and other resource values of such area, if such activity is carried out in a manner compatible with the preservation of the wilderness environment: Provided further, That seismic activities involving the use of explosives shall not be permitted in designated wilderness areas: Provided further, That funds provided in this Act may be used by the Secretary of the Interior to augment recurring surveys of the mineral values of wilderness areas pursuant to section 4(d)(2) of the Wilderness Act and acquire information on other national forest and public land areas withdrawn pursuant to this Act, by conducting in conjunction with the Secretary of Energy, the National Laboratories, or other Federal agencies, as appropriate, such mineral inventories of areas withdrawn pursuant to this Act as he deems appropriate. These inventories shall be conducted in a manner compatible with the preservation of the wilderness environment through the use of methods including core sampling conducted by helicopter; geophysical techniques such as induced polarization, synthetic aperture radar, magnetic and gravity surveys; geochemical techniques including stream sediment reconnaissance and x-ray diffraction analysis; land satellites; or any other methods he deems appropriate. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to conduct inventories or segments of inventories, such as data analysis activities, by contract with private entities deemed by him to be qualified to engage in such activities whenever he has determined that such contracts would decrease Federal expenditures and would produce comparable or superior results: Provided further, That in carrying out any such inventory or surveys, where National Forest System lands are involved, the Secretary of the Interior shall consult with the Secretary of Agriculture concerning any activities affecting surface resources: Provided further, That funds provided in this Act may be used by the Secretary of the Interior to issue oil and gas leases for the subsurface of any lands designated by Congress as wilderness study areas, that are immediately adjacent to producing oil and gas fields or areas that are prospectively valuable. Such leases shall allow no surface occupancy and may be entered only by directional drilling from outside the wilderness study area or other nonsurface disturbing methods.

SEC. 308. None of the funds provided in this Act shall be used to evaluate, consider, process, or award oil, gas, or geothermal leases on Federal lands in the Mount Baker-Snoqualmie National Forest, State of Washington, within the hydrographic boundaries of the Cedar River municipal watershed upstream of river mile 21.6, the Green River municipal watershed upstream of river mile 61.0, the North Fork of the Tolt River proposed municipal watershed upstream of river mile 11.7, and the South Fork Tolt River municipal watershed upstream of river mile 8.4.

SEC. 309. No assessments may be levied against any program, budget activity, subactivity, or project funded by this Act unless such assessments and the basis therefor are presented to the Committees on Appropriations and are approved by such committees.

SEC. 310. Employment funded by this Act shall not be subject to any personnel ceiling or other personnel restriction for permanent or other than permanent employment except as provided by law.

SEC. 311. Notwithstanding any other provisions of law, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Energy, and the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution are authorized to enter into contracts with State and local governmental entities, including local fire districts, for procurement of services in the presuppression, detection, and suppression of fires on any units within their jurisdiction.

SEC. 312. None of the funds provided by this Act to the United States Fish and Wildlife Service may be obligated or expended to plan for, conduct, or supervise deer hunting on the Loxahatchee National Wildlife Refuge.

SEC. 313. None of the funds made available to the Department of the Interior or the Forest Service during fiscal year 1987 by this or any other Act may be used to implement the proposed jurisdictional interchange program until enactment of legislation which authorizes the jurisdictional interchange.

[SEC. 314. No funds appropriated or made available under this or any other Act shall be used by the executive branch for soliciting proposals, preparing or reviewing studies or drafting proposals designed to aid in or achieve the transfer out of Federal ownership, management or control in whole or in part the facilities and functions of Naval Petroleum Reserve Numbered 1 (Elk Hills), located in Kern County, California, established by Executive order of the President, dated September 2, 1912, and Naval Petroleum Reserve Numbered 3 (Teapot Dome), located in Wyoming, established by Executive order of the President, dated April 30, 1915, until such activities have been specifically authorized by an Act of Congress hereafter enacted and unless specific provision is made for such activities in an appropriations Act: Provided, That this provision shall not apply to the authority of the Administrator of the General Services Administration pursuant to the Federal Property and Administrative Service Act of 1949, as amended, and the Surplus Property Act of 1944 to sell or otherwise dispose of surplus property.

SEC. 314. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, funds appropriated by this or any other Act shall be available to the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands on the same basis as such funds were available during fiscal year 1986 until alternative funding is available under the terms of the Compact of Free Association Act of 1985 (Public Law 99-239).

SEC. 315. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any lease for those Federal lands within the Gallatin and Flathead National Forests which were affected by case CV-82-42-BU of the United States District Court for the District of Montana, Butte Division, for which the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Agriculture has directed or assented to the suspension of operations and production pursuant to section 39 of the Act of February 25, 1920 (30 U.S.C. 184) shall be excepted from the limits on aggregate acreage set out in that Act: Provided, That any person, association or corporation receiving relief under this section shall bring its aggregate acreage into compliance with the provisions of the Act of February 25, 1920 (30 U.S.C. 184) within six months from the date the suspension of operation and production ends.

SEC. 316. No funds appropriated by this Act shall be available for the implementation or enforcement of any rule or regulation of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service, Department of the Interior, requiring the use of steel shot in connection with the hunting of waterfowl in any State of the United States unless the appropriate State regulatory authority approves such implementation.

SEC. 317. Section 221 of the Biomass Energy and Alcohol Fuels Act of 1980 (Public Law 96-294; 42 U.S.C. 8821) is amended by striking out "June 30, 1986" and inserting in lieu thereof "June 30, 1987".

SEC. 318. Section 12(b)(7)(iv) of the Act of January 2, 1976 (Public Law 94-204), as amended, is amended by striking the word "ten" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "seven".

SEC. 319. To assure that National Forest and Bureau of Land Management timber included in sales defaulted by the purchaser, or returned under the Federal Timber Contract Payment Modification Act, is available for resale, the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of Interior are authorized to resell, as part of the sales programs provided for by this Act, all such timber, and to permit necessary roads and other developments, notwithstanding any other provision of law. Sales that are reoffered may be modified without subjecting the decision to reoffer the sale to administrative appeal or judicial review. This section shall not apply to any decision on the determination of damages due to the Government for defaulted or canceled contracts.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, my understanding is that we will defer further business on this bill until tomorrow morning. It will be the pending business at that time and opening statements will consume very little time.

So I might advise those Members who have comments about or interest in that legislation they should expect to be on the floor very promptly on tomorrow.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

□ 1700

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BOSCHWITZ). Without objection, it is so ordered.

REHABILITATION ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1986

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate turn to Calendar Order No. 809, the Rehabilitation Act Amendments of 1986.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2515) to reauthorize the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Connecticut?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Labor and Human Resources, with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following:

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Rehabilitation Act Amendments of 1986".

TITLE I—GENERAL PROVISIONS AMENDMENTS

STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

SEC. 101. Section 2 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (hereinafter referred to as the "Act") is amended by inserting immediately before the period at the end thereof a comma and "for individuals with handicaps in order to maximize their employability, independence, and integration into the workplace and the community".

REHABILITATION SERVICES ADMINISTRATION

SEC. 102. Section 3 of the Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) The Secretary shall take such action as necessary to ensure that—

"(1) the staffing of the Rehabilitation Services Administration shall be in sufficient numbers to meet program needs and at levels which will attract and maintain the most qualified personnel; and

"(2) such staff includes individuals who have training and experience in the provision of rehabilitation services and that staff competencies meet professional standards.".

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 103. (a) Paragraph (5) of section 7 of the Act is amended—

(1) by inserting "recreational," in subparagraph (B) after "cultural, social,";

(2) by inserting "employability" after "individual's" the second time it appears;

(3) by striking out "and" at the end of subparagraph (F);

(4) by striking out the period at the end of subparagraph (G) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and "and"; and

(5) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(H) where appropriate, the provision of rehabilitation engineering services to any individual with a handicap to assess and develop the individual's capacities to perform adequately in a work environment.".

(b) Section 7 of the Act is amended by redesignating paragraphs (6) through (10) as paragraphs (7) through (11), respectively, and by inserting after paragraph (5) the following new paragraph:

"(6) The term 'employability', with respect to an individual, means a determination that, with the provision of vocational rehabilitation services, the individual is likely to enter or retain, as a primary objective, full-time employment, and when appropriate, part-time employment, consistent with the capacities or abilities of the individual in the competitive labor market or any other vocational outcome the Secretary may determine.".

(c) Section 7 of the Act is further amended by redesignating paragraphs (11), (12), and (13) as paragraphs (13), (14), and (15), respectively, and by inserting before paragraph (13) (as redesignated) the following new paragraph:

"(12) The term 'rehabilitation engineering' means the systematic application of technologies, engineering methodologies, or scientific principles to meet the needs of and address the barriers confronted by individuals with handicaps in areas which include education, rehabilitation, employment, transportation, independent living, and recreation.".

(d) Paragraph (13) of section 7 of the Act (as redesignated by subsection (c) of this section) is amended—

(1) by striking out "or" in subparagraph (C) and inserting in lieu thereof "and";

(2) by striking out "and" at the end of subparagraph (K);

(3) by striking out the period at the end of subparagraph (L) and inserting in lieu thereof a comma and "and"; and

(4) by adding at the end thereof "(M) psychosocial rehabilitation services for individuals with chronic mental illness.".

(e) Paragraph (15) of section 7 of the Act (as redesignated by subsection (c) of this section) is amended to read as follows:

"(15) The term 'severe handicap' with respect to an individual means an individual with handicaps—

"(i) who has a severe physical or mental disability which seriously limits one or more functional capacities (such as mobility, communication, self-care, self-direction, interpersonal skills, work tolerance, or work skills) in terms of employability;

"(ii) whose vocational rehabilitation can be expected to require multiple vocational rehabilitation services over an extended period of time; and

"(iii) who has one or more physical or mental disabilities resulting from amputation, arthritis, autism, blindness, burn injury, cancer, cerebral palsy, cystic fibrosis, deafness, head injury, heart disease, hemiplegia, hemophilia, respiratory or pulmonary dysfunction, mental retardation, mental illness, multiple sclerosis, muscular dystrophy, musculo-skeletal disorders, neurological disorders (including stroke and epilepsy), paraplegia, quadriplegia, and other spinal cord conditions, sickle cell anemia, specific learning disability, end-stage renal disease, or other disability or combination of disabilities determined on the basis of an evaluation of rehabilitation potential to cause comparable substantial functional limitation.".

(f) Section 7 of the Act is further amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraphs (14) and (15) as paragraphs (16) and (17), respectively; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(18) The term 'supported employment' means competitive work in integrated work settings—

"(A) for individuals with severe handicaps for whom competitive employment has not traditionally occurred, or

"(B) for individuals for whom competitive employment has been interrupted or intermittent as a result of a severe disability, and who, because of their handicap, need ongoing support services to perform such work. Such term includes transitional employment for individuals with chronic mental illness. For the purpose of this Act, supported employment as defined in this paragraph may be considered an acceptable outcome for employability.".

MONITORING EVALUATION AND ADMINISTRATION

SEC. 104. (a) Section 12(a) of the Act is amended by striking out paragraph (5) and inserting in lieu thereof the following new paragraph:

"(5) provide monitoring and conduct evaluations.".

(b) Section 12(b) of the Act is amended—

(1) by inserting "(1)" after the subsection designation; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(2) In carrying out the provisions of this Act, the Commissioner shall appoint such task forces as may be necessary to collect and disseminate information in order to improve the ability of the Commissioner to carry out the provisions of this Act.".

EVALUATION

SEC. 105. (a) The first sentence of section 14(a) of the Act is amended to read as follows: "For the purpose of improving program management and effectiveness, the Commissioner shall evaluate all the programs authorized by this Act, their general effectiveness in relation to their cost, their impact on related programs, and their structure and mechanisms for delivery of services, using appropriate methodology and evaluative research designs.".

(b) Section 14 of the Act is amended by striking out "Secretary" each time it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "Commissioner".

TRANSFER OF FUNDS

SEC. 106. Section 16 of the Act is amended to read as follows:

"TRANSFER OF FUNDS

"SEC. 16. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, no funds appropriated under this Act for any research program or activity may be used for any purpose other than that for which the funds were specifically authorized.

"(b) No more than one-half of 1 percent of funds appropriated for discretionary grants, contracts, or cooperative agreements authorized by this Act may be used for the purpose of providing non-Federal panels of experts to review applications for such grants, contracts, or cooperative agreements.".

REVIEW OF APPLICATIONS

SEC. 107. (a) The Act is amended by inserting after section 16 the following new section:

"REVIEW OF APPLICATIONS

"SEC. 17. Applications for grants or contracts in excess of $125,000 authorized to be funded under this Act shall be reviewed by panels of experts which shall include a majority of non-Federal members. Non-Federal members may be provided travel, per diem, and consultant fees not to exceed the rate provided for grade GS-18 of the General Schedule under section 5332 of title 5, United States Code.".

(b) The table of contents of the Act is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 16 the following:

(2) by striking out "$12,900,000 for the fiscal year 1984, $13,600,000 for the fiscal year 1985, and $14,300,000 for the fiscal year 1986" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "$15,860,000 for fiscal year 1987, $16,790,000 for fiscal year 1988, $17,800,000 for fiscal year 1989, and $18,900,000 for fiscal year 1990".

SPECIAL DEMONSTRATION PROGRAMS

SEC. 406. Section 311 of the Act is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(d)(1)(A) The Commissioner may make grants to public and nonprofit rehabilitation facilities, designated State units, and other public and private agencies and organizations for the cost of developing special projects and demonstrations providing supported employment.

"(B) Not less than one such grant shall be nationwide in scope. The grant shall (i) identify community-based models that can be replicated, (ii) identify impediments to the development of supported employment programs (including funding and cost considerations), and (iii) develop a mechanism to explore the use of existing community-based rehabilitation facilities as well as other community-based programs.

"(2)(A) The Commissioner may make grants to public agencies and nonprofit private organizations for the cost of providing technical assistance to States in implementing part C of title VI of this Act.

"(B) Not less than one such grant shall be nationwide in scope. Each eligible applicant must have experience in training and provision of supported employment services.

"(3)(A) On June 1, 1988, and on each subsequent June 1, the Commissioner shall submit a report to the Congress on activities assisted under paragraph (1) for the preceding fiscal year which includes—

"(i) a list of the grants awarded under this subsection;

"(ii) the number of individuals with severe handicaps served by each grant recipient, the average cost to provide support services to each such individual, and the average wage paid to each such individual; and

"(iii) the recommendations of the projects under paragraph (1)(B).

"(B) Each such report shall also include activities assisted under paragraph (2) for the preceding fiscal year, including (i) a list of the grants awarded under subsection (2), (ii) the nature of technical assistance activities undertaken, and (iii) recommended areas where additional technical assistance is necessary.

"(4) There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out the provisions of this subsection $9,000,000 for the fiscal year 1987, $9,520,000 for the fiscal year 1988, $10,080,000 for the fiscal year 1989, and $10,690,000 for the fiscal year 1990.

"(e)(1) The Commissioner, subject to the provisions of section 306, shall make grants in accordance with the provisions of this subsection for the purpose of developing, expanding, and disseminating model statewide transitional planning services for severely handicapped youth. In order to facilitate similar model transitional programs, each grantee under this subsection shall—

"(A) collect data documenting the effectiveness of the project, including data on the outcome of the individuals served; and

"(B) disseminate the information to other States.

"(2) No grant may be made under this subsection unless an application is submitted to the Commissioner at such time, in such form, and in accordance with such procedures as the Commissioner may require.

"(3)(A) One grant under this subsection shall be made to a public agency in a predominantly urban State in New England for an existing model statewide transitional planning services program.

"(B) The application for the grant specified in subparagraph (A) shall—

"(i) provide assurances that a single office or agency of the State has responsibility for managing the referral process assigned under the model program for which assistance is sought;

"(ii) provide assurances that the schools involved, in consultation with families, initiate a referral at least two years prior to the anticipated date on which each such student will finish courses of study at the school;

"(iii) provide assurances that individualized transition plans will be developed by the schools and adult providers working cooperatively;

"(iv) provide assurances that case management responsibilities, together with appropriate tracking of each case designed to report on the progress of the handicapped individual, will be part of the responsibility of the office or agency designed under clause (i); and

"(v) contain such other assurances as the Commissioner may reasonably require.

"(4)(A)(i) A second grant authorized by this subsection shall be made to a public agency in a predominantly rural western State.

"(ii) A third grant authorized by this subsection shall be made to a public agency or nonprofit private organization in a predominantly rural southwestern State.

"(B) Each application for a grant submitted pursuant to subparagraph (A) of this paragraph shall describe model transitional planning services for both severely and mildly handicapped youth designed to develop procedures, strategies, and techniques which may be replicated successfully in other rural States.

"(5) There are authorized to be appropriated $450,000 for fiscal year 1987, $475,830 for fiscal year 1988, $504,427 for fiscal year 1989, and $535,550 for fiscal year 1990 to carry out the provisions of this subsection.".

SPECIAL RECREATIONAL PROGRAMS

SEC. 407. Section 316 of the Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 316. (a)(1) The Commissioner, subject to the provisions of section 306, shall make grants to States, public agencies, and nonprofit private organizations for paying part or all of the cost of initiation of recreation programs to provide handicapped individuals with recreational activities and related experiences to aid in the mobility, socialization, independence, and community integration of such individuals. The programs authorized to be assisted under this section may include, but are not limited to, leisure education, leisure networking, leisure resource development, physical education and sports, scouting and camping, 4-H activities, music, dancing, handicrafts, art, and homemaking. Whenever possible and appropriate, such programs and activities should be provided in settings with nonhandicapped peers. Programs and activities under this section shall be designed to demonstrate ways in which such programs assist in maximizing the independence and integration of individuals with handicaps.

"(2) Each such grant shall be made for a minimum of a three-year period.

"(3) No grant may be made under this section unless the agreement with respect to such grant contains provisions to assure that, to the extent possible, existing resources will be used to carry out the activities for which the grant is to be made, and that with respect to children the activities for which the grant is to be made will be conducted before or after school.

"(b) There are authorized to be appropriated $2,330,000 for fiscal year 1987, $2,470,000 for fiscal year 1988, $2,620,000 for fiscal year 1989, and $2,780,000 for fiscal year 1990, to carry out this section.".

TITLE V—NATIONAL COUNCIL ON THE HANDICAPPED

PURPOSE OF THE COUNCIL

(1) by inserting "(1)" after the subsection designation; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(2) The purpose of the National Council is to promote the full integration, independence, and productivity of handicapped individuals in the community, schools, the workplace and all other aspects of American life.".

DUTIES OF THE COUNCIL

SEC. 502. (a)(1) Section 401(a)(4) of the Act is amended to read as follows:

"(4) review and evaluate on a continuing basis—

"(A) all policies, programs, and activities concerning handicapped individuals and persons with disabilities conducted or assisted by Federal departments and agencies, including programs established or assisted under this Act or under the Developmental Disabilities Assistance and Bill of Rights Act; and

"(B) all statutes pertaining to Federal programs which assisted such handicapped individuals and persons with disabilities; in order to assess the effectiveness of such policies, programs, activities, and statutes in meeting the needs of handicapped individuals and persons with disabilities;".

(2) Section 401(a) of the Act is amended—

(A) by redesignating clauses (5), (6), and (7), as clauses (6), (7), and (8), respectively, and

(B) by inserting after clause (4) the following:

"(5) assess the extent to which such policies, programs, and activities provide incentives or disincentives to the establishment of community-based services for handicapped individuals, promote the full integration of such individuals in the community, in schools, and in the workplace, and contribute to the independence and dignity of such individuals;".

(3) Section 401(a)(8) of the Act as redesignated by paragraph (2) is amended by inserting "legislative proposals" after "recommendations".

(b) Section 401(b) of the Act is amended to read as follows:

"(b) The National Council shall—

"(1) examine existing data regarding circumstances of disabled citizens with respect to employment, income, transportation, housing, community living, education, discrimination, health services, and participation in community activities;

"(2) based on data developed under clause (1), establish goals to be reached by the year 2000 for individuals with handicaps in each of the areas referred to in clause (1), and recommend strategies for meeting such goals;

"(3) issue a report outlining the goals and strategies outlined in clauses (1) and (2) within 6 months after the date of enactment of the Rehabilitation Act Amendments of 1986; and

"(4) submit an annual report, beginning on January 30, 1989, to the President and to the Congress outlining the progress of the Nation in meeting such goals.".

SEC. 603. (a) Title V of the Act is amended by inserting after section 507 the following new section:

"ELECTRONIC EQUIPMENT ACCESSIBILITY

"SEC. 508. (a)(1) The Secretary, through the National Institute of Handicapped Research, and in consultation with the electronics industry, shall develop and establish guidelines for electronic equipment accessibility designed to insure that handicapped individuals may use electronic office equipment with or without special peripherals.

"(2) The guidelines established pursuant to paragraph (1) shall be applicable with respect to electronic equipment, whether purchased or leased.

"(3) The initial guidelines shall be established not later than October 1, 1987, and shall be continually revised as technologies advance or change.

"(b) Beginning after September 30, 1988, the Administrator of the General Services Administration shall adopt guidelines for electronic equipment accessibility established under subsection (a) for Federal procurement of electronic equipment. Each agency shall comply with the guidelines adopted under this subsection.

"(c) For the purpose of this section, the term 'special peripherals' means a special needs aid that provides access to electronic equipment that is otherwise inaccessible to a handicapped individual.".

(b) The table of contents of the Act is amended by inserting after item "Sec. 507." the following new item:

"Sec. 508. Electronic equipment accessibility.".

TITLE VII—PROJECTS WITH INDUSTRY AND BUSINESS OPPORTUNITIES FOR HANDICAPPED INDIVIDUALS

COMMUNITY SERVICE EMPLOYMENT

REAUTHORIZATION

SEC. 701. Section 617 of the Act is amended by striking out "fiscal years 1984, 1985, and 1986" and inserting in lieu thereof "fiscal years 1987, 1988, 1989, and 1990".

PROJECTS WITH INDUSTRY

SEC. 702. (a)(1) Section 621(a) of the Act is amended—

(A) by redesignating paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) as paragraphs (2), (3), and (4), respectively; and

(B) by inserting after the subsection designation the following: "(1) The purpose of this title is to promote opportunities for competitive employment of individuals with handicaps, to provide appropriate placement resources, to engage the talent and leadership of private industry as partners in the rehabilitation process, to create practical settings for job readiness and training programs, and to secure the participation of private industry in identifying and providing job opportunities and the necessary skills and training to qualify people with handicaps for competitive employment.".

(2) Clauses (A), (B), and (C) of section 621(a)(2) of the Act (as redesignated by this subsection) are amended to read as follows:

"(A) shall create and expand job opportunities for individuals with handicaps by providing for the establishment of appropriate job placement services;

"(B) shall provide individuals with handicaps with training in a realistic work setting in order to prepare them for employment in the competitive market;

"(C) shall provide handicapped individuals with such supportive services as may be required to permit them to continue to engage in the employment for which they have received training under this section;

"(D) shall, to the extent appropriate, expand job opportunities for handicapped individuals by providing for (i) the development and modification of jobs to accommodate the special needs of such individuals, (ii) the distribution of special aids, appliances, or adapted equipment to such individuals, and (iii) the modification of any facilities or equipment of the employer which are to be used primarily by handicapped individuals; and

"(E) shall provide for business advisory councils comprised of representatives of private industry, business concerns, and organized labor who will identify job availability within the community and the skills necessary to fill jobs identified, and prescribe training and programs tailored to their need.".

(3) The amendment made by paragraph (2), adding clause (E) to section 621(a)(2) of the Act, shall take effect one year after the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) Section 621(b) of the Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of clause (2);

(2) by striking out the period at the end of clause (3) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and "and"; and

(3) by inserting after clause (3) the following new clause:

"(4) provides assurances that an evaluation report containing data specified under subsection (a)(4) shall be submitted to the Commissioner.".

(c) Section 621(d)(1) of the Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "Such standards shall be revised as necessary, subject to paragraph (4) of this subsection.".

(d) Section 621 of the Act is amended by redesignating subsections (e) and (f) as subsections (f) and (g), respectively, and by inserting after subsection (d) the following new subsection:

"(e) The Commissioner may provide, directly or by way of grant or contract, technical assistance to (1) entities conducting Projects With Industry for the purpose of assisting such entities in the improvement of or in the development of relationships with private industry or labor, and (2) entities planning the development of new Projects With Industry.".

(e) Subsections (f) and (g) of section 621 of the Act (as redesignated by subsection (c)) are amended to read as follows:

"(f)(1) Each grantee receiving assistance under this section in fiscal year 1986 shall continue to receive assistance through September 30, 1987, unless the Commissioner determines that the grantee is not in compliance with the provisions of the approved application of the grantee.

"(2) Grantees continuing to receive assistance on the basis of the review described in paragraph (1) of this subsection shall be evaluated by the Commissioner using standards described in subsection (d)(1) of this section. Each such grantee shall continue to receive assistance for 3 years unless the Commissioner determines that the grantee is not substantially in compliance with such standards and with the provisions of the approved application of the grantee. In determining whether the grantee is in compliance as required by this sentence, the Commissioner shall annually review each evaluation report submitted under subsection (b)(4) and make a determination concerning the termination, modification, or renewal of each agreement for financial assistance under this section.

"(3) Competition for new grant awards under this part shall include consideration of past performance.

"(g) In approving applications under this section, the Commissioner shall give priority to the geographic areas among the States which are currently not served or underserved by projects with industry.".

PROJECTS WITH INDUSTRY REAUTHORIZATION

SEC. 703. Section 623 of the Act is amended to read as follows:

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 623. There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out the provisions of section 621, $16,070,000 for fiscal year 1987, $17,010,000 for fiscal year 1988, $18,030,000 for fiscal year 1989, and $19,140,000 for fiscal year 1990, and for section 622 such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1987, 1988, 1989, and 1990.".

SUPPORTED EMPLOYMENT SERVICES FOR SEVERELY HANDICAPPED INDIVIDUALS

SEC. 704. (a)(1) Title VI of the Act is amended by inserting after part B of such title the following new part:

"PART C—SUPPORTED EMPLOYMENT SERVICES FOR SEVERELY HANDICAPPED INDIVIDUALS

"PURPOSE

"SEC. 631. It is the purpose of this part to authorize grants (supplementary to grants for vocational rehabilitation services under title I) to assist States in developing collaborative programs with appropriate public agencies and private nonprofit organizations for training and short-term post-employment services leading to supported employment for severely handicapped individuals.

"ELIGIBILITY

"SEC. 632. Services may be provided under this part to any severely handicapped individuals whose ability or potential to engage in a training program and whose ability to engage in a supported employment setting has been determined by an evaluation of rehabilitation potential as defined in section 7 of this Act.

"ALLOTMENTS

"SEC. 633. (a)(1) The Secretary shall allot the sums appropriated for each fiscal year under this section among the States on the basis of relative population of each State, except that no State shall receive less than $250,000 or one-third of 1 percent of the sums made available for the fiscal year for which the allotment is made, whichever is greater.

"(2)(A) For the purposes of this subsection, the term 'States' does not include—

"(i) Guam,

"(ii) American Samoa,

"(iii) the Virgin Islands,

"(iv) the Republic of the Marshall Islands,

"(v) the Federated States of Micronesia,

"(vi) the Republic of Palau, and

"(vii) the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands.

"(B) The jurisdictions described in clauses (i) through (vii) of subparagraph (A) shall be allotted not less than one-eighth of 1 percent of the amounts made available for purposes of this subpart for each such clause for the fiscal year for which the allotment is made.

"(b) Whenever the Commissioner determines that any amount of an allotment to a State for any fiscal year will not be expended by such State to carry out the provisions of this part, the Commissioner shall make such amount available for carrying out the provisions of this part to one or more of the States which the Commissioner determines will be able to use additional amounts during such year for carrying out such provisions. Any amount made available to a State for any fiscal year pursuant to the preceding sentence shall, for the purposes of this section, be regarded as an increase in the State's allotment for such year.

"(c)(1) In the first fiscal year in which appropriations are made pursuant to section 638 a State may, in lieu of receiving its allotment under this part, make an application for a planning grant for that fiscal year. The Secretary is authorized to approve the appropriation of States which meet the requirements of this subsection.

"(2)(A) The grant made under this subsection shall be used for planning activities designed to facilitate the State using its allotment under this part.

"(B) No grant under this subsection may exceed a period of 18 months.

"(3) No planning grant made under this subsection may exceed $250,000.

"STATE PLAN

"SEC. 634. (a) In order to be eligible for grants under this part, a State shall submit to the Commissioner as part of the State plan under title I of this Act a State plan supplement for a three-year period for providing training and time-limited post-employment services leading to supported employment for severely handicapped individuals. Each State shall make such annual revisions in the plan supplement as may be necessary.

"(b) Each such plan supplement shall—

"(1) designate each agency of such State designated under section 101(a)(2)(B) of this Act as the agency to administer the program assisted under this part;

"(2)(A) specify results of the needs assessment conducted as required by title I of this Act of severely handicapped individuals, as such assessment identifies the need for supported employment services, including the coordination and use of the information within the State relating to section 618(b)(3) of the Education of the Handicapped Act; and

"(B) describe the quality, scope, and extent of supported employment services to be provided to severely handicapped individuals under this part, and specify the State's goals and plans with respect to the distribution of funds received under section 635 of this part;

"(3) provide assurances that—

"(A) an evaluation for each individual will be performed outlining supported employment training and time-limited post-employment services needed;

"(B) an individualized written rehabilitation program as required by section 102 will be developed outlining the services to be provided;

"(C) such services will be provided in accordance with such program or a program specified under subsection (b)(3)(D) of this part;

"(D) such services will be coordinated with the evaluation, the individual written rehabilitation plan or education plan as required under section 102 of this Act, section 123 of the Developmental Disabilities Act of 1984, and sections 612(4) and 614(5) of the Education of the Handicapped Act, respectively;

"(E) the State will conduct periodic reviews of the progress of individuals assisted under this part to determine whether services provided to such individuals should be continued, modified, or discontinued; and

"(F) the State will make maximum use of services from public agencies, private nonprofit organizations, and other appropriate resources in the community to carry out this part;

"(4) demonstrate evidence of collaboration by and funding from relevant State agencies and private nonprofit organizations to assist in the provision of supported employment services;

"(5) provide assurances that all designated State agencies will expend not more than 5 percent of the State's allotment under this part for administrative costs for carrying out this part; and

"(6) contain such other information and be submitted in such form and in accordance with such procedures as the Commissioner may require.

"SERVICES; AVAILABILITY AND COMPARABILITY

"SEC. 635. (a)(1) Services available under this part may include but are not limited to an evaluation of rehabilitation potential, provision of skilled job trainers who accompany the worker for intensive on-the-job training, systematic training, job development, follow-up services (including regular contact with the employer, trainee, and the parent or guardian), regular observation or supervision of the severely disabled individual at the training site and other services needed to support the individual in employment.

"(2) The evaluation of rehabilitation potential authorized by paragraph (1) of this subsection shall be supplementary to the evaluation of rehabilitation potential provided under title I of this Act.

"(b) Services authorized under this part are limited to supported employment training and time-limited post-employment services. Extended supported employment services shall be provided by the relevant State agencies and private organizations as specified under section 634(b)(4) of this part or any other available source.

"(c) Services provided under this part shall be complementary to services provided under title I of this Act.

"RESTRICTION

"SEC. 636. Each designated State agency shall collect the client information required by section 13 of this Act separately for supported employment clients under this part and for supported employment clients under title I.

"SAVINGS PROVISION

"SEC. 637. Nothing in this part shall be construed to prohibit a State from conducting or from carrying out training and time-limited post-employment services leading to supported employment in accordance with the State plan submitted under section 101 from its State allotment under section 110.

"SEC. 638. There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this part $25,000,000 for the fiscal year 1987, $26,470,000 for the fiscal year 1988, $28,060,000 for the fiscal year 1989, and $29,730,000 for the fiscal year 1990.".

(2) The table of contents of the Act is amended by inserting after item "Sec. 623." the following:

"PART C—SUPPORTED EMPLOYMENT SERVICES FOR SEVERELY HANDICAPPED INDIVIDUALS

"Sec. 631. Purpose.
"Sec. 632. Eligibility.
"Sec. 633. Allotments.
"Sec. 634. State plan.
"Sec. 635. Services; availability and comparability.
"Sec. 636. Restriction.
"Sec. 637. Savings provision.
"Sec. 638. Authorization of appropriations.".

(b)(1) The amendment made by subsection (a) of this section shall not apply in any fiscal year in which the appropriation for part C of title VI of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 do not equal or exceed $5,000,000.

(2) The provisions of paragraph (1) are repealed on September 30, 1990.

(4) Section 504 of the Act is amended by striking out "section 7(7)" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 7(8)".

(g) Section 611(a) of the Act is amended by striking out "section 7(7)" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 7(8)".

(h) Section 702 of the Act is amended by inserting "(a)" after the section designation.

PRESIDENT'S COMMITTEE ON EMPLOYMENT OF THE HANDICAPPED

SEC. 1002. The joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution authorizing an appropriation for the work of the President's Committee on National Employ the Physically Handicapped Week", approved July 11, 1949 (63 Stat. 409) is amended by inserting at the end thereof "The President's Committee on Employment of the Handicapped shall be guided by the general policies of the National Council on the Handicapped.".

CIVIL RIGHTS REMEDIES EQUALIZATION

SEC. 1003. (a)(1) A State shall not be immune under the Eleventh Amendment of the Constitution of the United States from suit in Federal court for a violation of section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972, the Age Discrimination Act of 1975, title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, or the provisions of any other Federal statute prohibiting discrimination by recipients of Federal financial assistance.

(2) In a suit against a State for a violation of a statute referred to in paragraph (1), remedies (including remedies both at law and in equity) are available for such a violation to the same extent as such remedies are available for such a violation in the suit against any public or private entity other than a State.

(b) The provisions of subsection (a) shall take effect with respect to violations that occur in whole or in part after the date of enactment of this Act.

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 1004. This Act shall take effect October 1, 1986.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I rise today to urge the passage of S. 2515, the Rehabilitation Act Amendments of 1986. This bill, which currently has 11 cosponsors, was unanimously ordered reported by the Committee on Labor and Human Resources on August 6, 1986. This legislation reauthorizes for 4 years programs under the Rehabilitation Act—programs which are critical to improving the quality of life for our Nation's handicapped citizens. The amendments made by S. 2515 will strengthen the ability of States to provide the breadth of services required by our most severely handicapped Americans.

It is true, as a Nation, we have progressed in our attitudes toward people with handicaps. No longer do we view people with handicaps in terms of what they cannot do, because such an attitude of limited ability has been challenged by the handicapped themselves, and by their parents, friends, and advocates. And they have won. Our attitudes have changed. They have shown us what they can do, what they can learn and accomplish, given a little help from us.

Handicapped individuals are no different from those of us who measure our self-worth by our ability to be productive, contributing members of society—and they deserve the same opportunities that the nonhandicapped take for granted. Programs authorized by the Rehabilitation Act offer such opportunities, and have proven themselves to be fiscally sound investments for our Nation as well. In fact, programs funded through the Rehabilitation Act return $11 for every $1 expended. Now that is a good investment.

But in humanitarian terms, the return is even greater, because you cannot pin a price tag on human dignity. The dignity of working, of being independent, or becoming part of our towns and communities—that is what the Rehabilitation Act is all about for the people in our country who happen to be handicapped.

So I am proud to bring before the Senate today the Rehabilitation Act Amendments of 1986. Programs authorized under the Rehabilitation Act include grants to States for vocational rehabilitation, through which employment-related services are currently provided to more than 900,000 individuals. The primary purpose of the Rehabilitation Act is getting people employed—and it has been one of the most successful, cost-effective programs funded by the Federal Government.

The bill before you contains several new initiatives to assist handicapped individuals in their desire to become employed. An important new component authorizes grants for States to develop supported employment services for severely handicapped individuals. Supported employment is competitive work in integrated work settings for individuals who, because of the severity of their handicaps, need intensive, on-going support services to perform such work. We now know that even severely handicapped people can be competitively employed, given appropriate supports. Indeed, some State rehabilitation agencies are already successfully providing such supported employment services through their title I State grant program.

The new title VI supported employment program is designed to supplement the supported employment services which a State agency offers, or may decide to offer, through its State grant program. The bill clearly states that supported employment may now be considered an acceptable outcome for employability, on which eligibility for rehabilitation services under title I is based. In combination with the new grant program under title VI, all States will now be able to develop and expand supported employment programs and get even more severely handicapped people into the workforce. Because of the variance in State rehabilitation agencies in providing supported employment services, the bill allows States to elect a planning period to develop and initiate their statewide system of supported employment services under title VI. For those States that elect this option, an 18-month planning period is provided to enable States to meet State plan requirements for implementing a system of supported employment.

The bill also contains some new provisions which relate to rehabilitation engineering, which is the use of technology to reduce barriers faced by the handicapped so that they can become more independent and more fully integrated into the workforce. We know that people with handicaps face multiple barriers, and, with the systematic application of technologies, these barriers can often be overcome. During hearings before the subcommittee on the handicapped we heard testimony on the success of rehabilitation engineering in reducing these barriers and expanding opportunities for the handicapped, and I am pleased that S. 2515 contains provisions that will expand the availability of rehabilitation engineering services.

Another important provision in the bill strengthens the protections for handicapped people seeking to receive services from the rehabilitation system. The bill requires that the administrative appeal process for solving disagreements relating to the provision of services include consideration by an impartial hearing officer. It is my belief that disputes can be resolved more fairly, and less adversarily, when an impartial reviewer evaluates the situation and renders a decision.

S. 2515 also contains important additions to strengthen provisions relating to independent living and projects with industry. These two programs have proven themselves successful in assisting handicapped people to live independently, and in providing them job placement opportunities in the competitive workforce. The bill provides funding continuity for centers and projects which meet national standards.

The bill further provides for an increased role for the National Council on the Handicapped as a policy advisory body on issues of national scope affecting persons with handicaps. Because we must be looking toward the future, we have mandated that the council prepare a report on goals for the year 2000 for the handicapped, and strategies for achieving those goals. The Council will be expected to report to Congress annually on the progress we are making toward realizing those goals.

There have been several modifications to S. 2515 since it was originally introduced. One significant addition clarifies the intent of Congress where violations of section 504 by recipients of Federal financial assistance are concerned. This addition provides that States shall not be immune under the 11th amendment from suit in Federal court for violations of section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act, or other Federal statutes prohibiting discrimination. This provision closes a gap in civil rights protections by allowing individuals to enforce their rights in Federal court when State or State agency actions are at issue. The gap in protection of individual rights was made evident by the Supreme Court decision in Atascadero State Hospital versus Scanlon, which provided immunity to a State from suit in Federal court based on the 11th amendment. S. 2515 will return civil rights protection to individuals where violations by States or State agencies are concerned.

Another modification was the addition of language relating to the accessibility of electronic office equipment purchased or leased by the Federal Government. Congress has recognized in the past the need to make Federal buildings accessible to the handicapped. The bill before you today will allow for the development of Federal guidelines for accessibility of electronic office equipment. The buildings are accessible, and now it is time to look at barriers which exist inside those buildings in terms of equipment that can be easily and readily made accessible to a handicapped person.

I would also like to address a concern that I have regarding the authorization levels in S. 2515 for the State Vocational Rehabilitation Grant Program. The authorization level in the bill is $1,281,000,000 for fiscal year 1987, with allowance for cost-of-living increases in the succeeding 3 fiscal years. In addition, the bill provides for additional funds as Congress deems necessary and appropriate, and removes the cap on the amount of dollars Congress may appropriate.

It is my understanding, however, that the administration has interpreted the language of the law to mean that Congress intends to reauthorize only a cost-of-living increase for each year for this very important program, which is not consistent with our intention in developing this bill. It is my hope that the House and Senate conferees will address this issue during the course of the conference.

In conclusion, we know that handicapped people are able to be employed. Even more—we know that they want to be employed. A recent Harris poll, commissioned by the National Council on the Handicapped, indicated that two-thirds of disabled Americans between the ages of 16 and 64 are not working—and that is an unemployment statistic that surpasses all others in this Nation. Further, two-thirds of these individuals want to work. In fact, many of these individuals want to work even at the risk of losing Federal or State benefits.

It is imperative that we respond to this need by reauthorizing the Rehabilitation Act with the improvements included in the Rehabilitation Act Amendments of 1986. This is a solid and progressive piece of legislation which will make a significant impact on the lives of handicapped people in our country.

By adopting S. 2515, we have the opportunity to reaffirm our commitment to the millions of disabled individuals in this country. Let us help them in their effort to help themselves: in their efforts to obtain and maintain employment, achieve independence, and become fully integrated into community life.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I am pleased that the Senate has the opportunity today to pass S. 2515, the Rehabilitation Amendments of 1986.

Historically, the Rehabilitation Act has provided essential comprehensive vocational services to mentally and physically challenged individuals across our Nation. Last year, over 930,000 handicapped persons received services under the Rehabilitation Act, and over 225,000 disabled citizens were successfully rehabilitated. These numbers represent the proven value of the act in assisting disabled Americans in achieving employment and self sufficiency.

I am proud to say that the legislation before us this evening represents a true bipartisan effort resulting from the diligent efforts by my distinguished colleagues on the Labor and Human Resources Committee. The legislation before us builds upon the existing act through both the continuation and enhancement of a program which has come to mean so much to so many. The committee unanimously endorsed S. 2515, thus paving the way for what I expect will be prompt passage this evening.

The legislation that we are about to pass furthers the vital investment into the lives of handicapped adults throughout America. S. 2515 represents an innovative approach to assist more severly handicapped individuals. It establishes a new supportive employment program which will give opportunities to severely handicapped individuals to better their quality of life. Demonstration grants have proven that supported employment works. The new program in our bill will offer States adequate time to plan for this very needed initiative.

The legislation also places a new emphasis on rehabilitation engineering and it greatly strengthens the peer review process for grants and contracts. The amendments offer core funding to both Independent Living Centers and Projects with Industry for the 4-year reauthorizing period contingent on both programs meeting newly revised standards by the National Council on the Handicapped. These programs have successfully worked to assist handicapped persons in leading more independent lives. The Independent Living Centers have become an integral component of our service delivery system for disabled people. As consumer-controlled organizations, the Independent Living Centers make an essential contribution in the lives of disabled Americans and I am particularly pleased that this legislation strengthens these centers.

In addition, the package includes demonstration projects in the area of transition for severely disabled youth exiting the educational system. Experience has shown that severely handicapped students having received state-of-the-art educational services often leave school with significant vocational needs and a confusing array of agencies to contact for appropriate services. To avoid confusion and loss of valuable services, this legislation includes demonstration grants in this essential area of transition. Another area which the legislation focuses on is the need to better serve the chronically mentally ill and it also places a new priority on physical educational services. It is clear that this package strengthens our existing law through a number of innovative initiatives that have culminated months of detailed review and comprehensive study.

The Rehabilitation Act Amendments of 1986 is authorized for 4 years. Funding for the new initiatives in the act meet the targets of the Budget Committee, and funding for the program next year has been included in the fiscal year 1987 Senate Labor HHS appropriations bill which I look forward to passing in the upcoming days.

In closing, I want to note that, according to a recent Harris poll, there are over 20 million unemployed disabled Americans of working age who want to work—a staggering 60 percent. The reauthorization bill before us today is designed to assist these individuals so that they can in fact become employed and active contributing members of our society. I am proud to be a cosponsor of this legislation which, when enacted, will enhance the lives of so many disabled citizens across America. I want to particularly commend the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee for his tireless leadership in this area and for his fine work on this legislation. I urge my colleagues to join with me and unanimously pass the Rehabilitation Amendments of 1986.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my distinguished colleague, Senator WEICKER, in giving my complete support of S. 2515, the Rehabilitation Act Amendments of 1986.

This significant legislation will provide for a continuation of the State grant program for another 4 years, create a new supported employment training program for severely handicapped individuals and will provide for other significant improvements in this law.

The State grant program has been in existence for over 65 years. Millions of handicapped individuals have received the services they needed in order to become part of this Nation's work force. For each person that is rehabilitated, the cost of the services received is paid back to the Federal Government within 4 years from income taxes paid by the disabled person. Therefore, each individual that receives services through this program ends up paying back whatever money was spent on them.

The concept of supported employment training is not a new one. Supported employment training programs, in Vermont, have existed for many years, and Vermont has the distinction of being only one of two States which has a documented 5-year track record in providing these types of services. During this time period, over 180 severely handicapped Vermonters have received training and have been placed in the competitive labor market. I am proud to say that this program enjoys an 85 percent success rate. Vermont utilizes the cooperation of many of the State agencies responsible for programs ranging from vocational rehabilitation, to mental health, special education, and developmental disabilities. This type of cooperation is what has made this program such a success in Vermont.

I feel that this new program will assist—for the first time—those individuals who are believed to be unable to compete in the work force and assist them in becoming more self-sustaining.

The Rehabilitation Act Amendments of 1986 continues the only existing training and placement program especially for the disabled citizens of this Nation. I urge my colleagues to join in giving their support to this important piece of legislation.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I am pleased to support S. 2515, the Rehabilitation Act Amendments of 1986. This is the fourth reauthorization of the Rehabilitation Act in which I have been privileged to play some role. Each time it has been with a sense of great satisfaction. The Congress, always through bipartisan effort, has been the strongest advocate of vocational rehabilitation, and we in Congress can continue to point with pride to this act's demonstrated record of success.

Title I of the act, which is an entitlement program of State grants, remains the Federal Government's primary employment program for Americans with disabilities. It ensures that a wide range of rehabilitation services are available to persons with substantial handicaps to employment, but who have the potential to become gainfully employed. As a whole, the act's programs have become a model of coordinated and comprehensive efforts which interrelate basic services with research, training, independent living and competitive job placement programs. In addition, through its antidiscrimination provisions, this act provides protection of the civil rights of Americans with disabilities. S. 2515, as reported by the Labor and Human Resources Committee, continues the responsible growth of this comprehensive set of programs and increases the ability of those who work in rehabilitation to respond to the needs of individuals with disabilities in a continually changing world.

The gap between the needs of disabled persons and the ability of this program to serve them continues to be much too great. It is disturbing that rehabilitation agencies are able to provide services to fewer clients today than 10 years ago. One of the reasons for this decline is the more costly services they are providing to more severely handicapped clients, a priority that Congress has approved. The other, and primary reason for the decline, is that, in spite of funding increases, thanks to the efforts of Senator WEICKER, States simply do not have the spending power for this program that they had 10 years ago. Inflation, along with the elimination of most of the Social Security trust funds for rehabilitation, has taken a tremendous toll at the very time that new technologies, new methods for training and placing severely handicapped individuals, and new clients—young people coming out of special education—have created many new challenges and new opportunities for rehabilitation.

When the committee began the reauthorization process this year, I asked that we recognize that for every new burden we place upon the program, there is a cost involved; that if we agree upon new initiatives for new types of services, we recognize that we must provide new resources so that we are not being unfair to those who are already dependent upon rehabilitation services as a means of entering competitive employment. This was of particular concern to me as the committee considered ways of encouraging State rehabilitation agencies to increase their involvement in a relatively new method of serving severely handicapped individuals—supported employment. I am pleased that the reported bill does take such a responsible approach. The bill provides a source of funding for States to develop supported employment programs without putting potential supported employment clients into competition with all other State rehabilitation agency clients for limited service dollars. In addition, it permits States to apply for planning grants during the first 18 months in order to set up the systems that will be necessary to the success of supported employment programs. Since all members of the committee agreed that the responsibility of State rehabilitation agencies in regard to supported employment should be time-limited, State agencies will not be able to carry out supported employment programs without the close cooperation of other agencies and providers of services to severely handicapped individuals.

There is much that we do not yet know about supported employment—for example, its long-term cost benefits, its potential impact on the service and administrative funds of rehabilitation agencies, the numbers of appropriate supported employment clients, the most effective models over time and the most workable interagency agreements. The committee bill requires the sort of data and recordkeeping that should help the Congress in making future decisions about supported employment.

The committee bill contains a number of important provisions that respond to concerns over current administration neglect of the Federal responsibilities to the program through the functioning of the Rehabilitation Services Administration. I hope that the Secretary of the Department of Education will not wait for a bill to come out of a conference committee this year to begin to act on implementing his new responsibilities in regard to upgrading the staffing situation at this major Federal agency with such critical importance to the lives of millions of our citizens with disabilities. As the committee report states, the continuing responsibility of the Federal program to its State partners includes having the ability to maintain accountability, develop national goals and provide some uniformity in the program from State to State. It is clear that the RSA is rapidly losing—through drastic reductions in experienced, well-qualified staff and through radical reductions in travel funds for such purposes as onsite monitoring and technical assistance—the ability to carry out its duties as part of this State/Federal partnership. Without immediate steps to improve the situation, I am greatly concerned that the program will not only be unable to respond to new and increased demands from the Congress, but that the basic program itself will become more fragmented and less consistently effective. The situation demands immediate attention.

The committee bill recognizes through a new definition of employability that the purpose of the Title I Program is to help States put individuals with handicaps into competitive jobs. The definition clarifies that the efforts of the State agency must primarily be directed toward placing the client in full-time competitive employment, and that although part-time employment may be an acceptable closure, only when full-time employment is not an option should a case be closed in part-time employment. The committee report also notes that the most recent statistics from the RSA show that the percentage of rehabilitated persons placed in competitive employment reached 79 percent in 1984, the highest level that can be traced in historic records for this program. This achievement, along with simultaneous increases to record levels of services to those with severe handicaps, clearly indicates that a priority to serve severely handicapped individuals can be carried out without decreasing the emphasis on the primary purpose of this program—to put handicapped persons into full-time, gainfully competitive jobs. I look forward to seeing the continuation of effective efforts of State agencies in both of these areas.

There are other significant provisions of S. 2515, and I want to commend two of my colleagues in particular for two of those that are most important. First, Senator CRANSTON, who introduced the legislation last year to overturn the effects of the Supreme Court's decision on Atascadero State Hospital versus Scanlon, continued his leadership on this vital effort during our reauthorization process. The provisions in section 1003 of the bill clarify congressional intent in regard to the rights of litigants under section 504 and similar civil rights statutes in regard to actions in Federal courts when State or State agency actions are at issue. Senator CRANSTON has been the leader on so many issues affecting the civil rights of disabled persons for so many years, and I am pleased to acknowledge his accomplishment in bringing together a consensus on this section of S. 2515.

In addition, I want to compliment Senator HATCH and his staff for taking the initiative on providing a new section of the act requiring the development and adoption of guidelines for electronic equipment accessibility, and for a provision which would fund grants for the development of orphan technological devices. Our economy has changed greatly over the past decade, becoming an "information society." Today we see that it is as important for disabled persons to be able to use the technology housed within accessible buildings as it is for the buildings themselves to be accessible. The amendments in this bill will build upon the progress that has already been made in this area, and, again, I commend our colleague for his initiative.

And finally, I think it is important that we recognize the commendable motivation of those who choose to work in the field of rehabilitation. I have never met one who was in it for the money, or for the glamour, or because it was an easy job. They are the ones upon whom we place the demands. They are the ones who should also get our help in carrying out the increasingly complex and difficult job they are being asked to do.

I want to thank Senator WEICKER for his continuing leadership, and for allowing all of the members of the Labor and Human Resources Committee the opportunity to be very much involved in the committee bill that we are adopting today. We owe disabled Americans the dignity of having a job and we deprive all of us by not doing more to help disabled Americans to achieve this goal. The reauthorization of the Rehabilitation Act continues to move us closer to the achievement of these purposes, and I ask my colleagues to join me in support of S. 2515.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I rise today to urge my colleagues to support the Rehabilitation Act Amendments of 1986 which reauthorize many of the Federal programs in the rehabilitation field.

Mr. President, I would like to take this opportunity to commend the leadership of Senator WEICKER in this area. As chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on the Handicapped, he has been most active in reporting legislation which benefits the disabled citizens of our Nation. I would also like to recognize the dedicated and fine work of Senator WEICKER's staff, Terry Muilenburg and Chris Button.

For many years, I have been an ardent supporter of vocational rehabilitation. Citizens who are less fortunate than others should be given the opportunity to overcome obstacles which may confront them during the course of their lives. Throughout the years, vocational rehabilitation programs have consistently demonstrated that properly trained persons with disabilities can function as superior employees. Recent studies show that, through these programs, approximately 226,000 persons are rehabilitated yearly.

In addition, during this period of budgetary restraint, we should not forget the cost effectiveness of programs like vocational rehabilitation. Recent reports show that in the first year after completion of the Rehabilitation Program, persons rehabilitated paid Federal, State, and local governments an estimated $211.5 million more in income, payroll, and sales taxes, than if they had not been rehabilitated. Furthermore, another $68.9 million is saved as a result of decreased dependency on public support payments and institutional care. Therefore, the grand total first year benefit from persons rehabilitation is over $280 million.

Mr. President, I am also pleased that the longstanding primary purpose of the Title I Program—that of placing the disabled into the competitive workforce of this Nation—is continued and emphasized.

Mr. President, with results such as these, I am proud to be an original cosponsor of this legislation. Furthermore I would point out to my colleagues that the Labor and Human Resources Committee voted unanimously to favorably report this bill. Accordingly, I urge the support of my colleagues for this legislation.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I am pleased to rise in support of Senate bill S. 2515, the "Rehabilitation Act Amendments of 1986," sponsored by the Senator from Connecticut. The provisions of this bill were developed as a result of input from hearings held in Washington on March 20 and 25, 1986. Suggestions and testimony were given by the National Council on the Handicapped, the Rehabilitation Services Administration, Americans with disabilities, and other agencies and organizations. The bill was introduced on June 5, 1986, and subsequently referred to the Subcommittee on the Handicapped. This bill, which required many hours of negotiation, was polled out of the subcommittee on June 24, 1986, and reported out of the full committee on August 6, 1986. I commend Senator WEICKER, chairman of the Subcommittee on the Handicapped for his diligence in guiding this bill through the legislative process. I am pleased with the provisions found in this bill.

S. 2515 strengthens the Rehabilitation Act of 1973. This law has done much to assist Americans with disabilities through vocational rehabilitation programs, and is well-known for being the key in unlocking the doors and making America's Federal programs and facilities accessible to all Americans.

This bill contains two special provisions which I recommended. The first gives new authority for the Director of National Institutes of Handicapped Research to conduct projects and demonstrations for providing incentives for the development and marketing of orphan technologies. The term "orphan technological devices" was coined to reflect a perceived lack of concern about devices which can only be utilized by a relatively small number of people. New technologies can often bypass individuals with disabilities if there is a limited interest by the private sector in developing manufacturing and marketing specialized technology to meet the needs of small groups of handicapped individuals with unique needs. This amendment will authorize demonstration projects to implement on a pilot basis appropriate procedures and incentives to facilitate getting orphan devices to the disabled population.

The second provision creates a new section dealing with electronic office equipment accessibility. In response to the special needs of individuals with handicaps, Congress passed laws to require that programs and buildings are accessible. Now that architectural barriers are being eliminated, it is important that the equipment housed within these facilities is also accessible to individuals with handicaps.

Many current standard microcomputer software programs, copy machines, and other automated office equipment cannot be used by disabled people. With appropriate low cost and no cost modification, the number of individuals who could use such equipment would multiply significantly. Other modifications would also greatly facilitate the attachment of special input and output systems and further decrease the cost for such modifications. In addition these changes would benefit mass market users as well by providing them with a wider variety of options. The current direction in which automated systems are evolving will automatically encompass most of the required features and capabilities if they are properly implemented. In discussion with engineers and designers of computers, many of the desired changes could have been included in the original design of the computers many of the desired changes could have been included in the original design of the computer at minimal cost if the developers had been aware of their importance.

In response to this need, the White House Committee for Equal Access to Standard Computers and Information Systems, the National Institute of Handicapped Research, and representatives from the computer industry have been involved in developing guidelines for the design of computers and information processing systems to increase their access by persons with disabilities. The goal of these guidelines is to provide an awareness of the different types of problems as well as the focal point for listing possible solution strategies. The content of the guidelines document reflect the combined contributions of industry, researchers, and consumers.

In addition, an Interagency Committee on Computer Support for Handicapped Employees had been established by the General Services Administration to help agencies acquire accessible information technology systems. As the Federal Government's main purchasing agent, GSA has recognized the need for language in procurement contracts that would ensure that new office equipment could be used by disabled employees. It is our intent to have the Assistant Secretary for Special Education and Rehabilitative Services work with the Interagency Committee on Computer Support for Handicapped Employees to develop the guidelines.

After September 30, 1988, the Administrator of the General Services Administration shall adopt the guidelines for electronic equipment accessibility and be responsible for assuring that each agency comply with the guidelines. These guidelines shall be applicable to all federally procured electronic equipment, whether purchased or leased.

The bill also contains many other provisions in order to allow a broader range of persons with disabilities to participate within the framework of the Vocational Rehabilitation Program. By authorizing the creation of various supported employment programs, the act will now be able to provide services to more severely handicapped individuals.

I support the provisions contained within S. 2515 and strongly encourage my colleagues to vote for its passage.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I would like to clarify for the chairman of the Budget Committee, my good friend Senator DOMENICI, the intent of sections 702(e) and 805(b) of the Rehabilitation Act Amendments of 1986. The intent of the bill language is to authorize continued assistance in fiscal year 1987 for grantees receiving assistance in fiscal year 1986 and to authorize continued assistance for 3 years for qualified grantees. Both provisions of sections 702(e) and 805(b) are subject to subsequent appropriation action and are not intended to create new entitlements.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank my good friend from Connecticut for clarifying the intent of the committee that sections 702(e) and 805(b) of S. 2515 are not intended to create new entitlement authority.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I also would like to pay a special tribute to the ranking member of my subcommittee, Senator KERRY, who has worked long and hard on this legislation, and to the chairman of the full committee, Senator HATCH.

This matter has not been one that has been entirely smooth, as there have been differing points of view. But when it came out of committee, it came with the support of all and especially the individuals that I have mentioned.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute be adopted, and that the bill as amended be considered original text for the purpose of further amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 2773

(Purpose: To provide for a special maintenance of effort rule under the Education of the Handicapped Act)

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, on behalf of Mr. EAGLETON, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD], for Mr. EAGLETON and Mr. DANFORTH, proposes an amendment numbered 2773.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

MAINTENANCE OF EFFORT

SEC. . (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of the Education of the Handicapped Act, the Secretary and the State educational agency, in the case of section 614(a)(2)(P)(ii) of that Act, shall not include expenditures made from an accrued fund reserve surplus after July 1, 1983, which are used for services for handicapped children.

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall take effect with respect to fiscal years beginning after September 30, 1983.

UNIQUE PROBLEMS OF ST. LOUIS SPECIAL SCHOOL DISTRICT

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and my colleague from Missouri, Senator DANFORTH, I send an unprinted amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration. The Special School District of St. Louis County, established in 1957, was specifically established for the sole purpose of providing education and training for handicapped children. In 1965, pursuant to State legislation, the district was authorized to provide free vocational instruction for children under the age of 21. The mission of the special school district remains primarily one of education for the handicapped and severely handicapped with 82 percent of its expenditure going for that purpose.

During fiscal years 1984 and 1985, the special school district increased its budget substantially in order to hire additional personnel to provide better services to its handicapped students and to deal with a backlog of some 3,000 referrals of children for evaluation and placement. To meet those expenses, the district used approximately $11 million of its building fund reserves in fiscal year 1984. In the following year, the district used virtually all its remaining $8 million building fund reserves to upgrade its program.

As a consequence of using its building fund reserves in fiscal years 1984 and 1985 to provide better services to handicapped children, the district is now caught under the nonsupplanting provisions of Public Law 94-142. As the distinguished floor manager knows, the prohibition against supplanting non-Federal funding of education of the handicapped programs with part B Federal funds has been an essential component of Public Law 94-142 since its inception. A major premise of the program is that even with State and local funding of education programs for handicapped children there are still needs that are unmet. While Federal funds are available for these unmet needs, the basic purpose of Public Law 94-142 would be defeated in part B funds simply took the place of State or local funding. The purpose of the nonsupplanting provision in Public Law 94-142, therefore, was to ensure that part B funds did not take the place of State and local funds. I applaud that purpose and in no way seek to change it.

In the specific instance of which we seek a remedy, there is no suggestion that Federal funds were used to take the place of any State or local funds. Rather, due to unusual circumstances, the district significantly increased its services to handicapped students through the use of reserve funds. Once the reserve funds were exhausted, the district could not possibly sustain this funding increase. I would also emphasize, there was never an instance where the eventual reduction in local funding resulted in more funds to programs for the nonhandicapped.

The amendment we seek would not change the underlying nonsupplanting requirements of Public Law 94-142. Rather, it would provide that only during the period of time in which the special school district used the building fund reserves—fiscal year 1984-85—that such funds spent from a reserve account specifically for the purpose of improving educational services for handicapped children would not be counted in the determination of supplanting.

I urge adoption of the amendment.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my able colleague, Mr. EAGLETON, in sponsoring this amendment to the Rehabilitation Act. I also appreciate the cooperation of the distinguished manager of the bill in agreeing to accept this amendment.

This is a simple amendment which will prevent the Special School District of St. Louis from being penalized for improving services to handicapped children.

The Special School District of St. Louis County, MO, is an extraordinary educational agency. It was established back in 1957, preceding the Education for All Handicapped Children Act by many years. The special school district has led the country in providing education programs for handicapped children.

In fiscal years 1984 and 1985, the special school district made extraordinary expenditures from accrued surplus funds to hire additional staff in order to upgrade services and to catch up a backlog in evaluation and placement services for handicapped children. The special district has now depleted these reserves and is unable to continue supporting handicapped services at the 1984 and 1985 levels. Because of the special school district's inability to maintain these unusually high levels of support, it is in technical noncompliance with the nonsupplanting provisions of Public Law 94-142.

The nonsupplanting provisions were intended to prevent educational agencies from using Federal moneys to supplant State and local support for handicapped education. The amendment that my senior colleague from Missouri and I are offering does not change the nonsupplanting requirements but simply clarifies the intent of the law with respect to extraordinary expenditures made from reserves to improve educational services for the handicapped. Such expenditures would not be counted for purposes of determining compliance with the nonsupplanting requirements. The amendment will not, however, allow the special district to use Federal funds for the education of handicapped services to take the place of State and local support for handicapped education.

Unless this amendment is adopted, the special district will be penalized for improving services to handicapped children of St. Louis County. I believe that the amendment is consistent with the intent of the Education for All Handicapped Act and is necessary to correct an unintended application of the law.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, the amendment is acceptable. I urge its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2773) was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, on behalf of Mr. EAGLETON, I thank the distinguished Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WEICKER].

Mr. WEICKER. I thank my distinguished colleague, the distinguished minority leader, for his assistance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that H.R. 4021, the House-passed Rehabilitation Act Amendments of 1986, be discharged from the Committee on Labor and Human Resources and that the Senate proceed to its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 4021) to extend and improve the Rehabilitation Act of 1973.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I move to strike all after the enacting clause and insert the text of S. 2515, as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Connecticut.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I urge passage of H.R. 4021, as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

The bill (H.R. 4021), as amended, was passed.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that S. 2515 be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is recognized.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, earlier today the distinguished minority leader and this Senator from Kansas discussed a couple of resolutions we would submit. We have now completed drafting which has been cleared by both Senators LUGAR and PELL, and the so-called Daniloff resolution has been cleared. The resolution on terrorists is in the process of being retyped. There has been an agreement on language. I will submit the Daniloff resolution.

SENATE RESOLUTION 486—RELATING TO THE ARREST OF U.S. CORRESPONDENT NICHOLAS DANILOFF

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator BYRD, Senator LUGAR, Senator PELL, Senator GORTON, Senator DURENBERGER, Senator CRANSTON, Senator BOSCHWITZ, Senator FORD, Senator EXON, Senator BENTSEN, Senator DECONCINI, and myself, I send a resolution to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

S. RES. 486

(Relating to the arrest of U.S. correspondent Nicholas Daniloff)

I. Whereas the arrest and indictment on trumped up charges by the government of the Soviet Union of Nicholas Daniloff, American correspondent for U.S. News & World Report, is in clear contravention of accepted standards of international law and civil liberties;

II. Whereas the treatment of Mr. Daniloff is an inexcusable denial or the rights of a journalist to engage in the legitimate pursuit of his profession and a violation of Soviet obligations as a signatory of the Final Act of the Helsinki Accords guiding relations between participating states, specifically Basket III, Section 2, Article (c), Principles for the Improvement of Working Conditions for Journalists, which state that ". . . the participating states reaffirm that the legitimate pursuit of their professional activity will neither render journalists liable to expulsion nor otherwise penalize them."

III. Whereas the actions of the Soviet government further violate the spirit and letter of the provisions adopted at the review of the Helsinki Accords held in Madrid in March, 1983, specifically Basket III, Cooperation in Humanitarian and other Fields, which affirms that the participating states ". . . will also consider ways and means to assist journalists from other participating states and thus enable them to resolve practical problems they may encounter . . ." and ". . . further increase the possibilities and, when necessary, improve the conditions for journalists from other participating States to establish and maintain personal contacts and communication with their sources;

Now therefore be it resolved by the Senate of the United States that the Senate—

1. condemns the Soviet Union for the unjustifiable arrest and indictment of Nicholas Daniloff and demands his immediate and unconditional release from custody by the Soviet Union,

2. expresses it deep concern that the failure of the Soviet Union to immediately and justly resolve this matter threatens to undermine constructive relations between the United States and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and jeopardizes the hopes for Summit Meeting between President Reagan and General Secretary Gorbachev, and

3. urges that all responsible news gathering and news accrediting organizations that provide support, membership or other privileges to Soviet news organizations should consider appropriate actions to underscore the demand for Daniloff's release.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that no amendments be in order to the resolution and that a vote occur on the adoption of the resolution at 2:30 p.m. tomorrow, Tuesday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

SENATE RESOLUTION 487—RELATING TO THE CONDEMNATION OF RECENT ACTS OF TERRORISM IN PAKISTAN AND TURKEY

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution for myself, Mr. DOLE, Mr. PELL, Mr. LUGAR, Mr. CRANSTON, Mr. GORTON, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. FORD, and Mr. BENTSEN, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

S. RES. 487

(Condemnation of Recent Acts of Terrorism in Pakistan and Turkey)

Whereas, the recent terrorist attacks in Karachi, Pakistan, and Istanbul, Turkey, demonstrate that international terrorism remains a principal threat to human life and democratic values;

Whereas the hijacking of Pan American Flight 73, which ended in the loss of many lives at Karachi International Airport, and the murder of 22 Turkish Jews as they worshiped in an Istanbul Synagogue, underscores the continuing need for action against international terrorism and for all civilized nations to redouble their efforts to eradicate this scourge; and

Whereas, the United States should seize the initiative to expand international cooperation and coordination in the campaign against terrorism, and should be supported in that effort by its allies, and by all other responsible nations: Now, therefore, be it resolved that, the Senate

(1) Condemns vigorously the most recent terrorist acts in Karachi, Pakistan, and Istanbul, Turkey, and offers its deepest sympathies and condolences to the victims of those attacks, and to their families;

(2) Declares that international terrorism is a scourge which effects, ultimately, all nations, and that all civilized and responsible nations of the world should expand their efforts to combat this scourge;

(3) Urges close international cooperation in the swift prosecution and punishment of those responsible for these crimes; and

(4) Urges the President to take the following actions—

(A) Place the subject of terrorism and the urgent need for international cooperation, including cooperation between the United States and the Soviet Union, in combatting this scourge on the agenda of any future U.S.-Soviet summit meeting;

(B) Make increased antiterrorism cooperation a high priority subject to every appropriate opportunity he has with the leaders of the allies and friends of the United States;

(C) Redouble efforts to establish an international antiterrorism committee as called for in recently enacted legislation (PL 99-399) so that civilized countries may better cooperate in responding to these barbarous acts;

(D) Actively utilize existing rewards-for-information authorities to assist in apprending and bringing to justice all those responsible for these reprehensible crimes;

(E) Consider taking appropriate constitutional measures against the individuals responsible for these heinous crimes.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DOLE. This vote will follow the vote on the Daniloff resolution? I ask unanimous consent that that be the case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. I ask unanimous consent that the time between 2 and 2:30 be equally divided between the majority and minority leaders or their designees for statements on these resolutions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. I ask unanimous consent that no amendments be in order to the second resolution, the terrorism resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES—H.R. 4868

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, pursuant to the order of August 15, appoints the Senator from Indiana [Mr. LUGAR], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS], and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PELL] as conferees on the part of the Senate on H.R. 4868.

ORDERS FOR TUESDAY

RECESS UNTIL 10 A.M.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in recess until the hour of 10 a.m. on Tuesday, September 9, 1986.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF SENATORS PROXMIRE AND LEVIN

Mr. DOLE. Following the recognition of the two leaders under the standing order, I ask unanimous consent that there be special orders for not to exceed 5 minutes each in favor of Senators PROXMIRE and LEVIN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. DOLE. I ask unanimous consent that following the special orders just identified, there be a period for the transaction of routine morning business not to extend beyond the hour of 10:30 a.m., with Senators permitted to speak therein for not more than 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 5234

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, at 10:30 a.m., the Senate will resume consideration of Calendar No. 833, H.R. 5234, the Interior appropriations bill.

RECESS BETWEEN 12 NOON AND 2 P.M. TOMORROW

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess between the hours of 12 noon and 2 pm., in order for the weekly party caucuses to meet.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, as previously indicated, at 2 p.m., there will be 30 minutes of debate on the two resolutions, to be followed by the rollcall votes on adoption of the Daniloff and terrorism resolutions.

I believe there will also be additional votes on the Interior appropriations bill. I am advised by the distinguished chairman of the committee [Mr. McCLURE] that he believes the Interior appropriations bill can be completed by sometime tomorrow afternoon. If that is the case, it is my hope that we could then move to consideration of the Labor-HHS appropriations bill. I am advised that with one exception, that bill could move rather quickly.

I am also advised that the distinguished chairman of the full Appropriations Committee [Mr. HATFIELD] will be meeting with proponents and opponents on some modification of the abortion amendment on that particular legislation.

RECESS UNTIL 10 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, there being no further business to come before the Senate, I move that the Senate stand in recess until the hour of 10 a.m. on Tuesday, September 9, 1986.

The motion was agreed to and, at 5:35 p.m., the Senate recessed until tomorrow, Tuesday, September 9, 1986, at 10 a.m.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

THE SUPREME COURT, RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AND THE YARMULKE

HON. STEPHEN J. SOLARZ

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 8, 1986

Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Speaker, the Supreme Court's recent decision to uphold the Air Force's restrictions on the wearing of yarmulkes by its personnel is an unjustifiable infringement on religious freedom. The High Court, in a 5-to-4 decision, upheld the contention of the Air Force that wearing a yarmulke while on duty would negatively affect morale and discipline within the Armed Forces.

Because I believe very strongly in the free expression of religion as defined in our Constitution, I have fought this unfair and unsound decision. Members of our Armed Forces must not be forced to choose between their sincere religious beliefs and a desire to serve their country. I am hopeful that legislation I introduced that was recently adopted as an amendment to the Defense authorization bill will end this dilemma by allowing Jewish servicemen to wear yarmulkes while on duty.

A particularly astute examination of the Court's decision and its implication can be found in an article published in America magazine by our former colleague, the Honorable Robert F. Drinan. As a former member of the House Judiciary Committee, former dean of Georgetown Law School and a respected constitutional scholar, Father Drinan is uniquely qualified to address this issue and I commend his article to the attention of my colleagues.

THE SUPREME COURT, RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AND THE YARMULKE

(By Robert F. Drinan)

What seemed an inconsequential decision has actually established a principle new to U.S. jurisprudence: that the military has more leeway to restrict religious freedom than do civilian authorities.

On March 25, 1986, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled 5 to 4 that the U.S. Air Force could require an Orthodox rabbi in its employ to remove his yarmulke when working indoors. At first the decision seemed, to some, to relate to something trivial or inconsequential. Those who were concerned expected that the Congress would quietly enact a law setting aside the decision of the Supreme Court.

But further reflection and the commentaries on this case suggest that the ruling may constitute a bad precedent that is inconsistent with several previous decisions of the Supreme Court, which allowed deviations from regulations that are perceived to be violations of the religious freedom of certain individuals.

Rabbi S. Simcha Goldman, an Orthodox Jew, since childhood observed the Jewish tradition of keeping his head covered at all times. This custom is designed to remind every person of the omnipresence of God. Between 1970 and 1972, Rabbi Goldman served as a chaplain in the U.S. Navy where he wore without incident a yarmulke or skullcap as a head covering while in uniform. In 1973 he was admitted into the Armed Forces Health Professions Scholarship Program, which provided assistance for graduates to study in exchange for a later commitment to serve on active duty in the armed services. In 1977, Rabbi Goldman received his Ph.D. degree in clinical psychology from Loyola University in Chicago. He entered active service as a captain in the U.S. Air Force and was assigned to serve in the mental health clinic of an Air Force base in California. Between September 1, 1977, and May 8, 1981, he wore a yarmulke at all times while on duty. Throughout his years of service he consistently received outstanding evaluations in each of 10 specified areas.

In April 1981, Dr. Goldman testified as a defense witness at a court-martial wearing his yarmulke. Shortly thereafter the prosecutor lodged a complaint with officials that Dr. Goldman's practice of wearing a yarmulke was a violation of an Air Force regulation that "headgear will not be worn . . . while indoors except by armed security police. . . ." On May 8, 1981, Dr. Goldman was ordered not to wear his yarmulke while on duty. He refused to comply. He was warned that failure to comply could subject him to a court-martial. Rabbi Goldman's request to wear civilian clothing pending a legal resolution of the issue was denied. His superiors also withdrew a recommendation that Dr. Goldman be allowed to extend the term of his active service; a negative recommendation was substituted.

Dr. Goldman then brought action in Federal court in Washington, D.C. After a full hearing, the Federal judge permanently enjoined the Air Force from prohibiting Dr. Goldman from wearing a yarmulke while in uniform. The trial judge also ordered the Air Force to withdraw the letter of reprimand and negative performance evaluation that had been given to Dr. Goldman.

It was hoped in 1981 that the Pentagon would accept the resolution of the issue by the trial court. But, for reasons that are not entirely clear, the Defense Department decided to spend an immense amount of energy, time and money in vindicating its decision to prevent any Orthodox Jew in the military from wearing a yarmulke while in uniform.

In the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, the Secretary of Defense (Caspar W. Weinberger) prevailed. The three-judge appeals court, reversing the trial judge, ruled that the "Air Force's interest in uniformity renders the strict enforcement of its regulation permissible." That decision was sustained by the narrowest of margins by the U.S. Supreme Court.

Justice William H. Rehnquist, writing for a majority of five, denied the validity of Dr. Goldman's claim, asserting that the Supreme Court's review of military regulations "is far more deferential than constitutional review of similar laws . . . designed for civilian society." It follows, Justice Rehnquist wrote on behalf of Chief Justice Warren E. Burger and Justices Byron R. White, Lewis F. Powell Jr. and John Paul Stevens, that "courts must give great deference to the professional judgment of military authorities. . . ." On this basis Justice Rehnquist rejected Rabbi Goldman's contention that the wearing of an unobtrusive yarmulke could not possibly undermine Air Force discipline. Justice Rehnquist set aside as simply irrelevant the expert testimony asserted by Captain Goldman's lawyers that religious exceptions to the rule against "headgear" are in fact desirable and will increase rather than decrease morale by making the Air Force a more humane place. Justice Rehnquist exalted the authority of a 190-page book of regulations concerning dress put out by the Air Force. He did concede that the regulations forbidding religious apparel such as a yarmulke, which Rabbi Goldman described as a silent devotion akin to prayer, may make military life less attractive to Orthodox Jews and to others.

Justice Stevens, giving the majority of five the deciding vote, expressed some awkwardness in his position in a curious concurring opinion. Justice Stevens conceded that "there is reason to believe" that the action against Captain Goldman had a "retaliatory motive," but he sustained the ban on a yarmulke because of the military's "interest in uniform treatment for the members of all religious faiths." He came to this conclusion even though he asserted that the "modest depature" requested by Captain Goldman "creates almost no danger of impairment of the Air Force's military mission." It seems clear that Justice Stevens, despite his desire to accommodate this "especially attractive case," could not bring himself to overrule the accumulated massive legal power of the Pentagon and the Justice Department.

Justice William J. Brennan Jr.'s dissent, strong and almost explosive, may become at least a minor classic in the legal literature on church-state relations. Justice Brennan expressed his outrage that Rabbi Goldman "was asked to violate the tenets of his faith virtually every minute of every workday." The arguments for the Air Force, Justice Brennan stated, "defy common sense." Citing the regulations of the Air Force, Justice Brennan found in these documents a way by which military officials could have and should have granted the exception to wear the yarmulke. The regulations provide that "each member has the right, within limits, to express individually through his or her appearance." The dress code, moreover, allows men to wear up to three rings, even if the rings contain a religious design. Justice Brennan rejected the standard advanced by the Air Force that the yarmulke is too visible to be accepted; that norm fails to justify any interest the military might have in uniformity of dress.

Justice Brennan's dissent concluded with an ominous warning: "The Court and the military services have presented patriotic Orthodox Jews with a painful dilemma—the choice between fulfilling a religious obligation and serving their country. Should the draft be reinstated, compulsion will replace choice." In a most unusual comment, Justice Brennan expressed the hope that the "Congress will correct this wrong."

Justice Harry A. Blackmun in dissent rejected the idea that different standards of review can be used for the military and the civilian. He cited a series of cases in which the Supreme Court has granted concessions to Seventh Day Adventists and Amish children. He stated that the Air Force "has failed to produce even a minimally credible explanation for its refusal to allow Goldman to keep his head covered indoors." Justice Blackmun expressed the view that the First Amendment must extend to the wearing of the yarmulke since for Dr. Goldman, as for many other Jews, it was "intended to keep the wearer aware of God's presence."

The dissent of Justice Sandra Day O'Connor was the surprise in the Goldman case. Joined by Justice Thurgood Marshall, she castigated the majority for failing to articulate any test whatsoever for free exercise claims in the military context. Justice O'Connor failed to see how the Government has demonstrated any "unusually important interest" or any compelling argument for its denial of a claim based on religious freedom. She was more than skeptical of the military's claim that it must insist on uniformity. She scolded the Pentagon for failing to take into account "the special importance of defending our nation without abandoning completely the freedoms that make it worth defending." She also noted that there was no allegation of any problem in Captain Goldman wearing the yarmulke from September 1977 to May 7, 1981.

It may be that the Congress, following Justice Brennan's urging, will attach an amendment to some military measure that would permit the wearing of a yarmulke for those in uniform. But the Pentagon, after its 5-to-4 victory, will continue to resist the bills that have been filed along this line. But even if the Congress does in fact enact an amendment permitting yarmulkes for those in uniform, it will in all probability not be able to overturn the reasoning of Goldman v. Weinberger. And that reasoning says in essence that the military will be given much more leeway in enacting and enforcing regulations restrictive of religious freedom than will be permitted to civilian authorities. That principle is relatively new, perhaps unprecedented, in American jurisprudence. Justice O'Connor in essence rejects it, as do the other dissenters to some extent.

The case of Rabbi Goldman somehow did not attract the attention it deserved as it was being litigated. Some felt that the issue was insignificant, even trivial or inconsequential. Many observers do not appreciate the importance, indeed the centrality, of the yarmulke to an Orthodox Jew. Perhaps the attorneys for Dr. Goldman did not dramatically or even adequately explain the significance of the yarmulke as a traditionally required reminder of the omnipresent God. In any event, Goldman v. Weinberger is now a precedent for the proposition that there will be no judicial relief for a decree of the military justified by an argument based on the need for uniformity of dress and conduct.

Captain Goldman explained his position in his brief in this moving statement: "Yarmulkes are generally understood to be a form of religious observance. They are commonly seen and accepted in today's society wherever Orthodox Jews are found. University campuses—particularly on the East Coast—have substantial numbers of young men who wear yarmulkes. On the streets of New York City, Los Angeles, Chicago or Miami, yarmulkes are commonplace. They are increasingly visible in centers of commerce, including retail businesses, brokerage houses and stock exchanges. Attorneys wearing yarmulkes can be found in the state and Federal courthouses of New York, and attorneys wearing yarmulkes have been permitted to sit in the bar section of this court and attend oral arguments."

Justice Stevens, after citing that statement in a footnote, goes on to concur in a decision that ruled that the Pentagon, alone among American institutions, can ban the wearing of the yarmulke.

Goldman v. Weinberger was a mistake. It should be rescinded by the Congress and/or reversed by the Court.

SEAN KILLION HONORED

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 8, 1986

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues the outstanding accomplishments of Sean Killion of Cherry Hill, who participated in the Goodwill Games in Moscow.

An exceptional athlete, Sean won two gold medals and a bronze medal at the games. He defeated this longtime idol Vladimer Salnikov in the 400-meter freestyle event, a great personal accomplishment for Sean.

Sean's achievements are a reflection of his hard work and dedication and should serve as an example to all young athletes.

His noteworthy performance in Moscow in these highly competitive games brings great honor, not only to himself, but to the entire Nation. Sean is truly worthy of very special recognition.

I am certain that my colleagues would be pleased to join with me and Sean's family and friends in congratulating him on his outstanding performance in the Goodwill Games and in wishing him the very best in all his future endeavors.

SLOW GROWTH REQUIRES CHANGES IN GRAMM-RUDMAN

HON. BARNEY FRANK

OF MASSACHUSETTS

Monday, September 8, 1986

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, I found a great deal to disagree with in Gramm-Rudman. But the silliest piece of that bill was the assumption that we could in December 1985 make binding assumptions about the rate of growth in the economy as bases on which to mandate specific fiscal policy for the next 5 years. Unfortunately, it has taken even less time than many of us expected for the economy to behave in a way that makes Gramm-Rudman even less sensible than it was when originally proposed.

The indisputable fact is that the economy has grown since last year at a rate significantly below what Gramm-Rudman assumed. This means that the deficit target set by Gramm-Rudman for fiscal 1987 is reachable only at extremely painful economic cost. That is, at a time when the economy is sagging, Gramm-Rudman demands—as originally passed—that we engage in counterproductive fiscal policy. As John Berry noted in the August 17 Business Section of the Washington Post, "A growing number of economists are warning that the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings budget deficit targets for fiscal 1987 will require spending cuts or tax increases so large that they would severely damage the economy."

As I have previously noted on the floor, a wide range of economists, conservative and liberal, Democratic and Republican, agree that in the face of the severe slowdown in growth that has occurred since the passage of Gramm-Rudman, it makes no economic sense to stick with the Gramm-Rudman target for fiscal 1987. John Berry's article documents the economic consensus on this point quite well and I ask that it be printed here.

WILL BUDGET CUTS HURT ECONOMY?

(By John M. Berry)

A growing number of economists are warning that the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings budget deficit targets for fiscal 1987 will require spending cuts or tax increases so large that they would severely damage the economy.

The Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law aims for a 1987 deficit of $144 billion. Reaching that level from this year's deficit of $225 billion or so, these economists believe, will require too much fiscal restraint for a sluggish economy to swallow in one dose. Some suggest that forcing it down could send the economy into recession.

Government spending, like consumer outlays or business investment, is part of the total economy. If it is reduced, there is less demand for goods and services, and the economy slows. If taxes are increased, individuals and businesses have less after-tax income to spend, which has the same depressing effect on the economy. Economists are less certain about these relationships than they used to be, but they generally agree that, in the short run, a very large, rapid reduction in the deficit could slow economic growth.

Instead of trying for an $80 billion cut in one year—which would equal about 2 percent of the gross national product—a number of economists say a reduction of about half that size, to a deficit of around $180 billion, would be more appropriate.

Other analysts say that they also would be worried about the impact of the fiscal restraint if they thought there was any real chance that Congress would take meaningful steps to get close to the $144 billion target. Some changes under consideration, such as selling government assets or moving a military pay day by one day at the end of the fiscal year, would effect the deficit but have virtually no economic impact.

No less an advocate of smaller deficits than Federal Reserve Chairman Paul A. Volcker recently suggested in congressional testimony that the 1987 deficit target is too ambitious.

Volcker has long argued that large budget deficits have contibuted to creation of the nation's enormous trade deficit and helped keep interest rates higher than they otherwise would have been.

But like the other economists expressing concern that an $80 billion or larger reduction in the deficit in one year would squeeze the economy too hard, Volcker indicated he believes that a cut of that magnitude could prove to be too much of a good thing—though it clearly made him uncomfortable to say so.

At the Congressional Budget Office, Director Rudolph G. Penner shares Volcker's concern, though following the CBO's usual practice, he will not make a specific policy recommendation on the matter.

"It was something we worried about a lot in making our forecast," Penner said.

That forecast showed the economy growing at a 3.5 percent pace during 1987, after adjustment for inflation. And it assumed a deficit of $154 billion, the upper limit of a $10 billion tolerance range allowed by Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, rather than $144 billion.

In its economic and budget update, released earlier this month, CBO put it this way:

"The short-run impacts of such large changes in fiscal policy and the tax structure are a subject of controversy among economists. CBO's forecast assumes that the short-run contractionary impact of changing fiscal policy will be quickly offset by an improved trade balance and by lower interest rates than would otherwise prevail. If these offsetting forces occur more slowly than expected, an increase in economic growth may be delayed."

Penner believes that the growing internationalization of the American economy has weakened the previous link between changes in fiscal policy and changes in economic activity. Since 1982, the large budget deficits have been accompanied by large and rising trade deficits that have offset some of the economic stimulus that the budget deficits provided.

Now CBO is counting on these relationships to be symmetrical, with a falling trade deficit to provide an economic spur for U.S. production and consumption at the same time the declining budget deficit is having a restraining influence.

"Our forecast is highly dependent on that relationship," Penner said, "and some of our economists have voiced concern that they may not work in tandem.

"Interest rates are also related," he explains. "The marketplace has moved some of the good of reducing deficits forward" through lower rates.

And that also causes the CBO director to raise a point about changing the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings targets. "There would be a real question how the marketplace would react to that, especially if we're right that part of the interest rate decision was due to a sense that we have some sense of discipline in the [budget] process."

Alan Greenspan, the former chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers who now heads Townsend-Greenspan & Co., a New York economic consulting firm, is another advocate of smaller deficits who is troubled by the 1987 target and its possible impact.

"It has become increasingly evident in recent weeks that the $144 billion target set for fiscal 1987 followed by a 1988 target of $108 billion is probably unreachable," Greenspan told his clients recently.

"The budget deficit for fiscal 1986 is likely to be $220 billion, or perhaps even larger. With the economic outlook somewhat subdued, the prospect of enough growth in revenues to reduce the deficit sharply, even should spending be constrained significantly, looks remote . . . Certainly, after the November elections when it becomes politically safer to oppose G-R-H, one must assume a plethora of proposals will be forthcoming to alter the path of deficit reduction."

Another former CEA chairman, Martin Feldstein of Harvard University, is questioning the appropriateness of the targets if the economy remains sluggish, and particularly if unemployment starts to go up. During his time at the CEA, Feldstein repeatedly raised White House hackles by urging quick action to reduce the growing budgetary red ink.

Earlier this month, Feldstein and his wife, who also is an economist, wrote in a newspaper column, "In the near term the necessary process of deficit reduction is [an] important contractionary effect to worry about.

"During the past year the prospect of significant deficit reduction by Congress has helped bring down interest rates and contributed to the dollar's decline and thus has boosted economic activity. But the actual deficit reduction that can be expected between 1986 and 1987 is a two-edged sword," the Feldsteins said.

"The resulting confidence in declining deficits will continue to encourage lower interest rates and to maintain a competitive dollar. But at the same time the actual deficit reduction means less demand for goods and services and therefore a temporary decline in economic activity."

The Feldsteins said that it is important not to cause financial market participants to doubt that deficit reduction will occur. "Loss of confidence in Congress could result in rising interest rates and a sinking stock market that would further depress business investment.

"However, it would be wise to redefine deficit reduction goals if the economy does slow down," they continued. "Tax revenue automatically falls and the deficit swells when the economy slows down. It would be just the wrong response for Congress to cut spending even further in that situation. The proper goal of deficit reduction in the next few years should be adjusted for the business cycle. If the economy slows and unemployment rises, the target level for the deficit should raise accordingly."

The Feldsteins suggested this rule of thumb: raise the target level by $4 billion for each one-tenth of percentage point increase in the nation's unemployment rate above current levels of 7 percent.

Roger Brinner of Data Resources Inc., an economic consulting and forecasting firm, last month proposed a similar rule of thumb, with a $5 billion shift of the target instead of $4 billion.

"The targets must be amended only in detail, not in principle," Brinner wrote in the DRI Review. "The economic environment is not as robust as originally hoped, and the budgetary takeoff position is weaker. The original legislation called for steady progress ($36 billion per year) toward budget balance by 1991, assuming the economy would then be characterized by a 6 percent unemployment rate. Furthermore, it was assumed that the fiscal 1986 deficit could be reduced to approximately $180 billion through tough budgetary initiatives early this.

"With the economy unable to break away from 7 percent unemployment and with a projected 1986 deficit of $220 billion, however, a $35 billion to $40 billion increase in next year's target and a new medium-term path for deficit reduction are justified," he said.

Brinner's proposed path would take the deficit down to $50 billion in 1991 instead of zero, as under Gramm-Rudman-Hollings.

Economists are far less sure these days that they know how to measure properly the size of a budget deficit or to calculate its likely economic impact.

For instance, Robert Eisner of Northwestern University argues in his book, "How Real Is the Federal Deficit," that the reported deficit must be reduced by the loss of real value in the outstanding public debt due to inflation. Thus, in 1986, with about a 2 percent inflation rate and roughly $1.5 trillion worth of publicly owned federal debt, there is about a $30 billion offset.

John Paulus, managing director and chief economist of Morgan Stanley & Co., a New York investment banking firm, also says that the holders of federal debt recognize the loss of real value in their holdings each year and respond by reinvesting an amount equal to that loss of real value.

If Paulus is right, the impact of large deficits on financial markets, and therefore on interest rates, could be considerably less than one might suppose. By his accounting, it would take actual deficit reductions considerably smaller than those set by Gramm-Rudman-Hollings to put the deficit by 1991 into what he calls a "neutral" position as far as financial markets are concerned. Gramm-Rudman-Hollings calls for a balanced budget that year.

But whatever adjustments one makes to the calculation of the size of the deficit and its likely economic impact, there remains the worry that reducing it by more than $80 billion in one year alone may be too much.

"For those of us who highly prize economic growth and low unemployment, the risk of insufficient fiscal stimulus must be weighted heavily," Eisner concludes, in his book. "One cannot properly counsel budget balancing in an economy with unemployment still near 7 percent and real economic growth well below its potential.

"The politics of Gramm-Rudman notwithstanding, a budget balanced by current federal rules of accounting is an invitation to economic disaster," Eisner declares.

Politically, no one wants to go before the electorate this fall vulnerable to a charge by an opponent that he or she is in favor of big deficits. Politically and economically, the question is how fast the deficit—which clearly will be a record in fiscal 1986, which ends next month—can be safely reduced.

WHY STAR WARS IS BAD FOR BUSINESS

HON. ROBERT W. KASTENMEIER

OF WISCONSIN

Monday, September 8, 1986

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, although star wars is a giant pork barrel in the sky for the industrial-military complex, it will drain talent from our civilian industries and hurt business research and development.

I would like to call to the attention of my colleagues an article that appears in the September 1986 issue of Dun's Business Month, written by Fred V. Guterl, which states why star wars is bad for American business.

STAR WARS IS BAD FOR BUSINESS—IT WON'T LEAD TO MAJOR COMMERCIAL SPINOFFS AND IT WILL HURT BUSINESS R&D, MILITARY TECHNOLOGY EXPERTS SAY

(By Fred V. Guterl)

Star wars: Tens of thousands of nuclear warheads climb on plumes of brightly glowing gas, arcing over the northern wastelands of the Soviet Union, barely twenty minutes from the United States. In space, a web of battle stations that covers half the globe looks down and unleashes a fury of weaponry: X-ray lasers powered by nuclear explosions, magnetic rail-guns that hurl football sized bullets, huge lasers on the ground that pick off the few remaining warheads in their descent.

Since March 1983, when President Reagan marshaled the nation's scientists and engineers to research an antimissile shield, debate has raged over its technical and political feasibility. But the widely-held assumption that the dazzling technology of the Star Wars project would boost U.S. industry's competitiveness and generate substantial spinoffs for commercial use has gone largely unquestioned.

Everyone agrees that the Strategic Defense Initiative, as Star Wars is properly called, will advance military technology. But dozens of military research experts from government, business and academia told DUN'S BUSINESS MONTH that they are skeptical about the benefits of Star Wars for commercial industry. Although some believe that business spinoffs may eventually emerge, these are impossible to identify at present and are likely to occur by happenstance if at all.

"Most of the technology in SDI just doesn't have any equivalent application in the commercial sector," says Arvid G. Larson, principal at Booz Allen & Hamilton Inc. and a consultant to SDI. Furthermore, by shifting resources to military projects, they argue, SDI may actually impair business R&D. "Mega-projects like SDI take some of the most sophisticated and best people away from commercial R&D," says consultant Edward E. David, White House science adviser to President Nixon.

Nevertheless, SDI proponents assert that Star Wars will produce a technological renaisance in the U.S. Lieutenant General James Abrahamson, director of the SDI Organization, has insisted that the program "will so stimulate the national economy that it will pay for itself."

Spinoffs would account for much of the civilian benefits, says James Ionson, director of research for SDI. "It would be easy for commercial industry to adapt these technologies," he says, "just a matter of adjusting a few knobs and dials, so to speak." Computer technology for tracking missiles could be used for airport traffic, beam weapons for destroying missiles could lead to better surgical tools, rail guns could be adapted for transportation, and so on. Ionson likens the SDI to the Apollo space venture. "For every $1 spent by NASA, there were $8 returned to commercial industry," he asserts.

After three years of research, SDI advocates claim that Star Wars' potential commercial benefits will rival those of past military ventures; the outgrowth of commercial aviation from Air Force work, the computer industry from research in the National Security Agency, and the semiconductor industry from the Minuteman intercontinental ballistic missile.

But SDI research does not have obvious uses in commercial enterprise. "There have been spinoffs from military technology in the past," says Booz Allen's Larson, "but SDI does not fall into that category." For example, experts doubt that laser weapons could be turned to industrial use. "These lasers are fun to look at and talk about," says Wolfgang H. Demisch, aerospace analyst at First Boston Corp., "but there sure as hell aren't going to be direct spinoffs."

In past programs, contrary to common belief, the military generally has not acted as a progenitor of technology. SDI will be no different, experts argue. When Boeing designed its first 707 wide-body jet for the Air Force in the 1950s, its executives recognized early on the commercial potential of the plane, says Bruce Allesina, the company's SDI engineering manager. Likewise, the integrated circuit was invented at commercial firms. The Minuteman missile program created a market for ICs, helping semiconductor makers to bring costs down.

The lion's share of SDI funds are tagged for the development of highly-specialized weapons. For one thing, only 3% of the SDI budget—less than $100 million this year—goes for basic research into broadly applicable technologies, such as high-speed computers that use light instead of electrical current, an area of much promise. The rest is applied research and development. About three-quarters goes to defense contractors, such as Boeing's $300 million award to develop an airborne system for tracking incoming missiles, and General Dynamic's $40 million rail-gun contract. The remaining 20% goes to Department of Energy laboratories for such R&D projects as high-powered lasers.

Moreover, the requirements for military and civilian industries have diverged sharply in recent years, experts say, reducing the likelihood of spinoffs. The new fighter made by Grumman Corp., for example, has wings that sweep forward to give it an extraordinary agility useful in dogfights but not in commercial industry. The machine-tool industry became overdependent on the DOD's contracts for numerically-controlled machines in the 1970s, leaving it flat-footed against overseas competition, says Jay S. Stowsky, a policy analyst at the University of California at Berkeley.

The goal in military work is reliability regardless of cost, says Warren F. Davis, a research physicist at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and a ten-year veteran of military research. "That's not the case in the commercial world."

Overreliability also severely limited spinoffs from Apollo, despite the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's efforts to promote them. For example, in one NASA demonstration, a heat-resistent paint was so good it didn't char even when the underlying metal began to melt. But it was impractically expensive. "The program was a dismal failure," says an ex-NASA official who requested anonymity.

Moreover, military R&D has produced commercially-applicable technologies in relatively few instances, and even then the commercial payoff is slow in coming. DOD funded artificial intelligence research for thirty years before it became commercially useful. Similarly, many computer scientists doubt that SDI funds will quicken the pace of innovation in software needed to produce the anti-missile shield.

SDI critics contend that useful technology from SDI may remain bottled up in secrecy for years before the commercial sector gets access to it. "If work is unclassified, people will jump all over it like mice to find a way to use it," says David Williamson, a policy consultant to NASA. "But if it's classified, it will sit behind green doors."

It is difficult to assess how much of the SDI program is classified. But sources say that virtually every SDI program is classified in part. According to Lawrence Longerbeam, director of the technology transfer program at DOE's Lawrence Livermore Laboratories, "close to half of our almost $1 billion budget goes to classified research. That stuff is strictly protected and doesn't go anywhere outside this lab."

Work done by defense contractors, the bulk of the SDI program, involve even more restrictions. Scientists doubt that basic SDI research will be communicated freely in light of the Reagan Administration's touchiness about the dissemination of unclassified research with military potential.

What about the argument that business will benefit from a workforce versed in the state-of-the-art technology of SDI? "It's not widgets, gadgets, or doohickies that are important, but people who change jobs and bring with them the knowledge they've gained." says Gerold Yonas, who recently left his position as chief scientist at SDI to become vice president at Titan Corp., an SDI contractor.

Critics dispute these claims, too. Just as weapons are over-designed for civilian use, researchers often become pigeonholed into military specialties, according to MITs Davis. "The military's need-to-know policies, in which a researcher is told only as much as he's needed to do his job creates a professional myopia."

Workers from large-scale technical projects in the past have had trouble finding jobs, says. Booz Allen's Larson. "In southern Florida, you see a lot of pizza parlors run by ex-Apollo computer programmers," he says, If SDI is deployed, he adds, "it will be a massive military construction project. But when it ends, all these trained people will have nowhere to go."

Meanwhile, SDI, and military R&D in general, is draining talent from civilian research, which is shrinking as a result of government spending cutbacks. A new $350 million fusion energy facility at Lawrence Livermore Laboratories sits idle for lack of funds, says John Holdren, professor of energy and resources at the University of California at Berkeley. "Fusion research is being converted wholesale to weapons research," he asserts. "I see people pick up their files and walk 150 feet away to the beam weapons lab next door."

Heavy SDI recruitment in the glamour fields leaves few warm bodies for mundane civilian pursuits. David. Nixon's science adviser, says "Researchers are being drawn into aerospace and computer-related fields, and in the meantime our manufacturing technology is going to the dogs."

The brain drain pushes up salaries for technical talent—at least for the four-to-six years it takes for universities to produce more graduates. After that, "the market is destabilized, to the detriment of industry," says Professor Frank R. Lichtenberg of Columbia University, who has studied the economic effects of military R&D spending.

It is also feared that high-paying SDI contracts will lure away the best and the brightest from business. Computer software specialists, in particular, have been scarce for several years.

To be sure, as SDI officials hasten to note, the project's goal is not to nurture commercial industry but to protect national security. But it is de facto the nation's technology policy because it is so big: roughly $90 billion by 1994 and hundreds of billions if the anti-missile shield is ever built. Even budgeted at slightly less than $4 billion for 1987, it already is the single largest government R&D project. "The U.S. has no political consensus for industrial policy or technology development except for issues dealing with national security," says First Boston's Demisch.

As a national security issue, SDI must be decided on its defense merits rather than its business implications. Ironically, SDI's commercial potential is being used as political propaganda for the program. "The whole issue of commercial spinoffs," says military analyst John Pike of the Federation of American Scientists, a private research group, "is to sell the program to the public." But that doesn't make Star Wars good for business.

MINNESOTA GOVERNOR FLOYD B. OLSON 50 YEAR COMMEMORATIVE EVENT

HON. BRUCE F. VENTO

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 8, 1986

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, my State of Minnesota is a wellspring of important political leaders, but no Governor captured the heart of the common man as did Governor Floyd B. Olson. Indeed, his leadership was felt across our great Nation.

Many of the things that working people take for granted were innovations that were pioneered by Floyd B. Olson, an illustrious Governor of Minnesota in the 1930's. The right to organize, health and pension benefits, laws prohibiting the exploitation of women and children, safety regulations to prevent taxation based on ability to pay, a public education system that does not favor the wealthy and the powerful, et cetera, are a partial listing of the things for which Olson worked during his lifetime.

Farmers found a champion in Floyd B. Olson. He fought for fair prices for their crops, for conservation measures to protect the land, for rural electrification programs, for credit they could afford and for laws to prevent unjust foreclosures.

He fought for the rights of small business against monopolies, trusts, railroads and utilities which tried to stifle competition to their own interest. He knew that Minnesota's future rested, not with economic giants, but with individual initiative and enterpirse.

During Minnesota's centennial in 1958, farmers, workers and small business were the principal sponsors in establishing a permanent tribute to Olson in the form of a statue in front of the State Capitol.

Floyd B. Olson died 50 years ago. In commemoration of his life and times, the Minnesota Historical Society opened an exhibit in the rotunda area of the capitol on Saturday morning, August 23.

The exhibit, which will be a permanent part of the Minnesota Historical Society presentations, should be seen by all who profess a concern for others. Pictures, newreels, newspaper accounts, and radio transcripts are a small part of the display which give us a true sense of our historical and political heritage in Minnesota.

The program and rededication of the Governor Floyd B. Olson statue was led by current Governor Rudy Perpich, Olson's daughter, Mrs. Patricia Krantz, DFL State Chairwoman Ruth Esala, and other political leaders and agricultural organization leaders instrumental in the ascendancy of Floyd B. Olson's Farmer/Labor political party, the predecessor to the Democratic Farm Labor (DFL) Policital Party of Minnesota. The chairman of the event was State Representative James Rice, who assembled a Commemorative Committee to which I was privileged to lend my support, is due special commendation for the significant and successful effort he expended to this moving program. The following is an article written by Russell Fridley about Floyd Olson which points out the special qualities and service that characterize this Minnesota legend.

STATE'S GREATEST GOVERNOR? MANY QUICKLY NAME FLOYD B. OLSON

(By Russell Fridley)

Among the remarkable number of political leaders that Minnesota has produced, Floyd B. Olson, governor between 1931 and 1936, wins my nomination as the most extraordinary of them all. The 50th anniversary of his death (Aug. 22, 1936) will be observed by a commemorative program at the State Capitol Aug. 23.

Olson lore—highlighting his magnetism, oratory, humanity, courage, decency, sex drive, alcoholism, intellect—is still to be found in abundance in all corners of the state. This collection of indelible memories of him illuminates the character, personality and lasting imprint of a public figure possessing rare natural gifts, whose personal flaws were tolerated sympathetically by Minnesotans.

They elected him governor three times on a third-party ticket. A half-century after his death, Olson remains a compelling and captivating leader during a time of the utmost economic and social stress. In 1964, the Minnesota Historical Society asked 32 teachers of Minnesota history and politics to name the state's five outstanding governors. Floyd B. Olson was far and away the first choice. My guess is that a poll today would reach a similar conclusion.

Journalist Eric Sevareid, a student at the University of Minnesota during Olson's governorship, was impressed by Olson's popularity with students and considered him a better speaker than Franklin D. Roosevelt. In the words of Arthur Naftalin, producer of a television series on governors who served since 1931, "The governorship of Floyd Olson remains a golden memory in Minnesota history."

Stafford King, long-time Republican state auditor who was elected to his first term at the same time Olson was elected to his, considered Olson a genius as a leader presiding over a broad coalition that stretched across the spectrum of Minnesota politics. King, in oral history interviews, described Olson as clearly the most outstanding of the 10 governors with whom he served between 1931 and 1967. George A. Selke, university president and official in the Orville L. Freeman administration, praised Olson's first-rate intellect. Theodore S. Slen of Madison, Minn., a Democrat in the state Senate during the 1930s, emphasized Olson's empathy with people. He never forgot who put him in office.

Standing 6 foot 2, blue-eyed handsome, virile, aggressive, Olson had the common touch with persons from all walks of life. Comfortable in meeting a mob of thousands who marched on the State Capitol and able to disarm their anger with uplifting oratory and a message of hope, he was equally at home in addressing a crowd of students on university and college campuses or in the company of wealthy friends and foes with whom he frequently mingled socially—at country clubs and summer resorts.

With most of the newspapers opposed to him, Olson became the first Minnesota governor to make extensive use of radio and the lecture platform. A virtuoso as a speaker, his powerful voice, theatrical delivery, clear analysis of the issues and satirical humor captivated his audiences.

Olson, originally a Democrat, went down to defeat as the Farmer-Labor party's standard bearer for governor in 1924. He made a successful comeback in 1930, agreeing to accept the Farmer-Labor nomination for governor only if he were allowed to write the platform. Olson's rhetoric was usually more radical than his actions; in fact, he largely ignored the radical planks of the 1930 platform. With his re-election in 1932, he effected a political alliance with Franklin D. Roosevelt, and thereafter his policies generally foreshadowed or reflected those of the New Deal.

Despite a hostile legislature, Olson secured large appropriations for the relief of unemployment, a two-year moratorium on farm mortgage foreclosures, and old-age pensions; he implemented measures to conserve the environment and secured the state's first income tax law in 1933. His bold intervention in the 1933 Hormel strike and the violent Minneapolis truckers' strike a year later exhibited his uncommon skill at negotiation and forged a successful settlement between management and labor.

Olson's re-election to a third term in 1934—this time with strong backing from urban labor and reform forces—promised a more radical program. The Farmer-Labor Party's 1934 platform, a startling document, proposed public ownership of all industry, banking, insurance and public utilities, as well as the formation of a "co-operative commonwealth." Toward the end of his governorship, Olson's rural support dwindled but his strength in urban areas increased. His third term was a turbulent one, marred by strikes and intraparty fights, increasing disagreements over patronage, and hampered by a virtual deadlock in the legislature.

Harry H. Peterson, Olson's attorney general, when asked "How much of the success of the Farmer-Labor Party was due to Floyd Olson?" replied, "About 99 percent."

He held together a tenuous coalition: workers, farmers, co-operatives, isolationists, socialists, prohibitionists and progressives. Many of these citizens sought solutions outside of the two major parties for a better way to reform society, others were defectors from the Republican and Democratic parties or opponents of war—principally German and Scandinavian Americans. Olson led the most successful third party in American history to its greatest victories, drawing strength from and enlarging upon Minnesota's sturdy populist tradition.

At his death of cancer at age 44, there was an unparalleled outpouring of grief by the people of Minnesota. An estimated 200,000 filed by his bier at the State Capitol; the Minneapolis auditorium was packed to capacity at his funeral; and thousands more listened at loudspeakers outside the building to Wisconsin Gov. Philip F. LaFollette's eulogy. As part of the 50th anniversary program on Aug. 23, the Minnesota Historical Society will open an exhibit illuminating Olson's life and times and captivating personality.

The sense of loss and the depth to which it was felt by Minnesotans is poignantly summed up by the daughter of an Albert Lea Farmer-Laborite: "I saw my father weep tears only two times, once when my mother died and once when he returned from Floyd B. Olson's funeral."

In his second inaugural address, delivered during the depths of the Great Depression in 1933, Olson observed, "We are assembled during the most crucial period in the history of any nation and our state. Just beyond the horizon is rampant lawlessness and possible revolution. Only remedial social legislation, national and state, can prevent its appearance." No political leader from this state has so clearly sensed the trend of the times and possessed the eloquence and ability to rally the people to support his program of marked change in the role of state government.

Olson offered hope to the victims of the Great Depression and championed a larger role for government, a political philosophy in retreat today. Many thought he was destined for the White House, and his untimely death invites endless speculation on what his future might have been as the war clouds gathered and the wartime effort replaced the reform crusade of the early years of the Great Depression.

The Farmer-Labor Party he led brought about widespread citizen participation in political affairs and produced courageous leaders who crusaded for social justice. Its legacy—and Olson's—is a strong orientation of Minnesota voters toward social concerns, progressive reforms, high taxation for a high level of public services and, above all, the issue-oriented and independent political tradition for which Minnesota is known.

FLORIO HONORS JACK FRANCIS

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 8, 1986

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of my colleagues the courage and heroism of Mr. Jack Francis, an outstanding resident of New Jersey's First Congressional District.

On the morning of June 28, Jack was loading his car for a family trip when he saw smoke coming from his neighbor, Mr. Kern's home. Jack quickly forced his way through the back door and rescued Kern's sister Annemarie and her daughters, ages 4 and 7.

Realizing that Mrs. Kern's father, John, was still inside, Jack rushed back into the burning building. Locating him on the second floor, Jack guided John out of the house.

Mr. Speaker such a demonstration of bravery and courage is truly worthy of very special recognition. I am certain that my colleagues would be pleased to join with me and Jack's family and friends in honoring Jack for his life-saving heroism.

AFRICA'S NEW LEADERS: TAKING CHARGE AND MAKING REFORMS

HON. MARGE ROUKEMA

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 8, 1986

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Speaker, a unique look at Africa's new leaders, in terms of their commitment to improving the well-being of their people, occurred recently as Joan Holmes, global executive director of the Hunger Project, undertook a monthlong visit to five eastern and southern African nations.

The subject has been on Ms. Holmes' mind, as well as a focus of concern for the Hunger Project, for some months. In April, she attended the United Nations Economic Commission for Africa conference and was struck by the new spirit among Africa's leadership for taking charge and instituting reforms.

In her position as head of the organization of more than 4.3 million individuals committed to the end of the persistence of hunger by the close of the century, Ms. Holmes wrote the following opinion article, which was published by the Christian Science Monitor.

Although the views expressed are strictly those of Ms. Holmes, I am pleased to share the text of the article with my colleagues and the American people, who will find in Ms. Holmes' observations an interesting and encouraging perspective on hunger in Africa.

AFRICA'S NEW LEADERS: TAKING CHARGE AND MAKING REFORMS

(By Joan Holmes)

Common wisdom has it that Africa is overwhelmingly burdened with leaders who are corrupt, incompetent, and uncaring dictators. At a time when millions have faced starvation, Africa's leaders are seen to be doing little to benefit their own people.

Yet, last month while in Cameroon for the Silver Jubilee Conference of the UN Economic Commission for Africa (UNECA), I was once again struck by how grossly oversimplified and largely inaccurate this oft-repeated stereotype is.

In recent years a new spirit has taken hold among the leadership of numerous African nations—publicly acknowledged accountability for past errors; a willingness to shed failed policies and adopt pragmatic new approaches; a commitment to resolve the economic and agricultural problems of the continent; and most significantly, an acceptance that the responsibility for economic and social change rests with Africa itself.

Also largely unnoticed has been the emergence of a new generation of leadership which has come of age in the years since independence. Many of those in this generation place the highest political primacy in African self-reliance and self-sufficiency. In the words of Adebayo Adedeji, executive secretary of UNECA, the resulting policy reforms could spell the "revolution of the century" in Africa. They could also ultimately break the back of persistent hunger and underdevelopment on the continent.

In Zimbabwe Prime Minister Robert Mugabe's government has committed itself to providing peasant farmers with low-interest loans, access to extension services, and other support. As a result, Zimbabwe has achieved record harvests and is exporting food to neighboring African nations, even as far away as Ethiopia.

In Zambia, President Kenneth Kaunda, Africa's highly respected senior statesman, has sparked a national "economic crusade" to revitalize the country's economy. His efforts to encourage domestic food production and decrease dependency on imports have necessarily brought with them short-term hardship; the price of the country's basic foodstuff, cornmeal, has risen substantially, and gasoline prices have doubled. Kaunda's political courage in taking these difficult steps is obvious.

In Ghana, 39-year-old Chief of State Jerry Rawlings has risked alienating the middle class by raising farm prices, cutting urban food subsidies, and devaluing the currency. These much-needed reforms have led to four assassination attempts against him. Yet, coupled with increased rainfall, they also helped produce a bumper harvest—enough to feed the country's population, with some surplus left over for export.

This movement for self-sufficiency is a continent-wide phenomenon.

In a landmark document—the "Addis Ababa Declaration"—28 African heads of state declared last year that: "We reaffirm that the development of our continent is the primary responsibility of our governments and peoples. We are, therefore, determined to take concrete actions and measures individually and collectively for the achievement of the economic development of our continent. . . ."

In more concrete terms, the declaration calls upon African governments to earmark 20 to 25 percent of their public spending for agriculture and food production by 1990. Several countries—among them Zimbabwe—have already made substantial progress toward that goal, and in Cameroon last month, senior officials of 50 African countries again endorsed this target.

The African economy is at the crossroads, Dr. Adedeji says, and 1986 is a "fateful year . . . our year with destiny." Keenly aware that Africa cannot go it alone, that international financial and technical support will be required if the new direction in Africa is to be sustained and have a chance of success, Adedeji told the assembled delegates at the Cameroon conference:

"Africa must demonstrate in every practical way its recognition of the need to bear the burden of its development. It must convince the skeptical and increasingly cynical world of its commitment and determination by tightening its belt and putting in place appropriate austerity measures, as well as by accepting the self-discipline required to achieve an economic turnaround."

As Africans shoulder the burden they must bear, the ball moves back in the donor nations' court. An early test is upon us, as the United Nations General Assembly convenes today in a special session on Africa, the first time the UN has focused solely on the needs of one continent. At the session, African nations will present a program of economic recovery which they themselves have devised, and for which they have pledged to provide 70 percent of the funding. How the donor nations of Western Europe and North America respond to this request for long-term partnership and assistance will send a strong signal to Africa's leaders, indicating to them the extent to which they can count on the international community to support them in the difficult course they are charting.

Nearly a year ago, President Abdou Diouf of Senegal, chairman of the Organization of African Unity, addressed a conference of the heads of state of more than half of Africa's countries. "At stake," he said, "is our credibility before our own people, before the entire world, indeed before history." At this critical time for Africa's future, a time that former World Bank president Robert McNamara has called "the opportunity of a decade, if not of a generation," President Diouf's words speak to us all.

COMMEMORATE 20TH ANNIVERSARY OF SIMON'S ROCK OF BARD COLLEGE

HON. SILVIO O. CONTE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

Monday, September 8, 1986

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to commemorate the 20th anniversary of Simon's Rock of Bard College in Great Barrington, MA, the only 4-year, liberal arts college in the Nation exclusively enrolling high-school-age students. I want my colleagues to know about this educational experiment that worked, and continues to work well.

Convinced that the traditional route to a college degree through secondary and higher education was stymieing the educational aspirations of many 15- and 16-year-olds, Elizabeth Blodgett Hall, former headmistress of Concord Academy, founded Simon's Rock 20 years ago. In 1979, Simon's Rock became an integral, but distinct part of Bard College, a 125-year-old liberal arts college in Annandale-on-Hudson, NY.

This wonderful college not only offers a rigorous academic program, but it does so in a social environment appropriate to adolescents. It challenges the students intellectually, but does not imitate the laissez-faire atmosphere of traditional college campuses nor presume premature adulthood. The young men and women who enter Simon's Rock generally have completed the 10th or 11th grade in high school, although some have completed the 9th grade and are admitted for a bridge year before being allowed to enter the college program. This year, the college received nearly 6,000 inquiries from prospective students, 2½ times as many as made such a request last year, but will only be able to enroll 120 new students. Secretary of Education William Bennett recently suggested that we need to loosen "the chronological lockstep by which children ordinarily enter and progress through school * * * to provide for differences in children's abilities." Simon's Rock has been doing that for 20 years.

The college is accredited by the New England Association of Schools and Colleges to award the B.A. degree in seven interdisciplinary areas, the BPS degree in a combined vocational/liberal arts curriculum, and the AA in liberal arts. The academic program is based on a strong core curriculum in general education, which requires foreign language study, and an emphasis on independent learning that culminates in a required senior thesis. Many students take advantage of several programs of study leading toward additional degrees at other institutions. This innovative set of "3-2" programs combines 3 years of undergraduate study at Simon's Rock, with 2 years of graduate work at other institutions, leading to an MSW from Hunter College, an MBA from the University of Rochester, and a MPA from Syracuse University. The college offers several other innovative programs, including a mandatory workshop in language and thinking designed to help students develop the communications skills needed to compete at the college level, and intensive foreign language study programs. Significant support is offered to qualified minority students through the W.E.B. DuBois Scholars Program, named in honor of the distinguished social critic and historian who was born and lived in Great Barrington.

This beautiful campus is located on 275 acres in the southern part of the Berkshires. Its library houses over 50,000 volumes, special collections, and a growing number of recording and periodicals, supplemented by more than 170,000 volumes at Bard's library. Twenty-nine academic, residential, and administrative buildings complete the physical plant, together with a computer center, a 180-seat theater, athletic facilities, and an arts complex.

But the real story of Simon's Rock is the success of its graduates. Young men and women who otherwise might have had their educational aspirations frustrated by traditional educational offerings, are now performing as physicians, teachers, lawyers, businessmen and women, archeologists, artists, ministers, bankers, musicians, graduate students, and in virtually every other walk of life.

Mr. Speaker, President Leon Botstein, Provost U Ba Win, the overseers and trustees, faculty, and administration have given of themselves to build upon the vision of founder and President Emerita Elizabeth Blodgett Hall to sustain and nurture this experiment in education. Together with the student body, they have made Simon's Rock an important and successful part of the community of Great Barrington, western Massachusetts, the Commonwealth, and the Nation's higher education enterprise.

I am proud to represent Simon's Rock of Bard College and I salute them on the occasion of their 20th anniversary, to be celebrated at convocation ceremonies on this coming Saturday, September 13, 1986, Simon's Rock of Bard College Day in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

CONGRESS—CULPRIT IN ESCALATING COLLEGE COSTS

HON. DOUG BEREUTER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 8, 1986

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, this Member commends to the attention of his colleagues, and particularly those working on the conference agreement for the reauthorization of the Higher Education Act, the following editorial comment from the August 28, 1986, New York Times.

In particular, the editorial points a finger at a Congress whose good intentions allowed many private colleges to make the decision to raise their fees dramatically during the halcyon days of limitless student aid.

Additionally, the crisis in college costs is carried beyond the college years, as borrowing students rack up tens of thousands of dollars in student aid debts "before they even earn a dime."

[From the New York Times, Aug. 28, 1986]

WHY SO COSTLY?

(By Warren T. Brookes)

As the college semester approaches, taxpayers, especially those with college-bound offspring, brace for another annual shakedown by the "Ivy Cartel"—the four-year private colleges and universities.

From 1980 to 1986, these private institutions raised their annual total costs (tuition, fees, board and room) a colossal 90.2 percent, nearly triple the total inflation rate in the same period (33.4 percent). Public four-year colleges are almost as bad, having raised their total costs more than 67 percent—double the inflation rate.

Since 1980, private four-year colleges have upped their total costs from an average of $5,888 a year to last year's average of $11,210; public colleges' costs have jumped from $2,487 to $4,156, with another 8 percent to 10 percent hike set for this fall.

Year after year, parents—and ultimately all taxpayers—have been hit with increases of 9 to 15 percent, even as the annual inflation rate has plummeted to its current level of only 1.8 percent (June 1985 to June 1986).

The chief culprits are not greedy college administrations; they are the much too friendly members of Congress whose maudlin overgenerosity with student aid has created a cartel monster. Throughout the first half of the decade, colleges and universities knew that students and parents had virtually unlimited access to Federally subsidized borrowing. And, precisely as that access to and use of Federal aid rose, the Ivy Cartel grew more arrogant in its demands.

In 1970, when the student loan program was still in its infancy, fewer than 23 percent of all students got Federal aid, and throughout the 1970's colleges and universities held their annual tuition hikes to just about the level of inflation. But by 1980, when student aid—especially low-cost (highly subsidized) loans—was being used by 60 percent of the entire student enrollment, the lid came off the college price index. Private schools inflicted an 11.3 percent average annual increase even as the inflation rate fell to an estimated 2 percent this year.

As a result, in a period when higher-education enrollments were beginning to level off, and when lower inflation should have enabled Congress to cut these aid programs, their total costs continued to soar from $7.5 billion in 1980 to $9.4 billion in 1985-86. The Senate recently approved a program to spend at least $9.8 billion in fiscal 1987.

Not surprisingly, universities have taken advantage of these mounting "entitlements" to push parents and students into ever deeper mires of debt from which many students may never recover, piling up $40,000 to $60,000 in debt before they even earn a dime.

H.R. 5395—TO INCREASE THE STATUTORY LIMIT ON THE PUBLIC DEBT

HON. WILLIAM H. GRAY III

OF PENNSYLVANIA

Monday, September 8, 1986

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, on August 15, CBO and OMB took a snapshot of the fiscal year 1987 budget which is likely to project an average fiscal year 1987 deficit of somewhere in the neighborhood of $163 billion. Absent action by Congress on deficit reduction, $19 billon in cuts will be mandated by sequestration in an arbitrary and disruptive way.

This is a time for action. Has the other body acted? No. There they go again. The House is being asked to act on another gimmick to address the deficit.

The same people who created an unconstitutional scheme in the first place have developed a new scheme. But, the other body missed the message of the Supreme Court—the Constitution affords no substitute for the branches of Government performing their assigned functions.

Indeed, I have serious concerns about the Gramm-Rudman "fixes" that the bill's original sponsors are now proposing in "Gramm-Rudman-Hollings II." They would have the OMB Director replace the Comptroller General as the ultimate arbiter of differences. OMB and CBO would estimate the deficit and compute any required cuts, which would be reviewed by the Comptroller General, as under the original law. The Comptroller General, then, would forward it to OMB for a final determination. One sponsor has said that OMB's function would be "just a green-eyeshade calculation." Another has noted that OMB would inevitably have some discretion in projecting the deficit and allocating cuts.

The role of OMB is critical. If OMB's role is purely ministerial, the constitutionality of the law could be questioned on the same grounds on which it was successfully challenged—the role of GAO in executing the law. If, however, OMB is not just making a "green-eyeshade" calculation, then we need to be concerned about the accuracy of the estimates and, especially, the direction of its policies.

The Senate amendment would grant broad powers to the director of OMB, allowing him to determine the parameters of sequestration giving only "due regard" to the GAO report. There is no safeguard in the amendment to ensure that OMB conforms with the GAO report, as the law envisions. Additionally, to correct an order drafted by OMB, Congress would have to pass a measure and the President would have to sign it.

The new Senate proposal would require Congress to vote on economic assumptions including unemployment, inflation, interest rates, and economic growth. Our responsibility is to set forth congressional priorities in fiscal policy, not to legislate assumptions of this country's economic future.

There are troubling institutional questions here that go to the heart of our system of government, The Wall Street Journal ran an editorial on Monday, July 21, arguing that the logic of an automatic Gramm-Rudmann process is leading us inexorably toward the line-item veto. "The emerging consensus," they write, "Is that Congress is no longer capable of exercising the power of the purse * * * nor does it wish to exercise that power." In their view, when The Gramm-Rudman-Rube Goldberg machine falls apart, the line-item veto "will be the only proposal on the table."

I have no quarrel with the logic of this argument, but I do reject the premise that Congress cannot do what it was elected to do. Congress can and should exercise its constitutional powers with respect to fiscal policy. If we do not, those powers will be exercised by others in the executive branch. As the Journal notes, the logic of an automatic Gramm-Rudman law is the logic of the line-item veto, the logic of a transfer of power from Congress to the President. I do not favor such a transfer, nor, I believe, do most Members of the Congress. But we need to understand the implications of our actions before we rush forward to embrace a fairy godmother whose charms may rapidly wither after November.

I support the existing fallback mechanism—a procedure which works by putting the responsibility on Congress, the representatives of the people elected to lead. As chairman of the House Budget Committee and cochairman of the temporary Joint Committee on Deficit Reduction, I pledge to work with all of you in meeting the deficit targets and rendering these arbitrary across-the-board cuts unnecessary.

I propose that we adopt the following approach in September which, if implemented, can avoid sequestration. First, we get the maximum possible savings already mandated by the budget resolution out of the pending reconciliation bill. Second, we incorporate the budget resolution's unreconciled savings into legislation. Third, any further deficit reduction which might be necessary will be achieved through additional deficit reduction legislation in an equitable manner.

The Senate amendment is no response to the action needed. I urge you to send a message to the other body. We were elected to lead and make the hard choices. We must all be mindful of the deficit problem, but we must not be mindless in our response. Reject the Senate amendment.

RECOGNIZING THE DAUNTLESS FIRE CO'S. 150TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. JOHN P. MURTHA

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 8, 1986

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, it's a distinct pleasure for me to recognize the 150th anniversary of the Dauntless Fire Co. of Ebensburg, PA.

The formal organization and title of the fire company took place in 1836, and was incorporated in 1872. Actually, Ebensburg has had firemen since 1825. As part of the their anniversary, the company is hosting the 94th Annual Convention of the Central District Volunteer Fireman's Association on August 14, 15, and 16.

It is difficult, yet instructive, to try and remember back to the very different kind of life the men who started this fire company had. It was a time when news was delivered in terms of weeks rather than minutes, when one relied on a fireplace in the winter and a hand-held fan in the summer, and when most families were self-sufficient in their needs.

But it is important to remember that one of the key elements which organized the communities of this time was the fire departments. It served as an organizer, a social meeting place, a community hub. And it is also instructive in thinking of the qualities enhanced in the fire department, because I know from my work with the citizens and community of Ebensburg that those same qualities of independence, self-reliance, and dedication remain today.

The history of the fire department is an important one to America and its communities. And it is in that spirit of our great Nation, that I am pleased to join in recognizing Ebensburg and its citizens on the occasion of the Dauntless Fire Co.'s 150th anniversary.

H.R. 4151

HON. RONALD V. DELLUMS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 8, 1986

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Speaker, I want to offer my sincere congratulations to my colleague, Chairman DANTE FASCELL for his leadership in reaching agreement on the conference report on H.R. 4151, the Omnibus Diplomatic Security and Antiterrorism Act of 1986. As chairman of one of the many committees that was involved in hammering out the rough places in this piece of legislation, I appreciate his work and that of his diligent staff.

In the course of developing this omnibus legislation there was an amendment to repeal a District of Columbia law that establishes the 500-foot perimeter that demonstrators must maintain in front of diplomatic facilities by including the District of Columbia in the 1972 Federal law that sets the perimeter at 100 feet. The Federal law is less restrictive than the District of Columbia law because it requires the law enforcement officers to be able to "prove intent to harm" before the 100-foot perimeter can be imposed on demonstrators thereby removing the spatial restrictions which serve as police staging areas.

The District government, Federal and local law enforcement officials and the U.S. State Department were opposed to this amendment. I joined them in opposition for two reasons: First, the Federal and local law enforcement officials indicated that they could not guarantee adequate crowd control or protection of demonstrators, diplomatic facilities, or police personnel with the 100-foot perimeter; second, the section of the District of Columbia law which was to be amended is within the legislative authority of the District of Columbia government as delegated to it by Congress. As a home rule matter, I found it inappropriate for the Congress to amend this local law without giving the locally elected government an opportunity under the home rule process to consider the matter and work its will with regard to local legislation.

I commend Chairman FASCELL and the House-Senate conferees for taking seriously the home rule problem created by such an amendment and agreeing to omit the amendment with the understanding expressed in section 1302 of the conference report which suggests that the District of Columbia Council review and if appropriate make revisions in the law concerning demonstrations near foreign missions.

This action by my colleagues in the House and Senate is a further indication of the Federal-local partnership which should and does exist in most instances under the home rule arrangement.

UNITED VETERANS MUTUAL HOUSING CO.

HON. GARY L. ACKERMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 8, 1986

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to mark a truly special occasion. On this Sunday, after 34 years of patience and perseverance, the United Veterans Mutual Housing Co. of Queens County, NY, will celebrate a joyous occasion with a mortgage-burning party.

Mr. Speaker, over three decades ago, a new community was born in New York. The community, Bell Park Manor-Terrace, was only the second veterans' middle-income housing cooperative in America. Now, Bell Park Manor Terrace has matured into a vibrant, thriving, neighborhood, and stands as living proof that Government and private citizens can work together effectively.

Formed by men and women who had already shown their courage and patriotism defending their Nation in its time of need, Bell Park Manor-Terrace is no mere collection of houses and people. Led by an active community council, this Queens development hosts an annual blood bank, a newspaper, block watch and auxiliary police programs, and is home to a summer day camp, Federal credit union, and new educational facilities ranging from the nursery school to high school levels.

Mr. Speaker, the achievements of the United Veterans Mutual Housing Co. in Queens County are a testament to the hard work and dedication of people who believed, and still believe in the American values of community and neighborhood. Bell Park Manor-Terrace is also a prime example of how we should reward those who sacrificed for their country. Our Government's small investment in the United Veterans Mutual Housing Co. and similar corporations across America, has been a true success story of the postwar era.

I call now on all of my colleagues in the U.S. House of Representatives to join me in congratulating the United Veterans Mutual Housing Co. on the occasion of their mortgage-burning, and in wishing the men and women of Bell Park Manor-Terrace many more happy years in a strong and healthy community.

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules Committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Any changes in committee scheduling will be indicated by placement of an asterisk to the left of the name of the unit conducting such meetings.

Meetings scheduled for Tuesday, September 9, 1986, may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Tuesday, September 9, 1986

The House met at 12 noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

We come before You, O God, with a heart of thanksgiving for all Your good gifts to us, and also with hearts sensitive to the suffering of those victims of violence. So many people have been threatened or held hostage, have been injured or killed, so often good people innocent in their intent.

We pray, gracious God, that Your blessing will be with those who suffer or who know pain or anguish. May Your purposes, O God, be known to all people, that Your Word of peace and respect and dignity be heard in all the world. This we pray. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

SUNDRY MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mrs. Emery, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Hallen, one of its clerks, announced that pursuant to Senate Resolution 480, 99th Congress, the Secretary of the Senate communicates to the House of Representatives a copy of the answer of Harry E. Claiborne, judge of the U.S. District Court for the District of Nevada, to the articles of impeachment.

[In the Senate of the United States Sitting as a Court of Impeachment]

IMPEACHMENT OF JUDGE HARRY E. CLAIBORNE

NOTICE OF FILING

To: Jo-Anne L. Coe, Secretary of the United States Senate, S-221 The Capitol, Washington, D.C. 20510

Please take notice that on this 5th day of September, 1986, the Honorable Harry E. Claiborne, has posted to the Secretary of the United States Senate, an original and thirty copies of his Answer to Articles of Impeachment.

Simultaneous with the posting of the Answer to Articles of Impeachment, the same was served upon the United States House of Representatives through its Special Counsel, Nicholas D. Chabraja, by Federal Express delivery.

Respectfully submitted:

HARRY E. CLAIBORNE,
(By) Oscar B. Goodman, Esq., and Honorable Howard W. Cannon,
Attorneys for Respondent.

[In the Senate of the United States Sitting as a Court of Impeachment]

IMPEACHMENT OF JUDGE HARRY E. CLAIBORNE

ANSWER TO ARTICLES OF IMPEACHMENT

Judge Harry E. Claiborne, by and through his counsel, Oscar B. Goodman, Esq. and the Honorable Howard W. Cannon, Answers The Articles of Impeachment preferred by the House of Representatives:

ARTICLE I

Article I alleges that Judge Harry E. Claiborne willfully and knowingly made a false statement on his 1979 tax return in violation of Section 7206(1) of Title 26, United States Code.

Judge Harry E. Claiborne states that he believed the return to be true and correct as to every material matter.

Judge Harry E. Claiborne states that he had no specific intent to violate the law and that errors contained in his 1979 return were the result of accident, mistake or negligence. Judge Harry E. Claiborne subscribed such return in reliance on Joseph Wright, whom he reasonably believed to be a competent public accountant. Judge Harry E. Claiborne made a full disclosure to such accountant.

First Affirmative Defense

Judge Harry E. Claiborne was deprived of fundamental Due Process of Law in litigating such defenses by the judges specially appointed to hear his case.

Second Affirmative Defense

Judge Harry E. Claiborne was deprived of Due Process of Law by outrageous prosecutorial conduct by members of the Executive Branch who wrongfully procured his indictment and conviction through perjured testimony, intimidation of witnesses and unlawful covert surveillance including a mail cover and at least one burglary of Judge Claiborne's residence.

ARTICLE II

Article II alleges that Judge Harry E. Claiborne willfully and knowingly made a false statement on his 1980 tax return in violation of section 7206(1) of Title 26, United States Code.

Judge Harry E. Claiborne states that he believed the return to be true and correct as to every material matter.

Judge Harry E. Claiborne states that he had no specific intent to violate the law and that errors contained in his 1980 return were the result of accident, mistake or negligence. Judge Harry E. Claiborne subscribed such return in reliance on Jerry D. Watson, whom he reasonably believed to be a competent public accountant. Judge Harry E. Claiborne made a full disclosure to such person.

First Affirmative Defense

Judge Harry E. Claiborne was deprived of fundamental Due Process of Law in litigating such defenses by the judges specially appointed to hear his case.

Second Affirmative Defense

Judge Harry E. Claiborne was deprived of Due Process of Law by outrageous prosecutorial conduct by members of the Executive Branch who wrongfully procured his indictment and conviction through perjured testimony, intimidation of witnesses and unlawful covert surveillance including a mail cover and at least one burglary of Judge Claiborne's residence.

ARTICLE III

Article III alleges that Judge Harry E. Claiborne was convicted of two felony offenses.

First Affirmative Defense

Judge Harry E. Claiborne states that such convictions were wrongfully obtained by the failure and refusal of the Judicial Branch, through the judges specially appointed to preside over his case, to provide fundamental Due Process of Law.

1. Of the three judges specially appointed to review Judge Claiborne's convictions, all judges, including the Honorable Wilbur F. Pell, Senior Circuit Judge for the Seventh Circuit, the Honorable J. Edward Lumbard, Senior Circuit Judge for the Second Circuit and the Honorable Robert H. McWilliams, Senior Circuit Judge for the Tenth Circuit, failed and refused to conduct an independent examination of the material on which the trial court based its rulings, such materials having been sealed by the trial judge and not unsealed or read by anyone from that time through at least the entry of the Honorable Warren Ferguson's, Circuit Judge for the Ninth Circuit, dissenting opinion on December 30, 1985, from the Order of the Ninth Circuit denying a hearing en banc.

2. The failure and refusal of said judges to conduct a proper independent review of the materials on which the trial court based its rulings or to read the briefs on appeal prejudiced Judge Harry E. Claiborne and deprived him of fundamental Due Process of Law. The specially appointed judges set forth critical factual errors in their analysis of the case in their decision reported at 765 F.2d 784 (1985).

3. The trial judge, the Honorable Walter E. Hoffman, failed and refused to provide to Judge Harry E. Claiborne, or his counsel at any meaningful time, critical exculpatory evidence necessary to impeach the false testimony of the prosecution's witness, Joseph Wright; and Judge Hoffman also failed to provide critical evidence which would corroborate the exculpatory testimony of Jerry Watson and Judge Claiborne. Two items of such exculpatory evidence, the existence of which is now known to Judge Claiborne, are:

A. An interview by FBI Special Agent Richard T. Jessinger of Charlotte Travaglia, an employee of Jerry Watson, conducted on or about June 17, 1983. Travaglia's statement corroborates Judge Claiborne's contention at trial that he made full disclosure of this 1980 income to Jerry D. Watson. Travaglia's statement confirms and corroborates that Jerry D. Watson and his office were confused about the proper treatment of that income. Subsequent to such interview, on or about June 17, 1983, Travaglia, who was seriously ill, was frightened or induced by wrongful governmental actions to withhold such exculpatory information from Judge Claiborne and his attorneys.

Travaglia's exculpatory statement was disclosed in May, 1986, after the conclusion of both trials and the direct appeal in this matter.

B. A Memorandum of Interview of government witness Joseph Wright conducted on or about February 16, 1983, was wrongfully withheld from Judge Claiborne and his attorneys by the prosecutors and Judge Walter E. Hoffman until after Judge Claiborne was safely convicted. The Memorandum of Interview disclosed that in August of 1981, Joseph Wright threw away some documents relating to Judge Harry E. Claiborne's file. The Memorandum also disclosed that questions about Judge Claiborne's file were resolved by contacts between Connie Wright, the witness' spouse, and Ginny McElwain, Judge Claiborne's former secretary, in contradiction to the testimony of Joseph Wright at trial. Cross examination of Joseph Wright about the disposal of records in or about August of 1981 would have been crucial in establishing Judge Claiborne's contention that a critical letter of April 11, 1980, to Joseph Wright had most likely been lost, misplaced, misfiled or otherwise erroneously disposed. The prosecutors, who had full knowledge of this Memorandum, argued wrongfully and prejudicially that the absence of the letter in Wright's file could only be explained by a recent fabrication.

Second Affirmative Defense

The convictions upon which Article III of the Articles of Impeachment are based are presently the subject of a Motion to Vacate Judgment and Sentence. The convictions are therefore only technically "final" and may be vacated as the result of evidence of prosecutorial misconduct and judicial misconduct and result of newly discovered and wrongfully withheld exculpatory evidence.

ARTICLE IV

Article IV alleges that Judge Harry E. Claiborne "willfully" and "knowingly" falsified his income on his Federal tax returns for 1979 and 1980.

Judge Harry E. Claiborne has never been afforded an opportunity to fully and fairly litigate those false allegations in a fair and impartial forum. Judge Harry E. Claiborne denies that he willfully and knowingly falsified his income on his Federal tax returns for 1979 and 1980.

Judge Harry E. Claiborne denies that he has betrayed the trust of the people of the United States and reduced confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary thereby bringing disrepute on the Federal Courts and the Administration of Justice.

First Affirmative Defense

As an affirmative defense, Judge Harry E. Claiborne states that certain present and former individual members of the Executive Branch cooperated and collaborated to produce perjured testimony and suppress exculpatory material and have wrongfully betrayed the trust of the American people.

Second Affirmative Defense

As an affirmative defense, Judge Harry E. Claiborne states that members of the Judicial Branch, by failing and refusing to accord to Judge Harry E. Claiborne fundamental Due Process, and to independently review his indictment, trials and convictions, have wrongfully betrayed the trust of the American people.

Respectfully submitted:

HARRY E. CLAIBORNE,

Esq., and Honorable
Howard W. Cannon,
Attorneys for Respondent.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 4868. An Act to prohibit loans to, other investments in, and certain other activities with respect to, South Africa, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendment to the bill (H.R. 4868) "An act to prohibit loans to, other investments in, and certain other activities with respect to, South Africa, and for other purposes," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. LUGAR, Mr. HELMS, and Mr. PELL to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

PARENTAL LEAVE

(Mrs. SCHROEDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, the world has changed drastically in America in the last 10 years. There are very few families anymore where both parents can get away with not having to work outside the home just to pay the bills.

I have been continuing to push for parental leave, as many of the Members of this body have also joined me in doing, and as I come back from the break I must say more and more stories of young people being told, "It's either your child or your job" keep coming to me.

It is incredible that almost every country on the planet has dealt with this, except the United States. We are out there with such countries as Upper Volta, the Sudan, South Africa, and Greenland. Everybody else has had a position on parental leave. I think it is time that this Congress does that; because too many people are finding that their young children do not get off to the right start. Pediatricians tell us they cannot tell which of our children will become juvenile delinquents and which of them will become drug addicts, but they can tell us which ones will not. We had better listen to that and do everything we can to make sure in the next generation that most of the kids are in that category that will not have these problems that we are going to be discussing in these waning days.

So let us get parental leave to the floor. It is every bit as important as such things as the drug package and so forth. Let us start where the children start and make sure that they get off to a good start.

APPALLING RESPONSE TO THE DANILOFF CASE

(Mr. WALKER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, the response of this Nation to the Soviet action of holding hostage of an American citizen, an American newsman, Nicholas Daniloff, has been appalling. And there's plenty of blame to go around.

The administration can be and should be faulted for indecision.

This House can be and should be faulted for bad decisions.

The administration's unwillingness to get really tough with the Soviets must delight the hardliners in the Kremlin. The Soviets again have done the unthinkable and we treat it as business as usual.

The majority of this House spent most of the week prior to our recess voting for amendments that in effect endorsed the Soviet world view. The men in the Kremlin must have been cheered by that display and certainly could feel that there would be legislative resistance to any effort to get tough with Soviet tyranny.

The Daniloff case should spur us to action.

The administration should stop its business as usual attitude and cut all summit and arms control negotiations until Daniloff is released.

And the leadership of this House should prevent any further bills or amendments from coming to the floor that endorse positions of Soviet foreign policy at least until Daniloff is released.

In my opinion, that is the kind of action Soviet tyrants will understand.

WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE ON SMALL BUSINESS

(Mr. LUKEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LUKEN. Mr. Speaker, the liability crisis has become a death sentence for many small businesses in the United States. That was the conclusion reached by the more than 1,700 delegates to this year's White House Conference on Small Business which made tort reform their top priority recommendation. The message—your policy is canceled—got through.

The delegates to the conference reached the decision to put tort reform at the top of their agenda after reviewing as many as 2,000 possible recommendations in a series of State and regional meetings. They consider this issue so important that it rated above tax reform, the balanced budget, and retention of the Small Business Administration on the list of priorities.

The delegates were sending us a message loud and clear—if you want to show your support for small business, do something about the affordability and availability of liability insurance.

Congressman RICHARDSON and I have introduced H.R. 5471, the Product Liability Reform Act of 1986, and are now seeking cosponsors. We believe this bill meets the needs of our small business owners and will prove acceptable to the majority of Members. We reform joint and several liability so that the "deep pockets" don't end up paying for the entire recovery regardless of fault, return to a fault-based standard of liability, and limit recoveries for punitive damages.

The time to act is now. We'll be writing you in the next week asking for your cosponsorship.

EXPANSION OF TARGETED JOBS TAX CREDIT FOR SENIOR CITIZENS

(Mr. CONTE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I want to remind my colleagues of our responsibility to senior citizens. We've taken some important steps this year, but we can and must do more.

The Labor/Health and Human Services/Education appropriations bill increased funding for community service jobs for senior citizens. But we can and must do more.

We could get my bill, H.R. 5209, to expand the targeted jobs tax credit for senior citizens, out on the floor for a vote.

We should ensure that cost-of-living allowances are paid to Social Security recipients next January, regardless of the inflation rate.

Will the tax bill—with its changes in the tax treatment of Blue Cross/Blue Shield and repeal of the personal exemption for the elderly—harm senior citizens with medical insurance premium increases and a possible tax increase? And what about Medicare? With the new prospective payment system, there's a great deal of concern that elderly individuals are being discharged from hospitals "quicker but sicker."

Hospital premiums are outrageously high. The reconciliation bill takes care of that problem. Let's get it out on the floor for consideration.

Let's not forget our senior citizens who have given this Nation—and all of us—so very much.

PERMISSION FOR MANAGERS TO BE EXCUSED FROM ATTENDING SESSIONS OF THE HOUSE DURING CLAIBORNE IMPEACHMENT PROCEEDINGS

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the managers on the part of the House be excused from attending sessions of the House during their participation in the Claiborne impeachment proceedings in the other body.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

FREE DANILOFF OR THE SUMMIT IS OFF

(Mr. GEKAS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, free Daniloff or the summit is off. That is a distinct possibility and a decision that the President of the United States could make. If he should do that, then the Congress of the United States, representing the American people, should support the President. After all, how can we envision a summit to take place while Daniloff is in prison where an immense cloud would be hanging over the main items to be considered at such a summit conference?

We remember only too well that when Eisenhower met Khrushchev, it was impossible and indeed it ended in a disaster when the only subject that came up at that summit was the international incident of the U–2.

We cannot then sit back and say that no matter what happens to Daniloff, go on with the summit.

Free Daniloff or the summit is off.

I intend to ask that the House present as a unanimous-consent procedure a resolution to grant the support of the Congress of the United States to the President in whatever efforts he should undertake to free Daniloff.

SOUTH AFRICA

(Mr. FORD of Tennessee asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FORD of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, we in the 99th Congress have the opportunity to bring about the first stages of changes in South Africa. However, both time and election year politics are working against us.

The United States has thus far kept much too quiet on this critical issue of human rights and dignity. We in the House have passed legislation mandating the immediate withdrawal and disinvestment of all American assets currently in South Africa. The measure would prohibit any United States person or corporation from investing in, importing from, or exporting to South Africa. Well meaning but milder legislation passed the Senate as well just before the August recess.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today because I do not want to see this historic opportunity pass us by. The battle against apartheid cannot be allowed to end through a filibuster or pocket veto.

I urge my colleagues in the other body to help prevent further loss of life. Name your conferees, and let's work out our differences on this issue. The 99th Congress will be remembered for the actions it takes in the next few weeks. Let's not have this Congress remembered for its inaction on the most basic moral issue of our time—a people's right to exist with dignity.

AIR FORCE TEST OF SDI-RELATED TECHNOLOGY

(Mr. COUGHLIN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, the Air Force's test Friday of a space vehicle to track and intercept another U.S. satellite is deeply troubling. The Air Force maintains this test did not represent a violation of either the ABM Treaty or the moratorium on the testing of the space defense system—our F–15-launched antisatellite, or Asat weapon. Under the strictest interpretations of these two measures, these claims may be true. However, the test certainly violated the spirit of the current ban on certain antisatellite weapons tests. There is a danger that the Soviets will perceive this United States test as sufficient reason to resume tests of their own antisatellite system—a system that to date must be considered crude and ineffective. If the Soviets are able to perfect their Asat weapon it will have grave consequences for the current United States superiority in deployed satellite technology.

TERRORISM STRIKES AGAIN

(Mr. BIAGGI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, the world was shocked by two savage acts of terrorism in the past week.

The first was the hijacking on Pan American flight 73 by an armed group of five terrorists.

This airplane seizure was especially barbaric in its ultimate outcome. A total of 18 innocent passengers were killed when the terrorists opened fire inside the airplane.

One survivor described the inside of the 747 as a holocaust.

The second act of terrorism occurred on Saturday when Istanbul's largest synagogue was attacked during a Sabbath morning service. A total of 21 worshipers, and 2 gunmen were killed and 4 other worshipers wounded.

Both of these massacres reveal the vulnerability of the world to terrorism.

Both of these massacres demand the most severe penalties against those responsible.

Both of these acts must strengthen the world's resolve to wage war against terrorism and not relent until it is won.

TAX BILL UNFAIR TO PUBLIC SERVANTS

(Mr. WOLF asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I brought to the attention of my colleagues a major and serious flaw in the tax reform conference report which targets public servants who contribute to and pay taxes on their retirement plans.

This group of Americans—20 million local, State, and Federal Government workers, congressional staff, teachers, police, firemen—is the only group of individual taxpayers who have been singled out in the tax bill with a provision that takes effect retroactively. The retroactive provision changes the rule which has allowed in the past those who make taxed contributions to their retirement an open window of up to 3 years to recoup those taxed amounts. Not only would the tax conference report close that window, it closes it as of this past July 1. That is blatant unfairness and certainly not a responsible way to legislate.

Many of my colleagues may have received in yesterday's mail a letter from the national headquarters of the Fraternal Order of Police on this very subject which the police call one significant inequity which threatens all public employees. I'd like to quote from that letter:

> We, as law enforcement officers, are outraged that Congress has effectively eliminated the three-year basis recovery rule. One of the benefits of public employment is a sound retirement program. Tax laws have allowed a public employee to recover their taxed contributions into a retirement system within three years after they retire. Under H.R. 3838, that deduction will be extended over the life of the annuity, eliminating the positive recognition of public service and effectively requiring an individual to live for 20-plus years after retirement, in order to receive the benefit. The Fraternal Order of Police urges that you, as members of Congress, amend H.R. 3838 to * * * continue the three-year basis recovery rule.

My colleagues, this isn't just a Washington problem or a Federal problem. This is a problem that touches taxpayers all across this Nation and I urge you to join with me in the effort to bring fairness to the tax reform effort for the dedicated city employees, State employees, Federal employees, congressional staff, firemen, teachers, and police throughout this country and overturn the only retroactive provision for individual taxpayers.

ANOTHER VICTIM OF TERRORISM—ENOUGH IS ENOUGH

(Mr. COBLE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today with alarming terrorism news again. Another American reportedly has been taken hostage in Lebanon.

The latest victim of terror, Mr. Frank Reed, is the American director of a Lebanese school in Moslem West Beirut. Gunmen kidnaped Mr. Reed as he was driving from his home this morning.

How many more of our citizens need to disappear before we take action? I am not certain what course we should pursue, but indecision and do-nothing attitudes are not the answers. Ignoring terrorism serves no good purpose and benefits no one. Enough is enough.

RELEASE NICK DANILOFF, NOW

(Mr. PORTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, Nicholas Daniloff is being held prisoner awaiting a well-known contradiction in terms—an oxymoron, as George Will would call it—"Soviet justice."

It is clear that the charges have been trumped up in order to extract a Soviet spy caught here at home.

The Kremlin waits, counting on public sympathy for Daniloff to pressure the President to trade the KGB's man in New York for an innocent American journalist.

Many of us have spent a part of our congressional careers highlighting the crimes of the Soviet Government against its own citizens. The arrest of Nick Daniloff reminds us that the methods the Soviets use in dealing with dissent at home can easily be turned to threaten our citizens working and traveling in their country.

Mr. Speaker, if Mikhail Gorbachev wishes to give substance to his new slick television image, he must not stoop to the tactics made famous by Iranian fanatics 7 years ago. To be respected and trusted by other members of the world community he must first prove that he respects the rights of individuals and that he is not willing to violate these inaliable rights for political purposes.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to announce that pursuant to clause 4 of rule I, the Speaker signed the following enrolled bill on Monday, September 8, 1986:

H.R. 4329. An act to authorize United States contributions to the International Fund established pursuant to the November 15, 1985, agreement between the United Kingdom and Ireland, as well as other assistance.

APPOINTMENT AS MEMBERS OF COMMISSION ON EXECUTIVE, LEGISLATIVE, AND JUDICIAL SALARIES

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of section 225(b), Public Law 90-206, as amended, the Chair appoints as members of the Commission on Executive, Legislative, and Judicial Salaries the following members from private life:

Mr. John E. Lyle of Houston, TX; and

Mr. John J. Creedon of Larchmont, NY.

APPOINTMENT AS MEMBERS OF BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF GALLAUDET UNIVERSITY

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of Public Law 99-371, the Chair appoints as members of the board of trustees of Gallaudet University the following Members on the part of the House:

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan; and

Mr. GUNDERSON of Wisconsin.

IN SUPPORT OF H.R. 5484—THE OMNIBUS DRUG MEASURE

(Mr. GILMAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow the House is scheduled to consider H.R. 5484, the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education, and Control Act of 1986, a comprehensive, significant measure that would provide $1.5 billion to help prevent and control narcotics trafficking here in the United States and overseas.

The measure would authorize slightly more than $1 billion for the Customs Service for fiscal year 1987 to maintain current operating levels and to strengthen that agency's drug interdiction efforts; $118 million for the Coast Guard for fiscal year 1987; and $143 million in fiscal year 1988 that would permit the Coast Guard to recruit 1,500 additional military personnel and to acquire six new sea-based aerostat radar balloons, radar equipment, and additional aircraft.

Our international narcotics control program would be increased from $57 million to $65 million. In addition, $350 million annually would be authorized for fiscal years 1987 to 1989 to develop Federal, State, and local drug abuse education programs and $180 million to develop State and local drug abuse treatment and rehabilitation services and to establish a Federal substance abuse prevention agency.

Mr. Speaker, given that the narcotics trafficking and drug abuse have reached epidemic proportions in our country and abroad, given that the narcotics traffickers are conducting an estimated $120 billion tax free drug trafficking activity just in the United States alone, that this trafficking and abuse has infected every city, town, and school district in our Nation and that we are innundated by increasing amounts of heroin, cocaine—and now the newly highly addictive crack cocaine—marijuana, PCP, and other deadly drugs, the $1.5 billion proposed in H.R. 5484 is both modest and reasonable. If we can afford to spend $1.5 billion to construct a Trident submarine, surely our Nation can afford to support H.R. 5484 which is intended to address a national security threat by helping to combat narcotics trafficking and drug abuse and helping defend the citizens of our Nation from this deadly narcotics menace.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this omnibus drug measure.

PERMISSION FOR COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC WORKS AND TRANSPORTATION TO SIT DURING 5-MINUTE RULE ON WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 1986

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Committee on Public Works and Transportation be permitted to sit while the House is reading for amendment under the 5-minute rule on Wednesday, September 10, 1986.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

HOUR OF MEETING ON THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 1986

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns on Wednesday, September 10, 1986, it adjourn to meet at 9:30 a.m. on Thursday, September 11, 1986.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

HOUR OF MEETING ON THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1986

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns on Wednesday, September 17, 1986, it adjourn to meet at 9:30 a.m. on Thursday, September 18, 1986.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

REQUEST FOR PERMISSION FOR COMMITTEE ON RULES TO FILE PRIVILEGED REPORT ON H.R. 5484, OMNIBUS DRUG BILL

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Rules have until midnight tonight to file a privileged report on a resolution providing for the consideration of H.R. 5484, the Omnibus Drug bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. HILER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has this been cleared by the ranking Republican on the Committee on Rules?

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I understand that there has to be some checking on the other side of the aisle.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request at this point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BONIOR] withdraws his request.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5, rule I, the Chair announces that he will postpone further proceedings today on each motion to suspend the rules on which a recorded vote or the yeas and nays are ordered, or on which the vote is objected to under clause 4, rule XV.

Such rollcall votes, if postponed, will be taken on Wednesday, September 10, 1986.

WETLANDS LOAN ACT EXTENSION

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 4531) to extend the Wetlands Loan Act, and for other purposes, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 4531

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. EXTENSION OF WETLANDS LOAN ACT.

The Act entitled "An Act to promote the conservation of migratory waterfowl by the acquisition of wetlands and other essential waterfowl habitat, and for other purposes", approved October 4, 1961 (16 U.S.C. 715k-3 et seq.), is amended)—

(1) by striking out "September 30, 1986," in the first section and inserting "September 30, 1988,";

(2) by striking out "October 1, 1986," the first place it appears in section 3 and inserting "October 1, 1988,"; and

(3) by striking out ". In the event the full amount authorized by the first section of this Act is appropriated before October 1, 1986, the repayment of such funds pursuant to this section shall begin with the next full fiscal year" in section 3.

SEC. 2. ATCHAFALAYA NATIONAL WILDLIFE REFUGE.

Section 303 of the Act entitled "An Act to extend the Wetlands Loan Act, approved October 26, 1984 (16 U.S.C. 668dd note), is amended—

(1) by striking out "minor" in subsection (a)(2); and

(2) by striking out "Public Law 98-396" in subsection (b) and inserting "appropriations Acts".

SEC. 3. DUCK STAMP ACT.

The first sentence of section 2(b) of the Act of March 16, 1934 (16 U.S.C. 718b), commonly known as the Duck Stamp Act, is amended by inserting "available for obligation and" before "attributable to".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONES] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from New York [Mr. CARNEY] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, today we are considering H.R. 4531, legislation that will extend the authorization of the Wetlands Loan Act through fiscal year 1988, as well as extend the repayment schedule of the debt under that act from October 1, 1986, to October 1, 1988; $200 million were originally authorized under the Wetlands Loan Act, of which approximately $189.5 million have been appropriated. This leaves $10.5 million still available for critical wetland acquisition. In the Department of the Interior appropriations bill, which passed the House for fiscal year 1987, $3 million is appropriated under this authority. By extending this authorization for another 2 years, the Fish and Wildlife Service can continue to buy critical wetland habitat for waterfowl nesting and wintering areas. It is the committee's intent that this amendment should be effective September 30, 1986, retroactively if need be, in order to avoid triggering the repayment schedule during the first week or two of October.

A technical amendment to the legislation also extends the boundaries of the Atchafalaya National Wildlife Refuge to establish a 15,000-acre refuge of bottomland hardwoods. Some of this acreage, which has recently become available for acquisition, is not included within the existing boundaries of the refuge; therefore, it is necessary to amend the original refuge authorization to include those areas. This legislation authorizes an additional $2.4 million to purchase this land. This money has already been appropriated in the Urgent Supplement Appropriations Act of 1986.

Last, this legislation makes a technical amendment to the Migratory Bird Hunting and Conservation Stamp Act, commonly called the Duck Stamp Act. The amendment clarifies that the sequestration of funds under Gramm-Rudman from the migratory bird conservation fund would not automatically trigger a reduction in the price of the duck stamp. Under current law, the price of the duck stamp automatically drops from $7.50 to $5 if the Fish and Wildlife Service fails to obligate 100 percent of the funds generated from the sale of the duck stamp. If moneys were not obligated from the fund due to the enactment of Gramm-Rudman, however, some have argued that the price of the duck stamp would revert back to $5. Given the urgent need to continue to purchase waterfowl habitat, we need to continue to generate as much revenue as possible to insure our Nation's wetlands are protected.

This bill was reported by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries by unanimous voice vote. The bill has strong bipartisan support. I strongly urge my colleagues to favorably consider this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CARNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 4531, a bill to extend the Wetlands Loan Act.

In 1961, Congress passed the Wetlands Loan Act to provide a means to accelerate the acquisition of migratory waterfowl habitat. This law, as amended, authorizes $200 million to be appropriated as a loan against future duck stamp revenues, and can be used only for the purchase of migratory waterfowl habitat. The authorization, of which approximately $190 million has been appropriated, expires at the end of fiscal year 1986, and, beginning October 1, 1986, 75 percent of the revenues raised from the sale of the duck stamps must be used to repay the loan, rather than to acquire waterfowl habitat. In other words, not only will the wetlands fund be unavailable, but $10 million of the $14 million to be collected from the sale of the duck stamps will be needed to repay the existing loan, leaving only $4 million per year available for acquisition of wetland areas.

Unless we extend the availability of the wetlands loan fund, and delay the repayment of those moneys already borrowed, the acquisition of waterfowl habitat will, of necessity, be severely curtailed.

The extension of the Wetlands Loan Act is but a small step in our efforts to protect our Nation's wetlands. It is, however, absolutely vital that this step be taken now in order to avoid critical delays in acquiring valuable habitat. H.R. 4531 does not authorize any new wetland loan funds, but merely extends the available time period for funds already authorized.

Section 2 of the bill simply authorizes the Department of the Interior to acquire lands for the Atchafalaya National Wildlife Refuge with any funds provided in appropriation acts. Under present law, this acquisition is limited to only funds provided in a fiscal year 1984 Supplemental Appropriations Act. It is estimated that $2.4 million is necessary to acquire the necessary lands from willing sellers.

I'd like to recognize the fine work of Chairman JONES, Chairman BREAUX, Congressman DAVIS, and Congressman DON YOUNG, the ranking minority member on the Subcommittee on Fisheries and Wildlife Conservation and the Environment, with this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I support the bill. The administration has no objections to the legislation. Therefore I urge my colleagues to adopt H.R. 4531.

Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to yield 5 minutes to my colleague, the gentleman from the great State of Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my good friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. CARNEY], for giving me this time and to say how much we are going to miss him here. The gentleman has been a real valuable Member of the Congress and a good friend of mine, even though the telephone operators are forever, forever, making the mistake of calling me. My name is CONTE, his CARNEY, and they give me his calls and he gets my calls.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 4531, a vital piece of legislation to extend the wetlands loan fund.

Chairman JONES and my good friend BOB DAVIS, the new ranking member of the committee, have once again demonstrated their concern for the vanishing wetlands of America.

Each year, over 450,000 acres of wetlands are lost to agricultural conversion or development pressures. In fact, less than 46 percent of the original 215 million acres of wetlands in the lower 48 States remain today, and the losses are particularly severe in the most important areas.

For example, the bottomland-hardwood wetlands of the lower Mississippi have been reduced by 80 percent, and 90 percent of the highly productive California wetlands are already gone.

These wetlands and others across the country are among the most productive ecosystems in the world. Besides providing vital habitat for sport fish and roughly two-thirds of the major U.S. commercial fish, wetlands are essential to a healthy migratory bird population—a population protected by U.S. law and international treaty.

As a member of the Migratory Bird Commission for over 20 years, I can say without hesitation that this loan program has been an indispensable part of the wetlands conservation effort. Without these additional funds, thousands of acres of wetlands would have been destroyed forever.

During these critical years of rapid development and agricultural subsidies, the duck stamp revenues just do not provide enough resources to do the job. This loan fund together with duck stamp receipts has enabled the Commission to conserve the most important tracks of land. In fact, since 1962 when the loan fund was established, the Commission has preserved 2.3 million acres of wetlands.

However, the job is still incomplete. Wetlands continue to vanish everyday, and this extension of the loan fund will give us the resources necessary to continue the conservation effort. If we get these funds from the loan advance, the Commission can save vital areas in the California Central Valley, the Prairie Pothole breeding grounds and bottomland-hardwood wintering habitat in the lower Mississippi River Valley.

As my good friends on the Merchant Marine Committee know, the House Appropriations Committee—over my objections—provided just $3 million for this account in the fiscal year 1987 Interior bill. The Senate bill, however, is much more generous. It recommends $10.5 million for the loan advance.

Although I generally support the House position and the good work of Chairman YATES, I'll be looking at the Senate number when we get to conference.

Again, I want to commend the efforts of Chairman JONES and Congressman DAVIS for their leadership on this important issue. I strongly urge my colleagues to support H.R. 4531, the extension of the wetlands loan fund.

□ 1235

I know a lot of Members in this House think I am for the birds, and believe me, I am.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding and want to join him in his remarks in his support of this important measure, and I know that he is not only for the birds, but for the wildlife habitat, the refuge areas that are so important to all of our sportsmen and our Nation.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 4531, legislation reauthorizing the Wetlands Loan Act through 1988, increasing the authorization for the Atchafalaya National Wildlife Refuge, and clarifying language of the Duck Stamp Program regarding the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Balanced Budget Act. I commend Mr. CONTE for all of the fine work he has done on this important conservation issue and especially for his leadership in the Duck Stamp Program.

In the 1950's the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service [USFWS], and the International Association of Fish and Wildlife Agencies, set a goal for the protection of 12.5 million acres (8 million acres by the Federal Government, the balance by the States) of waterfowl habitat deemed necessary to maintain the populations as they existed at that time. To date, 1.6 million acres of the Federal share remain to be acquired.

Of the several sources of Federal funding for wetland acquisition, the migratory bird conservation fund is the greatest. The fund receives money from the sale of migratory bird hunting and conservation stamps, commonly known as "duck stamps." Since its inception the Duck Stamp Program has spent more than $300 million to acquire more than 3.6 million acres of waterfowl habitat. Congress enacted the Wetlands Loan Act in 1961 to accelerate migratory waterfowl habitat acquisition and authorized a total of $200 million through fiscal year 1986 as a loan to the migratory bird conservation fund against future duck stamps revenues for the purchase of waterfowl habitat. H.R. 4531 extends through fiscal year 1988, the provisions of the Wetlands Loan Act that authorize land-acquisition loans and delays the repayment until October 1988. H.R. 4531 also makes a technical change in the Duck Stamp Act to prevent sequestration from triggering a reduction in the duck stamp price from $7.50 to $5.

Last Congress, this body adopted and sent to the President for his signature, legislation instructing the Department of the Interior and the State of Louisiana to designate appropriate lands and waters for a national wildlife refuge within the Atchafalaya Basin. H.R. 4531 amends the Atchafalaya National Wildlife Refuge to allow USFWS to alter the proposed boundaries of the refuge to permit the purchase of 15,000 acres of suitable land that has recently been negotiated by the aforementioned parties.

Mr. Speaker, the protection of our wetlands is an important and meritorious undertaking. Wetlands include marshes, swamps, and coastal areas and are primarily known as habitat and breeding grounds for migratory waterfowl, fur-bearing mammals, and fish and shellfish species. Wetlands not only have esthetic, historical, educational, and recreational value, they also perform the necessary tasks of slowing waterflow by storing flood peaks and releasing the stored water into the ground and to streams during low-flow periods. By reauthorizing these acts we will permit the USFWS to continue to purchase these wetlands.

Additionally by allowing our waterfowl to breed in their appropriate habitat, we ensure that these birds are maintained at sufficient population levels, allowing our sportsmen to engage in their activities without endangering the species. Accordingly I urge my colleagues to offer their strong support for H.R. 4531.

Mr. CONTE. I thank my good friend from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume. I rise to join in the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] about the services of my good friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. CARNEY] and at a later date will go into more detail; but at this moment, Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. CARNEY. Mr. Speaker, I would just like to thank both my colleagues, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONES], the committee chairman, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] for their generous remarks.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONES] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4531, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 4531, the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION FOR SUBCOMMITTEE ON CONSUMER AFFAIRS AND COINAGE OF COMMITTEE ON BANKING, FINANCE AND URBAN AFFAIRS TO SIT THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 1986, DURING THE 5-MINUTE RULE.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Consumer Affairs and Coinage be allowed to meet on Thursday, September 11, 1986, while the House is meeting under the 5-minute rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

CONGRESSIONAL GOLD MEDAL TO AARON COPLAND

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 3041) to provide for the awarding of a special congressional gold medal to Aaron Copland, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 3041

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. FINDINGS AND STATEMENT OF POLICY.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) Aaron Copland has contributed to American music as a composer, a pianist, a lecturer, an author, and an organizer of various musical societies;

(2) Aaron Copland has composed patriotic musical works, such as "Lincoln Portrait", which was composed during World War II as a patriotic tribute to the United States and distributed worldwide;

(3) Aaron Copland has enjoyed great popularity and critical acclaim as evidenced by his receiving many awards, including a Guggenheim Fellowship, a Pulitzer Prize, an Academy Award, and the Presidential Medal of Freedom; and

(4) Aaron Copland is referred to as the "dean" of American musical composition as the result of his contributions to American music.

(b) STATEMENT OF POLICY.—The incomparable contributions of Aaron Copland to American musical composition should be recognized by awarding him a special congressional gold medal.

SEC. 2. AUTHORIZATION TO PRESENT GOLD MEDAL.

The President is authorized to present on behalf of the Congress 1 gold medal of appropriate design to Aaron Copland.

SEC. 3. PRODUCTION OF GOLD MEDALS AND PRODUCTION AND SALE OF BRONZE MEDALS.

(a) PRODUCTION OF GOLD MEDAL.—The Secretary of the Treasury shall coin 1 gold medal and shall deliver the medal to the President for presentation under section 2. The gold medal shall contain suitable emblems, devices, and inscriptions to be determined by the Secretary.

(b) PRODUCTION AND SALE OF BRONZE DUPLICATE MEDALS.—The Secretary of the Treasury may coin and sell bronze medals which are duplicates of the gold medal coined pursuant to subsection (a) under such regulations as the Secretary may prescribe, at a price sufficient to cover the cost of the gold medal and such duplicates, including the cost of labor, materials, dies, use of machinery, and overhead.

SEC. 4. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There are authorized to be appropriated for any fiscal year beginning on or after October 1, 1986, not to exceed $20,000 to carry out the purposes of this Act.

SEC. 5. EFFECT ON OTHER LAW.

The medals provided for in this Act are national medals for the purpose of section 5111 of title 31, United States Code.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. HILER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HILER] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO].

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3041 authorizes the presentation of a special congressional gold medal to the distinguished and exceptionally gifted composer Aaron Copland. The bill is cosponsored by 219 Members of the House.

For two generations Aaron Copland has been at the center of American music. He was the first and most successful composer to develop a distinctly American style of music. He adopted the rhythms of American jazz to develop unprecedented concert music. This innovation produced a sensation among those who heard his works.

Mr. Copland is one of America's finest and most versatile composers. He did not fear to venture into new areas, and when he did, he invariably succeeded. Over his career, he composed music for theater, film, orchestra, chorus, and chamber music.

No matter what form of music he wrote, he left an indelible mark. He provided a profound influence on American lighter classical music, and succeeded in writing serious music with broad appeal. He collaborated with the great figures of American dance to write some of America's best and most enduring ballets. His work in film led to the production of brilliant scores for notable films.

Mr. Copland has produced music that is uniquely American. His ballet, "Appalachian Spring," was based on an American theme and popularized ballet. His symphony, "Fanfare for the Common Man," is a tribute to average Americans during the Second World War, and is still tremendously popular.

Aaron Copland's talents and achievements have not gone unnoticed by others. When he was 25 he was awarded a Guggenheim Fellowship. He won a Pulitzer Prize and New York Music Critics Circle Award for "Appalachian Spring" in 1945. He won an Oscar for his score for the film "The Heiress" in 1950. He was given a gold medal for music from the American Academy of Arts and Letters in 1956, and a Presidential Medal of Freedom in 1964. This year he was awarded the National Medal of Arts by the President.

Not only is Aaron Copland a great composer, but he took the time as a teacher, critic, and author, to help more than one geneation of new American musicians. Musical festivals, foundations, and organizations he founded or participated in provided training grounds on which new talent could learn, practice, and flower.

His books and lectures have assisted the average listener to better appreciate music, and the advanced student to master the complexities of composition.

As we celebrate the centennial of the Statue of Liberty this year, it is so very appropriate that we honor the son of an immigrant for his outstanding contributions to America's musical heritage. How prototypical it is the child of Lithuanina Jewish immigrants should have produced music so distinctively American.

Mr. Speaker, Aaron Copland has shaped and influenced American music in the 20th century like no other. H.R. 3041 would properly honor this great man for his contributions to America, and I urge its passage.

Mr. HILER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join Chairman ANNUNZIO and my colleague from California, Mr. FAZIO, in support of H.R. 3041, a bill to award a congressional gold medal to Aaron Copland.

Mr. Copland is certainly deserving of the highest honor this Congress can bestow. He has deeply enriched the life of our Nation with his magnificent musical compositions, including "Lincoln Portrait," "Fanfare for the Common Man," and "Appalachian Spring." These works demonstrate much more than the musical genius of their creator; they also reflect the very soul and experience of our country and its people. As I have heard said of this outstanding composer, conductor, pianist, and teacher, "What Babe Ruth did for baseball, Copland did for American music."

Congress will not be the first body to pay tribute to the musical creativity and accomplishments of Mr. Copland. He already has received the Presidential Medal of Freedom, a Pulitzer Prize, an Academy Award, and a New York Music Critics Circle Award, among other honors. And I daresay there are more accolades in store for this exceptionally gifted musician.

I hope my colleagues will share my enthusiasm for Mr. Copland's outstanding contributions to American culture and join me in supporting H.R. 3041. Mr. Copland is one American who truly deserves to be so honored.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished chairman of the Legislative Appropriations Subcommittee, the chief sponsor of this legislation, the gentleman from California [Mr. FAZIO].

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my deep appreciation to the subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] and the ranking member, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HILER] for not only hearing this bill in committee but sending it on to the floor unanimously and for their very kind remarks in regard to the subject of this honor, the famous American composer, Aaron Copland.

I would also like to express appreciation to the congressional arts caucus for the support that they have given in bringing this effort to fruition today.

Mr. Speaker, the fact that we can claim an indigenous music, an American musical sound, is largely the result of the insight and work of one special American composer, Aaron Copland.

Aaron Copland began his quest to develop a sound unique to the United States, and the world for that matter, as a young composer and has continued that path throughout his career and lifetime. His dissatisfaction with the rift between the music-loving public and the composer led him to specifically compose music which would have mass appeal. He sought inspiration for his compositions from American folk sources—cowboy songs, New England hymns, and Shaker melodies—in order to achieve a "homespun musical idiom." The result has been an array of compositions with popular and critical support, a major contribution to our American cultural heritage.

One popular theme of a number of Copland's works focuses on our patriotism. "Fanfare for the Common Man," for example, was written as a tribute to the "common men" doing much for the war effort during World War II. "Lincoln Portrait," also written as a partriotic tribute during World War II, utilizes narration with texts arranged by Copland from Abraham Lincoln's speeches and letters and captures the sentiment of a nation affected by war.

Copland's works also celebrate American culture and display keen insight into American life. For example, two ballets, "Billy the Kid" and "Rodeo," are brilliant tributes to America's cowboys and western frontier. "Appalachian Spring," another ballet, is an accessible and popular price reflecting the diversity of American culture and has been attributed for bringing ballet into the mainstream of American society. Most remarkably, as he approaches his 86th birthday this year, these and other compositions are as popular as when Aaron Copland first introduced them to the American public. I project that in another 86 years, this will still be true.

In addition to his monumental achievements as a composer, Aaron Copland has also attained widespread recognition as a distinguished and exceptionally gifted lecturer, author, pianist, and conductor. He has also served as teacher and mentor for another generation of composers, including Leonard Bernstein.

The congressional gold medal is the highest expression of national appreciation for distinguished personal achievements which the Congress can bestow. Although Aaron Copland has received popular and critical acclaim, including a Pulitzer Prize, a New York Music Critics Circle Award, an Academy Award, a gold medal from the American Academy of Arts and Letters, a Presidential Medal of Freedom, and a National Medal of Arts, he has yet to receive a congressional gold medal. However, we have before us today the opportunity to acknowledge Aaron Copland's great gift to America. Our awarding the congressional gold medal to Aaron Copland would be in a sense, well deserved recognition for all of his contributions to American music. The presentation of this medal would be the pinnacle of a long and glorious career spent promoting America and Americans in a most unique way.

The congressional gold medal recognizes an individual's or group's special contributions in a variety of endeavors. It is the highest expression of national appreciation for distinguished personal achievements which the Congress can bestow. It is a special medal indeed.

Congress has chosen to recognize only four composers since the inception of the congressional gold medal in 1776. George M. Cohan received the first gold medal awarded to a composer in 1936 for his patriotic works. In 1954, Irving Berlin received one as well for his patriotic compositions. And just last year, this subcommittee heard testimony and the Congress approved a medal on behalf of George and Ira Gershwin for their special achievements. Consequently, the congressional gold medal is truly a honor which has been reserved for our Nation's most distinguished composers.

Aaron Copland is most deserving of this great honor. He has fought from the beginning of his career to establish a truly indigenous American music and has tried to appeal to a wide range of American audiences. Copland has been referred to as "the most distinguished American composer of his generation and certainly the most popular." In fact, his compositions have been used on numerous occasions honoring America. Two months ago, for example, some of Copland's works were included in the Independence Day celebration concert on the steps of the Capitol.

In addition to his success and achievements as a great American composer, Aaron Copland is also recognized as a distinguished and exceptionally gifted lecturer, author, pianist, and organizer of musical societies. I would like to take this opportunity to highlight the achievements of his career.

Aaron Copland was born in Brooklyn, NY, on November 14, 1900, to Jewish immigrant parents. His interest in music began early and as a child he studied piano. In 1921, he went to Paris as the first student to enroll in the newly established Conservatoire Americain at Fontainebleau and studied composition and orchestration with Nadia Boulanger, a great organist and teacher at the time.

Returning to the United States with Boulanger in 1924, Copland continued to compose and perform concentrating on a jazz idiom. In the first volume of his autobiograph, "Copland: 1900 Through 1942," Copland relates that upon his return to the United States, at the premier of his "Symphony for Organ and Orchestra," the conductor, Walter Damrosch of the New York Symphony Orchester, addressed the audience by stating that if a gifted young man—Copland—could write a symphony such as he did at age 23, then within 5 years he would be ready to commit murder. The next day, the New York Herald Tribune proclaimed "Young Composer Ready to Commit Murder." Such was Copland's first professional impact on the United States.

In the late 1920's, Copland shifted the focus of his compositions and became active in composing modern music. Later, however, dissatisfied with the relations between the music-loving public and the composer, Copland began another shift by composing music which would readily include the public. Realizing the impact of those who had grown up around the phonographs and radio, Copland began composing works directly for these mediums. The most popular of his compositions for the radio include "Music for the Radio" and "Letter From Home." In short, Copland settled in on a more accessible style.

In redefining his music, Copland relied to a great extent and sought inspiration from American folk sources. As a result of the combination of folk melodies and French-inspired orchestration, a truly "American sound" emerged. In choosing these American themes, Copland explains in his autobiography that:

I never thought about these things at the time, but it must have been partly because I grew up in the Eastern European tradition and there was no novelty to it. Every American boy is fascinated with Cowboys and Indians, and I was no exception. Also, my mother had grown up in the American West. Many artists (writers in particular) have claimed that they work best from their own experiences. But for me it was not necessary to have an experience in order to compose about it. I preferred to imagine being on a horse without actually getting on one.

A number of Copland's most notable works emerged from this "new" style. For example, "Appalachian Spring," a ballet, earned Copland the Pulitzer Prize for Music in 1944 and the New York Music Critics Circle Award as the outstanding theatrical composition of 1944–45.

Copland has also composed scores for theatrical films which have reached millions of Americans. These works include the themes for "Of Mice and Men," "Our Time," and "The Heiress." His score for "The Heiress" earned him an Academy Award in 1949.

In addition to his major accomplishments as a composer, Copland has also lectured and taught musical composition. He has directed programs at Tanglewood and has served as a mentor for a number of younger composers, including Leonard Bernstein. He has also conducted some of the Nation's finest orchestras, including the New York Philharmonic.

Copland's works have also amassed broad support outside of the United States and have been performed by major orchestras in Latin America and Europe. Furthermore, on several occasions, his compositions have been chosen to represent the United States at international festivals.

Despite Aaron Copland's numerous awards and critical and popular support, he has yet to receive a congressional gold medal. I certainly believe him to be deserving of such recognition and hope that a consensus to award Aaron Copland a congressional gold medal is reached here today.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 3041, as amended, to provide for the awarding of a special congressional gold medal for Aaron Cop-land. As a cosponsor of H.R. 3041, I am pleased that this bill has been brought to the floor for consideration.

Aaron Copland has certainly made one of America's greatest contributions to the world of music. His work has been recognized by many, and his numerous awards include a Pulitizer Prize, a New York Music Critics Circle Award, an Academy Award, a gold medal from the American Academy of Arts and Letters, and a Presidential Medal of Freedom. Now it is the duty of Congress to present Aaron Copland with an award for which he is very deserving. It is especially fitting that we give this award to Mr. Copland, the son of Eastern European immigrants, in the same year that we celebrate the centennial of the Statue of Liberty.

Aaron Copland is a prolific producer of music. It seems that he has always been interested in expanding the scope of music, and as a result, his work has been brought to the screen, to the theater and to the orchestra. Mr. Copland's music is for the enjoyment of everyone. His ballet, "Appalachian Spring," brought ballet into the mainstream of American society, and his symphony, "Fanfare for the Common Man," saluted average Americans during World War Two. Mr. Copland even brought Western American themes to ballet, with his productions, "Billy the Kid" and "Rodeo."

As well as being a composer, Aaron Copland has distinguished himself as a conductor, pianist, lecturer and author. He even contributed his talents and gifts to Leonard Bernstein and many other composers.

Mr. Speaker, as one who has enjoyed his music at beautiful Tanglewood in Lenox, MA, it is my pleasure to support the award of a special congressional gold medal to Aaron Copland, as a true expression of our Nation's respect, honor and appreciation for him and his work.

Mr. HILER. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 3041, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 3041, the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs be discharged from further consideration of the Senate bill (S. 2462) to provide for the awarding of a special gold medal to Aaron Copland, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill as follows:

S. 2462

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. FINDINGS AND STATEMENT OF POLICY.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) Aaron Copland has contributed to American music as a composer, a pianist, a lecturer, an author, and an organizer of various musical societies;

(2) Aaron Copland has composed patriotic musical works, such as "Lincoln Portrait", which was composed during World War II as a patriotic tribute to the United States and distributed worldwide;

(3) Aaron Copland has enjoyed great popularity and critical acclaim as evidenced by his receiving many awards, including a Guggenheim Fellowship, a Pulitzer Prize, an Academy Award, and the Presidential Medal of Freedom; and

(4) Aaron Copland is referred to as the "dean" of American musical composition as the result of his contributions to American music.

(b) STATEMENT OF POLICY.—The incomparable contributions of Aaron Copland to American musical composition should be recognized by awarding him a special congressional gold metal.

SEC. 2. AUTHORIZATION TO PRESENT GOLD MEDAL.

The President is authorized to present on behalf of the Congress 1 gold medal of appropriate design to Aaron Copland.

SEC. 3. PRODUCTION OF GOLD MEDALS AND PRODUCTION AND SALE OF BRONZE MEDALS.

(a) PRODUCTION OF GOLD MEDAL.—The Secretary of the Treasury shall coin 1 gold medal and shall deliver the medal to the President for presentation under section 2. The gold medal shall contain suitable emblems, devices, and inscriptions to be determined by the Secretary.

(b) PRODUCTION AND SALE OF BRONZE DUPLICATE MEDALS.—The Secretary of the Treasury may coin and sell bronze medals which are duplicates of the gold medal coined pursant to subsection (a) under such regulations as the Secretary may prescribe, at a price sufficient to cover the cost of labor, materials, dies, use of machinery, and overhead.

SEC. 4. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There are authorized to be appropriated for any fiscal year beginning on or after October 1, 1986, not to exceed $20,000 to carry out the purposes of this Act.

SEC. 5. EFFECT ON OTHER LAW.

The medals provided for in this Act are national medals for the purpose of section 5111 of title 31, United States Code.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H.R. 3041) was laid on the table.

CONGRESSIONAL GOLD MEDAL ACT

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 5236) to establish the congressional gold medal, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 5236

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Congressional Gold Medal Act".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

The Congress finds that, as the Congressional Gold Medal is the highest award that the Congress presents, standards should be adopted to assure that the award is given only to those who have truly contributed to enriching the history of the Nation, and to assure that only the most important acts or lifetime of achievements are so honored.

SEC. 3. ESTABLISHMENT OF THE MEDAL.

There is hereby established an award that shall be known as the "Congressional Gold Medal" (hereinafter in this Act referred to as the "Medal").

SEC. 4. SPECIFICATIONS AND DESIGN OF THE MEDAL.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of the Treasury shall strike any Medal which is authorized to be presented pursuant to section 8. Each Medal shall have a diameter of 1.5 inches and shall contain .999 pure gold. The obverse of the Medal shall be emblematic of the recipient and shall have suitable emblems, devices, and inscriptions as determined by the Secretary after consultation with the recipient.

(b) STANDARD REVERSE.—The Secretary shall design a standard reverse for use on the Medal, which shall contain the inscription "Presented by Act of Congress".

(c) CONSULTATION WITH COMMISSION OF FINE ARTS.—In carrying out the provisions of this section, the Secretary shall solicit and consider the comments of the Commission of Fine Arts during the conceptual stage of design.

SEC. 5. PRESENTATION OF THE MEDAL.

The Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate may present, in the name of the Congress, any Medal which is authorized to be presented pursuant to section 8.

SEC. 6. NUMISMATIC ITEMS.

(a) NUMISMATIC ITEMS.—The Medals authorized under this Act are numismatic items for purposes of chapter 51 of title 31, United States Code.

(b) BRONZE DUPLICATES.—The Secretary may strike bronze duplicates of any Medal for sale to the public. Such duplicates are numismatic items for purposes of chapter 51 of title 31, United States Code.

SEC. 7. STANDARDS FOR AWARD.

A Medal may be authorized only to a recipient who meets the following standards:

(1) The recipient shall be a natural person.

(2) The recipient shall have performed an achievement that has an impact on American history and culture that is likely to be recognized as a major achievement in the recipient's field long after the achievement.

(3) The recipient shall not have received a Medal previously for the same, or substantially the same, achievement.

(4) The recipient shall be living or, if deceased, shall have been deceased for not less than 5 years and not more than 10 years.

(5) The achievements were performed in the recipient's field of endeavor, and represent either a lifetime of continuous superior achievements or a single achievement so significant that the recipient is recognized and acclaimed by others in the same field, as evidenced by the recipient having received the highest honors in the field.

SEC. 8. AUTHORIZATION OF THE MEDAL.

The Medal shall be presented to a recipient only after enactment of legislation authorizing such a presentation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. HILER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HILER] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO].

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 5236 establishes standards for the award of the congressional gold medal. This bill, which was developed with the very helpful advice and counsel of the ranking minority member of the Consumer Affairs and Coinage Subcommittee, Mr. HILER, establishes standards to apply when considering congressional gold medals. The bill establishes five criteria that must be met in order for the medal to be awarded.

First, groups and organizations are not eligible for the medal. The medal may only be awarded to individuals. America is a nation founded on the dignity of the individual and the belief that one person can make a difference, and the congressional gold medal should reflect those values.

Second, the awardee must be alive, or if not living, must be dead more than 5 years but not more than 10 years. This criteria assures that the medal is awarded not out of sympathy for someone recently passed away, but out of a genuine appreciation of their deeds and activities.

Third, the person's achievements must have had an impact on American history and culture. The medal is meant to honor those whose activities have advanced America. The recipient's activities should have an integral connection with America.

The achievement must also be recognized as a major achievement in the recipient's chosen field of endeavor. The congressional gold medal is a high honor, and should be a highly selective award. It must be awarded sparingly, and only for outstanding achievements, or it will lose its dignity and honor.

Fourth, the achievements must represent either a lifetime of continued superior achievement or a single significant achievement so significant that the recipient is recognized and acclaimed by the recipient's peers. One type of evidence to consider is whether the recipient has received the highest honors available to someone in the field.

Finally, the recipient should only receive one congressional gold medal for his or her activities. Someone who received a gold medal for a lifetime of achievements should not receive another medal for the same achievements.

The legislation also standardizes the congressional gold medal. The medal will be made of pure gold and will be 1½ inches in diameter. Each congressional gold medal will have the same reverse design, including the words, "Presented by Act of Congress." However, to honor the unequaled achievement of each recipient, the front of the medal will continue to be designed specifically for the recipient.

The mint will have the authority to issue and sell bronze duplicates of the gold medal, but will not be required to do so. Giving the mint discretion to sell duplicates assures that the mint will be able to sell the most popular medals, but will not be required to sell medals that have limited appeal and whose sales are likely to lose money.

Since these medals are congressional medals, they should be presented by the highest ranking officers of the Congress, and so the legislation requires that the medals be presented by the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate.

No medal may be presented unless Congress has enacted legislation authorizing such a presentation. This assures that each medal is individually considered under the strict medal standards. In addition, as I announced on the floor on July 29, the subcommittee will require that before any gold medal legislation is considered it must be cosponsored by a majority of the House, and at least 40 percent of the Members of both parties. This will assure that the congressional gold medal is awarded only on a bipartisan basis for truly outstanding achievements.

H.R. 5236 will restore the congressional gold medal to its rightful place of high esteem, and I urge its passage.

Mr. HILER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I join Chairman ANNUNZIO in support of H.R. 5236, the Congressional Gold Medal Act.

The congressional gold medal is the highest bestowed by Congress and is intended to recognize outstanding lifetime achievements and extraordinary acts of valor. This medal has a long and—for the most part—prestigious history. Its first recipient was George Washington, whose medal was authorized on March 25, 1776, by the Continental Congress. Among other notable recipients of the award are Thomas Edison, Jonas Salk, Robert Frost, Robert Kennedy, and Winston Churchill.

When Congress instituted the congressional gold medal during the first years of our Nation, it designed the medal to be awarded only sparingly, as it was convinced that the value of reward is enhanced by its rarity. Unfortunately, in recent years Congress has strayed from this original intent. This is reflected in both the relative numbers of such medals awarded over the past decade and the level of achievement of some of the recipients who recently have been so honored. In the first hundred years of our Nation, only 53 congressional gold medals were awarded. In the little more than 100 years that have passed since our Nation's centennial, 68 congressional gold medals have been authorized. Twenty-seven of these have been awarded in the last decade, and 16 have been authorized since 1981. In the 97th, 98th, and 99th Congresses alone, 9 congressional gold medal bills have been enacted into law, authorizing a total of 11 gold medals. Although some of these 11 medals certainly were deserved, others were of questionable merit.

If we are to preserve the value of the congressional gold medal, then we must act now to curb the number of these bills that are enacted into law. Despite the recent efforts of the distinguished chairman of the Consumer Affairs and Coinage Subcommittee to put a lid on the explosion of medal bills, most notably by requiring 218 cosponsors on such a bill before the subcommittee will consider it, these bills continue to proliferate. Under these circumstances, additional constraints on the congressional gold medal are absolutely necessary.

Mr. Speaker, the bill before us today, H.R. 5236, represents a bipartisan effort to set more restrictive parameters on the award of this medal. Specifically, this legislation establishes certain standards which a recipient must satisfy to be eligible for a congressional gold medal. If adopted, these standards should ensure that the medal is awarded only to those who have made a substantial and extraordinary contribution to the culture and history of our Nation. The medal authorized primarily because of sympathy for an individual, or for parochial political considerations, or as a result of a personal affection or affiliation with an individual should be prevented or at least limited by the adoption of the Congressional Gold Medal Act.

As pleased as I am with the content of H.R. 5236, it does not go as far as I would have liked in placing constraints on the award of the congressional gold medal. The inclusion of rules for consideration of medal bills, including cosponsorship rules, would have greatly improved the legislation. However, such rules are omitted in an effort to make the bill more appealing to the other body. I am hopeful that additional constraints will be incorporated into either the House or Banking Committee rules when the 100th Congress convenes next year.

I also support the establishment of a restriction on the number of congressional gold medal bills that could be authorized in any given Congress. Unfortunately, the chairman of the subcommittee has determined this approach to be unfeasible for reasons that I can appreciate.

Mr. Speaker, there are several other provisions of H.R. 5236 which deserve to be mentioned. First, the bill formally establishes the congressional gold medal. While Congress has a long tradition of recognizing outstanding contributions and achievements with this award, the congressional gold medal has never been established by statute.

In addition, H.R. 5236 provides for the presentation of the congressional gold medal by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House, on behalf of Congress. Although the medal is bestowed by Congress, the President of the United States generally has made the presentation. This has been customary despite the fact that the President presents his own award for distinguished service, known as the Presidential Medal of Freedom.

Furthermore, the Congressional Gold Medal Act provides for a standard reverse on the medals, which will substantially reduce their cost. Although most medal legislation provides for the sale of bronze duplicates to recoup the cost of the gold medal, the sale of duplicates is not usually sufficient to fully recover costs. Most gold medals authorized over the past 20 years actually have resulted in a net cost to the American taxpayer. The obverse of the medals will continue to be a unique design, emblematic of the recipient.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly urge my colleagues to join Chairman ANNUNZIO and myself in supporting H.R. 5236, the Congressional Gold Medal Act. This is necessary legislation, if we are to maintain the rarity and significance of the congressional gold medal. Let us do what we can to preserve the value of this special medal and keep its reputation untarnished.

There was no objection.

CANCER-BASED EMPLOYMENT DISCRIMINATION

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 321) expressing the sense of Congress in opposition to employment discrimination against persons who have, or have had, cancer based on such individual's cancer history.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. CON. RES. 321

Whereas there are more than five million Americans in our Nation with a cancer history and an estimated one million of these people face the terrible injustice of employment discrimination;

Whereas sixty-six million Americans—one out of every four—will eventually develop cancer in their lifetime;

Whereas one out of every two persons now diagnosed as having cancer is cured, and as a result, the number of survivors will continue to dramatically increase;

Whereas employment discrimination against cancer survivors ranges from job denial to wage reduction, exclusion from and reduction in benefits, promotion denial, and in some cases outright dismissals; and

Whereas we must permit, and encourage, these people to remain fully integrated and productive members of society: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That expressing the sense of the Congress in opposition to employment discrimination against persons who have, or have had, cancer based on such individual's cancer history and urges the Congress that these Americans receive fair and equal treatment in the workplace.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. BIAGGI] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HENRY] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. BIAGGI].

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, as author of House Concurrent Resolution 321, and on behalf of its 87 cosponsors, I rise to urge House passage of this measure today.

I want to thank Mr. MARTINEZ for his support and efforts on behalf of this legislation. He conducted a hearing on this issue just over 1 year ago, and was instrumental in bringing this issue to the floor. I also want to thank Chairman HAWKINS for his work in bringing this resolution before the Committee on Education and Labor and to the floor in such an expeditious manner.

Today, for the first time, we consider legislation on behalf of a new and special constituency, the estimated 5 million Americans with a cancer history, or, more appropriately, cancer survivors.

Yes; this is a special interest group, but they are like few others. They are not here asking for anything but the opportunity to be free from discrimination in the workplace.

The issue addressed in House Concurrent Resolution 321—Employment Discrimination Against Cancer Survivors—is a real and growing problem.

The American Cancer Society estimates that one out of every five cancer survivors are victims of this outrage.

This means that up to 1 million Americans, who, after triumphing over cancer, encounter another battle which far too many lose—the battle to keep their job, to be provided with full benefits, to be free from demotions and even outright dismissal.

House Concurrent Resolution 321 expresses the sense of Congress in opposition to employment discrimination. It is a resolution which expresses the sense of Congress that cancer survivors should receive fair and equal treatment in the workplace.

It is a resolution which underlines the fact that persons with a cancer history are entitled to equal—not special or preferential—treatment in the workplace.

It is a resolution which seeks to increase public awareness and understanding of cancer. This includes removing the misconceptions about cancer and those it strikes. This includes an end to the prejudice they encounter caused by society's ignorance of this disease, and the medical advances made over the last two decades.

This resolution was sponsored on behalf of people like Barbara Serviss, who is a childhood survivor of Hodgkin's disease. Barbara sought employment with the New York City Police Department 6 years after her last treatment for the disease. Doctors say it is not in remission; it is gone. Yet Barbara was denied a job solely on the basis that she was unfortunate enough to have once had cancer, and lucky enough to have conquered it. The police department disqualified her based on "history of Hodgkin's disease."

This resolution was sponsored for people like James Koopman, who was fired from his job as president of the Phoenix Forging Co. after his diagnosis of pancreatic cancer. After 31 years of good work for the company, Jim was fired. He was told, "We don't want a president who is going to die on us." That was over 4 years ago.

This resolution conveys a statement—we must recognize this problem and work toward a solution.

One out of every four persons will get cancer. One out of every two persons are cured.

This large and ever-growing population represents a new group within our society, a group that is entitled to equal rights, opportunities, and privileges in our workplace, and society as well. After all, such equality is the very foundation upon which this great Nation was founded.

We must view House Concurrent Resolution 321 as a first step, but by no means a last effort, in this battle. We must work toward enactment of a statute to outlaw employment discrimination against cancer survivors.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, cancer is occurring with ever-increasing frequency in our society. The American Cancer Society estimates that if we include all forms of cancer, three out of every five living Americans will be touched by some form of cancer during their lifetimes. Fortunately, increases in the incidence of the disease have been accompanied by advances in treatment. It is estimated that one out of every two cancer victims will now survive more than 5 years.

As these survivors of cancer have sought to return to work, many of them have faced blatant discrimination. In dramatic—and disturbing—testimony before the Subcommittee on Employment Opportunities, we heard of cancer victims who had been dismissed, demoted, denied promotions or benefits, and refused employment because of their cancer histories. This discrimination has occurred in many instances where performance was in no way affected by the disease. And there has been discrimination even in instances where the cancer patients have had good, solid employment histories. Having won the battle against the physical ravages of the disease, cancer victims must often endure a second fight, against the adverse psychological, economic, and social effects resulting from unjustified employment discrimination.

This resolution expresses the sense of the Congress in opposition to employment discrimination against cancer victims. Federal laws offer little protection against such discrimination. Only in instances where the disease results in a disability does Federal antidiscrimination law offer any hope. As we make further strides in the treatment of cancer, more and more victims of the disease will be able to return to the workplace. Employment discrimination against cancer victims relegates them to second-class status; it prohibits them from being productive members of society. Such discrimination is not only senseless, it is cruel. I commend the gentleman from New York, Mr. BIAGGI, in his efforts in shepherding this resolution through committee and the House and urge that it be adopted.

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HENRY] for his kind remarks and for his supportive comments.

Mr. Speaker, I think the record should show that the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., for a period of 24 years, tracked 74 of its employees with a cancer history, or employees who developed cancer while working with the company. They found the following:

The turnover rate among employees with a cancer history was no higher than the rate for people not having cancer; no employee in the cancer group was discharged for absenteeism or poor performance; and only 3 percent of the cancer employees were ever placed on disability status, a considerably lower percentage than those employees who did not have cancer.

Mr. Speaker, this is a cause receiving increased support. At the recent annual meeting of the U.S. Conference of Mayors, they adopted a resolution to prohibit employment discrimination against cancer patients.

The resolution makes it clear that we must permit and encourage cancer survivors to remain fully integrated, active, and productive members of our work force, and society as well.

I would be remiss if I did not say thank you to a few people whose contributions have been instrumental in this legislative undertaking.

First of all, I must recognize CHUMS [Cancer Hopefuls United for Mutual Support]. This cancer support group based in my home district of the Bronx first brought this terrible injustice to my attention.

I thank the American Cancer Society, who have provided me with invaluable assistance since the outset of this legislative undertaking. They have played a significant role in the progress of this legislation.

Barbara Hoffman, an attorney in Philadelphia specializing in disability law, has been of great assistance in both the research and drafting of this legislation. Her efforts to assist cancer survivors are nationally recognized and I thank her for her commitment to this cause.

Finally, I wish to thank the media. They have aided me tremendously in this undertaking by focusing public attention and increasing public awareness on this issue. Their concern about this violation of civil and human rights is to be commended and I thank the media for their efforts.

I urge my colleagues to join me in support of this important resolution. Pass House Concurrent Resolution 321 and this House will recognize that cancer survivors are in fact courageous conquerors who deserve the open arms, not the cold shoulder, of society.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, as a cosponsor of House Concurrent Resolution 321, I rise in strong support of this landmark resolution. This measure expresses the sense of Congress in opposition to employment discrimination against persons on the basis of a cancer history and urges that these Americans receive fair and equal treatment in the workplace. I would like to commend my colleague from New York [Mr. BIAGGI], for his hard work in bringing this issue to the forefront here in Congress.

Having examined this issue, it is painfully evident that employment discrimination against cancer survivors is a growing problem. In fact, one out of every five Americans with a cancer history faces employment-based discrimination. Unless positive action is taken, this problem will continue to grow. With the truly remarkable advances that have been made in the past decade in cancer treatment, more and more Americans are surviving cancer. This number will undoubtedly continue to increase as further advances are made in early detection procedures and cancer treatments. A large number of these cancer survivors are able to work and reenter the mainstream of public life. Unfortunately, after winning the traumatic battle against cancer, many cancer survivors must fight a second battle against employment discrimination.

Studies conducted by the American Cancer Society revealed that discrimination against cancer survivors can be a significant problem for many recovered cancer patients as they reenter the work force. Some forms of discrimination are more overt than others. They include: demotion, denial of health benefits, termination, isolation, changes in work assignment, difficulty in adjusting work schedule to accommodate treatment requirements, and changed attitudes of coworkers.

The fact that such discrimination exists and continues in our society underscores the urgent need to address this issue. Perceptions by both employers and the general public about cancer and cancer survivors must be changed. I would like to point out to my colleagues that several studies, most notably a study done by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., have shown that the employment record of cancer patients as compared to other noncancer employees was as good or better. The Metropolitan Life study revealed that the absence record was satisfactory and work performance was adequate when compared to noncancer employees. The study concluded that the selective hiring of cancer survivors, in positions for which they are physically qualified, is a sound industrial practice. The findings of this study, published in 1974, are significant, especially in light of the fact that since 1974, cancer treatment and survival rates have progressed dramatically. Yet, employers and the general public are either unaware of these findings or they choose to ignore it, in all too many instances.

The resolution we have before us today is a positive step in fully addressing this problem. It is my hope that passage of this resolution will lead to greater public and employer awareness about cancer and the capabilities of cancer survivors. By altering public perception we can go a long way in ensuring the basic civil rights of cancer survivors. Passage of this resolution will also hopefully pave the way for more positive action in both the public and private sectors to assist the cancer survivor and employers. These include the development of resources to provide counseling that would include vocational guidance and/or rehabilitation, dealing with troubling aspects of the work situation, dealing with prospective employers and the job application process, coping with the emotional aspects of cancer, and managing relationships with fellow workers, family members, and friends.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I would also like to point out that there are success stories out there. Many employers have been quite cooperative and fair to cancer survivors. What we need to do is build upon these positive experiences and expand upon some of the exemplary efforts some employers have made. As I stated earlier, one out of every five cancer survivors face some form of employment discrimination. That translates to over 1 million Americans being unjustly and unfairly discriminated against. So, while there are success stories, much work remains to be done. This resolution represents only the first step in a very long effort. But it is an extremely important first step, a step that indicates that Congress is committed to the elimination of discrimination against cancer survivors and that we will continue to encourage cancer survivors to reenter the work force and be productive members of society.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of House Concurrent Resolution 321 and urge my colleagues to join with me in expressing our opposition to discrimination against employees who have or have had cancer in the workplace.

These employees suffer a loss in wages, a reduction in benefits, or are denied promotion. In some cases, workers have been dismissed.

This is an outrage. One in every four Americans will develop cancer in their lives; 25 percent of the American work force is currently at risk. Important laws exist to protect workers against sex, race, national origin, or age discrimination, but no law prohibits employers from discriminating against cancer survivors. This is capricious and mean. Congress should stop it.

Mr. BIAGGI's resolution is an important first step in this direction and I applaud his efforts to invite Congress to live up to the high standards it has set for this Nation in other civil rights legislation.

Congressman CLAY and I have legislation ready to come to the floor that will put teeth into this resolution. Our bill, H.R. 4300, the Family and Medical Leave Act of 1986, provides employees with cancer or other serious medical conditions a job-protected leave for up to 26 weeks.

In addition to job security, H.R. 4300 will maintain an employee's current level of benefits, including a continuation of health benefits throughout the duration of the illness. Upon returning to work, a worker will be reinstated to the same or similar position with no loss in status or seniority. This is the kind of dignity all Americans deserve when they become temporarily unable to perform their jobs.

Prohibiting discrimination against cancer patients is a civil rights issue. It is also a vital economic issue. Providing job security and continued health benefits will put an end to discrimination against cancer patients in the workplace; it will give hope to the thousands of cancer patients who have fought their illness and won, their rightful place in American society.

Join me, and 126 Congressmembers like Mr. BIAGGI who have cosponsored H.R. 4300, the Family and Medical Leave Act, when it comes to the floor in the next few weeks. Let's make absolutely sure that all Americans have the protection they deserve.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the gentleman from New York, my friend and colleague, Mr. BIAGGI, for introducing this legislation and for his leadership in fighting employment discrimination and for ensuring the rights of those individuals who have suffered from cancer and other grave illnesses, to seek and retain employment, regardless of their medical history.

Our most recent statistics show us that over 5 million Americans have a cancer history. Hearings held by the Committee on Education and Labor clearly illustrated that the employment discrimination practices against these individuals is quite real. Indeed, the committee reports that an estimated 1 million cancer survivors are not allowed to resume their careers, begin new ones, or obtain jobs commensurate with their professional abilities. That is 1 million Americans who are denied their right to contribute to our economy and society, a grave injustice to both the individuals in question and society at large.

Let us not forget the most recent passing of our beloved colleague, Congressman George O'Brien who continued to serve in this body throughout his cancer treatment and, might I add, served it well. It would never have occurred to any one of us, nor his constituents, to deny George his seat in Congress. His illness in no way impaired his expertise or interest in his work. George is but one example. There are millions of others who survive their cancer, and are robbed of their chance to continue to work and contribute. Due to improved medical research and techniques for early detection, the survival rate of cancer victims has grown rapidly.

By adopting this legislation, House Concurrent Resoution 321, we will be strongly enunciating our opposition to employment discrimination against persons who have or who have had cancer. I am additionally hopeful that this measure will pave the way for further work in this area, by our Federal and State Departments of Labor and other relevant agencies. Accordingly, I urge my colleagues to join in adopting House Concurrent Resolution 321.

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time

□ 1310

The Speaker pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BIAGGI] that the House suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution, House Concurrent Resolution 321.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the concurrent resolution just agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

FALSE CLAIMS AMENDMENTS ACT OF 1986

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 4827) to amend title 31, United States Code, with respect to the fraudulent use of public property or money, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 4827

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "False Claims Amendments Act of 1986".

SEC. 2. FALSE CLAIMS.

Section 3729 of title 31, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking the matter preceding paragraph (1) and inserting the following:

"(a) LIABILITY FOR CERTAIN ACTS.—Any person who—";

(2) in paragraph (1) by striking "Government or a member of an armed force" and inserting "United States Government or a member of the armed forces";

(3) in paragraph (2) by inserting "by the Government" after "approved";

(4) in paragraph (4)—

(A) by striking "public"; and

(B) by striking "in an armed force" and inserting "by the Government";

(5) in paragraph (5)—

(A) by striking "in an armed force" and inserting "by the Government"; and

(B) by striking "or" after the semicolon;

(6) in paragraph (6)—

(A) by striking "a member of an armed force" and inserting "an officer or employee of the Government, or a member of the armed forces,"; and

(B) by striking the period at the end of the paragraph and inserting "; or"; and

(7) by adding at the end of the subsection the following:

"(7) knowingly makes, uses, or causes to be made or used, a false record or statement to conceal, avoid, or decrease an obligation to pay or transmit money or property to the Government, is liable to the United States Government for a civil penalty of not less than $5,000 and not more than $10,000, for an amount equal to consequential damages as set forth in subsection (b)(1) plus 2 times the amount of damages (other than such consequential damages) which the Government sustains because of the act of that person, and for the costs of a civil action brought to recover any such penalty or damages.

"(b) CALCULATION OF DAMAGES.—(1) For purposes of this section, consequential damages include damages which the United States would not have sustained but for—

"(A) the commission of any of the acts prohibited by subsection (a); or

"(B) entering into or making any contract or grant as a result, in any material part, of any false statement, record, or claim.

"(2) Any credits to which the defendant establishes entitlement may be deducted from the amount payable under subsection (a) only after the damages sustained by the United States have been doubled as set forth in subsection (a).

"(3) If any portion of the damages sustained by the United States under paragraph (1) is considered reasonably unforeseeable by the court, the court may reduce the total amount of damages payable under paragraph (1).

"(c) KNOWING AND KNOWINGLY DEFINED.—For purposes of this section, the terms 'knowing' and 'knowingly' mean that a person, with respect to information—

"(1) has actual knowledge of the information;

"(2) acts in deliberate ignorance of the truth or falsity of the information; or

"(3) acts in reckless disregard of the truth or falsity of the information.

"(d) CLAIM DEFINED.—For purposes of this section, 'claim' includes any request or demand, whether under a contract or otherwise, for money or property which is made to a contractor, grantee, or other recipient if the United States Government provides any portion of the money or property which is requested or demanded, or if the Government will reimburse such contractor, grantee, or other recipient for any portion of the money or property which is requested or demanded.

"(e) EXCLUSION.—This section does not apply to claims, records, or statements made under the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.".

SEC. 3. CIVIL ACTIONS FOR FALSE CLAIMS.

Section 3730 of title 31, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 3730. Civil actions for false claims

"(a) RESPONSIBILITIES OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL.—The Attorney General diligently shall investigate a violation under section 3729. If the Attorney General finds that a person has violated or is violating section 3729, the Attorney General may bring a civil action under this section against the person.

"(b) ACTIONS BY PRIVATE PERSONS.—(1) A person may bring a civil action for a violation of section 3729 for the person and for the United States Government. The action shall be brought in the name of the Government. Subject to paragraph (5), an action may be dismissed only if the court and the Attorney General give written consent to the dismissal and their reasons for consenting.

"(2) A copy of the complaint and written disclosure of substantially all material evidence and information the person possesses shall be served on the Government pursuant to Rule 4(d)(4) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The complaint shall be filed in camera, shall remain under seal for at least 60 days, and shall not be served on the defendant until the court so orders. The Government may elect to intervene and proceed with the action within 60 days after it receives both the complaint and the material evidence and information.

"(3) The Government may, for good cause shown, move the court for extensions of the time during which the complaint remains under seal under paragraph (2). Any such motions may be supported by affidavits or other submissions in camera. The defendant shall not be required to respond to any complaint filed under this section until 20 days after the complaint is unsealed and served upon the defendant pursuant to Rule 4 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

"(4) Subject to paragraph (5), before the expiration of the 60-day period or any extensions obtained under paragraph (3), the Government shall—

"(A) proceed with the action, in which case the action shall be conducted by the Government; or

"(B) notify the court that it declines to take over the action, in which case the person bringing the action shall have the right to conduct the action.

"(5)(A) If the court finds that an action brought by a person under this subsection—

"(i) is based on specific evidence or specific information which the Government disclosed as a basis for allegations made in a prior administrative, civil, or criminal proceeding; or

"(ii) is based on specific information disclosed during the course of a congressional investigation or based on specific public information disseminated by any news media, the court shall dismiss the action, unless subparagraph (B) applies.

"(B) The court shall not dismiss an action under subparagraph (A)—

"(i) if the Government proceeds with the action before the expiration of the 60-day period described in paragraph (2) or any extensions obtained under paragraph (3); or

"(ii) if the Government was aware of the evidence or information described in clause (i) or (ii) of subparagraph (A) for a period of at least 6 months before the person initiated the action, and the Government did not initiate a civil action on the matter involved within that 6-month period, or within such additional times as the court allows upon a showing of good cause.

"(C) The defendant must prove the facts warranting dismissal of a case to which this paragraph applies.

"(6) When a person brings an action under this subsection, no person other than the Government may intervene or bring a related action based on the facts underlying the pending action.

"(c) RIGHTS OF PARTIES TO QUI TAM ACTIONS.—(1) If the Government proceeds with the action, it shall have the primary responsibility for prosecuting the action. The person bringing the action shall have a right to continue in the action with the same rights as those of a person permitted to intervene in an action under Rule 24(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The Government is not bound by an act of the person bringing the action. A motion by the Government to dismiss the action may not be granted unless the person bringing the action has been notified by the Government of the filing of the motion and unless the court has provided the person with the opportunity for a hearing on the motion.

"(2) The Government may settle the action with the defendant notwithstanding the objections of the person initiating the action if the court determines after a hearing, including the opportunity for presentation of evidence, that the proposed settlement is fair, adequate, and reasonable under all the circumstances.

"(3) Upon a showing of the Government that certain actions of discovery by the person initiating the action would significantly interfere with the Government's investigation or prosecution of a criminal or civil matter arising out of the same facts, the court may stay such discovery for a period of not more than 60 days. Such a showing shall be conducted in camera. The court may extend the 60-day period upon a further showing in camera that the Government has pursued the criminal or civil investigation or proceedings with reasonable diligence and any proposed discovery in the civil action will interfere with the ongoing criminal or civil investigation or proceedings.

"(4) If the Government elects not to proceed with the action, the person who initiated the action shall have the right to conduct the action. If the Government so requests, it shall be served with copies of all pleadings filed in the action and shall be supplied with copies of all deposition transcripts (at the Government's expense). When a person proceeds with the action, the court, without limiting the status and rights of the person initiating the action, may nevertheless permit the Government to intervene at a later date upon a showing of good cause.

"(5) Notwithstanding subsection (b), the Government may elect to pursue its claim through any alternate remedy available to the Government, including any administrative proceeding to determine a civil money penalty. If any such alternate remedy is pursued in another proceeding, the person initiating the action shall have the same rights in such proceeding as such person would have had if the action had continued under this section. Any finding of fact or conclusion of law made in such other proceeding that has become final shall be conclusive on all parties to an action under this section. For purposes of the preceding sentence, a finding or conclusion is final if it has been finally determined on appeal to the appropriate court of the United States, if all time for filing such an appeal with respect to the finding or conclusion has expired, or if the finding or conclusion is not subject to judicial review.

"(d) AWARD TO QUI TAM PLAINTIFF.—(1) If the Government proceeds with an action under this section, and the person bringing the action discloses relevant evidence, or relevant information, which the Government did not have at the time the action was brought, such person shall receive at least 15 percent but not more than 25 percent of the proceeds of the action or settlement of the claim, depending upon the extent to which the person substantially contributed to the prosecution of the action. Where the action is one which the court finds, under subsection (b)(5)(A), to be based solely on evidence or information described in clause (i) or (ii) of that subsection, the court may award such sums as it considers appropriate, but in no case more than 10 percent of the proceeds, taking into account the significance of the evidence or information and the role of a person in advancing the case to litigation. Any payment under this paragraph shall be made from the proceeds. Such person shall also receive an amount for reasonable expenses which the court finds to have been necessarily incurred, plus reasonable attorneys' fees and costs. All such expenses, fees, and costs shall be awarded against the defendant.

"(2) If the Government does not proceed with an action under this section, the person bringing the action or settling the claim shall receive an amount which the court decides is reasonable for collecting the civil penalty and damages. The amount shall be not less than 25 percent and not more than 30 percent of the proceeds of the action or settlement and shall be paid out of such proceeds. Such person shall also receive an amount for reasonable expenses which the court finds to have been necessarily incurred, plus reasonable attorneys' fees and costs. All such expenses, fees, and costs shall be awarded against the defendant.

"(3) If the Government does not proceed with the action and the person bringing the action conducts the action, the court may award to the defendant its reasonable attorneys' fees and expenses if the defendant prevails in the action and the court finds that the claim of the person bringing the action was clearly frivolous, vexatious, or brought solely for purposes of harassment.

"(e) GOVERNMENT NOT LIABLE FOR CERTAIN EXPENSES.—The Government is not liable for expenses which a person incurs in bringing an action under this section.".

SEC. 4. ENTITLEMENT TO RELIEF FOR DISCRIMINATION BY EMPLOYERS AGAINST EMPLOYEES WHO REPORT VIOLATIONS.

Section 3730 of title 31, United States Code, as amended by section 3 of this Act, is further amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(f) Any employee who is discharged, demoted, suspended, threatened, harassed, or in any other manner discriminated against in the terms and conditions of employment by his or her employer in whole or in part because of lawful acts done by the employee on behalf of the employee or others in furtherance of an action under this section, including investigation for, initiation of, testimony for, or assistance in an action filed or to be filed under this section, shall be entitled to all relief necessary to make the employee whole. Such relief shall include reinstatement with the same seniority status such employee would have had but for the discrimination, 2 times the amount of back pay, interest on the back pay, and compensation for any special damages sustained as a result of the discrimination, including litigation costs and reasonable attorneys' fees. An employee may bring an action in the appropriate district court of the United States for the relief provided in this subsection.".

SEC. 5. FALSE CLAIMS PROCEDURE.

Section 3731 of title 31, United States Code, is amended by striking subsection (b) and inserting the following:

"(b) A civil action under section 3730 may not be brought—

"(1) more than 6 years after the date on which the violation of section 3729 is committed, or

"(2) more than 3 years after the date when facts material to the right of action are known or reasonably should have been known by the official of the United States charged with responsibility to act in the circumstances, but in no event more than 10 years after the date on which the violation is committed, whichever occurs last.

"(c) In any action brought under section 3730, the United States shall be required to prove all essential elements of the cause of action, including damages, by a preponderance of the evidence.

"(d) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, or the Federal Rules of Evidence, a final judgment rendered in favor of the United States in any criminal proceeding charging fraud or false statements, whether upon a verdict after trial or upon a plea of guilty or nolo contendere, shall estop the defendant from denying the essential elements of the offense in any action which involves the same transaction as in the criminal proceeding and which is brought under subsection (a) or (b) of section 3730.".

SEC. 6. FALSE CLAIMS JURISDICTION; CIVIL INVESTIGATIVE DEMANDS.

"§ 3732. False claims jurisdiction

"(a) ACTIONS UNDER SECTION 3730.—Any action under section 3730 may be brought in any judicial district in which the defendant or, in the case of multiple defendants, any one defendant can be found, resides, transacts business, or in which any act proscribed by section 3729 occurred. A summons as required by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure shall be issued by the appropriate district court and served at any place within or outside the United States.

"(b) CLAIMS UNDER STATE LAW.—The district courts shall have jurisdiction over any action brought under the laws of any State for the recovery of funds paid by a State or local government if the action arises from the same transaction or occurrence as an action brought under section 3730.

"§ 3733. Civil investigative demands

"(a) IN GENERAL.—

"(1) ISSUANCE AND SERVICE.—Whenever the Attorney General has reason to believe that any person may be in possession, custody, or control of any documentary material or information relevant to a false claims law investigation, the Attorney General may, before commencing a civil proceeding under section 3730 or other false claims law, issue in writing and cause to be served upon such person, a civil investigative demand requiring such person—

"(A) to produce such documentary material for inspection and copying,

"(B) to answer in writing written interrogatories with respect to such documentary material or information,

"(C) to give oral testimony concerning such documentary material or information, or

"(D) to furnish any combination of such material, answers, or testimony.

The Attorney General may not delegate the authority to issue civil investigative demands under this subsection. Whenever a civil investigative demand is an express demand for any product of discovery, the Attorney General, the Deputy Attorney General, or an Assistant Attorney General shall cause to be served, in any manner authorized by this section, a copy of such demand upon the person from whom the discovery was obtained and shall notify the person to whom such demand is issued of the date on which such copy was served.

"(2) CONTENTS AND DEADLINES.—

"(A) Each civil investigative demand issued under paragraph (1) shall state the nature of the conduct constituting the alleged violation of a false claims law which is under investigation, and the applicable provision of law alleged to be violated.

"(B) If such demand is for the production of documentary material, the demand shall—

"(i) describe each class of documentary material to be produced with such definiteness and certainty as to permit such material to be fairly identified;

"(ii) prescribe a return date for each such class which will provide a reasonable period of time within which the material so demanded may be assembled and made available for inspection and copying; and

"(iii) identify the false claims law investigator to whom such material shall be made available.

"(C) If such demand is for answers to written interrogatories, the demand shall—

"(i) set forth with specificity the written interrogatories to be answered;

"(ii) prescribe dates at which time answers to written interrogatories shall be submitted; and

"(iii) identify the false claims law investigator to whom such answers shall be submitted.

"(D) If such demand is for the giving of oral testimony, the demand shall—

"(i) prescribe a date, time, and place at which oral testimony shall be commenced; and

"(ii) identify a false claims law investigator who shall conduct the examination and the custodian to whom the transcript of such examination shall be submitted.

Any such demand which is an express demand for any product of discovery shall not be returned or returnable until 20 days after the date on which a copy of such demand has been served upon the person from whom the discovery was obtained.

"(b) PROTECTED MATERIAL OR INFORMATION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—A civil investigative demand issued under subsection (a) may not require the production of any documentary material, the submission of any answers to written interrogatories, or the giving of any oral testimony if such material, answers, or testimony would be protected from disclosure under—

"(A) the standards applicable to subpoenas or subpoenas duces tecum issued by a court of the United States to aid in a grand jury investigation; or

"(B) the standards applicable to discovery requests under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, to the extent that the application of such standards to any such demand is appropriate and consistent with the provisions and purposes of this section.

"(2) EFFECT ON OTHER ORDERS, RULES, AND LAWS.—Any such demand which is an express demand for any product of discovery supersedes any inconsistent order, rule, or provision of law (other than this section) preventing or restraining disclosure of such product of discovery to any person. Disclosure of any product of discovery pursuant to any such express demand does not constitute a waiver of any right or privilege which the person making such disclosure may be entitled to invoke to resist discovery of trial preparation materials.

"(c) SERVICE; JURISDICTION.—

"(1) BY WHOM SERVED.—Any civil investigative demand issued under subsection (a) may be served by a false claims law investigator, or by a United States marshal or a deputy marshal, at any place within the territorial jurisdiction of any court of the United States.

"(2) SERVICE IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES.—Any such demand or any petition filed under subsection (j) may be served upon any person who is not found within the territorial jurisdiction of any court of the United States in such manner as the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure prescribe for service in a foreign country. To the extent that the courts of the United States can assert jurisdiction over any such person consistent with due process, the United States District Court for the District of Columbia shall have the same jurisdiction to take any action respecting compliance with this section by any such person that such court would have if such person were personally within the jurisdiction of such court.

"(d) SERVICE UPON LEGAL ENTITIES AND NATURAL PERSONS.—

"(1) LEGAL ENTITIES.—Service of any civil investigative demand issued under subsection (a) or of any petition filed under subsection (j) may be made upon a partnership, corporation, association, or other legal entity by—

"(A) delivering an executed copy of such demand or petition to any partner, executive officer, managing agent, or general agent of the partnership, corporation, association, or entity, or to any agent authorized by appointment or by law to receive service of process on behalf of such partnership, corporation, association, or entity;

"(B) delivering an executed copy of such demand or petition to the principal office or place of business of the partnership, corporation, association, or entity; or

"(C) depositing an executed copy of such demand or petition in the United States mails by registered or certified mail, with a return receipt requested, addressed to such partnership, corporation, association, or entity at its principal office or place of business.

"(2) NATURAL PERSONS.—Service of any such demand or petition may be made upon any natural person by—

"(A) delivering an executed copy of such demand or petition to the person; or

"(B) depositing an executed copy of such demand or petition in the United States mails by registered or certified mail, with a return receipt requested, addressed to the person at the person's residence or principal office or place of business.

"(e) PROOF OF SERVICE.—A verified return by the individual serving any civil investigative demand issued under subsection (a) or any petition filed under subsection (j) setting forth the manner of such service shall be proof of such service. In the case of service by registered or certified mail, such return shall be accompanied by the return post office receipt of delivery of such demand.

"(f) DOCUMENTARY MATERIAL.—

"(1) SWORN CERTIFICATES.—The production of documentary material in response to a civil investigative demand served under this section shall be made under a sworn certificate, in such form as the demand designates, by—

"(A) in the case of a natural person, the person to whom the demand is directed, or

"(B) in the case of a person other than a natural person, a person having knowledge of the facts and circumstances relating to such production and authorized to act on behalf of such person.

The certificate shall state that all of the documentary material required by the demand and in the possession, custody, or control of the person to whom the demand is directed has been produced and made available to the false claims law investigator identified in the demand.

"(2) PRODUCTION OF MATERIALS.—Any person upon whom any civil investigative demand for the production of documentary material has been served under this section shall make such material available for inspection and copying to the false claims law investigator identified in such demand at the principal place of business of such person, or at such other place as the false claims law investigator and the person thereafter may agree and prescribe in writing, or as the court may direct under subsection (j)(1). Such material shall be made so available on the return date specified in such demand, or on such later date as the false claims law investigator may prescribe in writing. Such person may, upon written agreement between the person and the false claims law investigator, substitute copies for originals of all or any part of such material.

"(g) INTERROGATORIES.—Each interrogatory in a civil investigative demand served under this section shall be answered separately and fully in writing under oath and shall be submitted under a sworn certificate, in such form as the demand designates, by—

"(1) in the case of a natural person, the person to whom the demand is directed, or

"(2) in the case of a person other than a natural person, the person or persons responsible for answering each interrogatory.

If any interrogatory is objected to, the reasons for the objection shall be stated in the certificate instead of an answer. The certificate shall state that all information required by the demand and in the possession, custody, control, or knowledge of the person to whom the demand is directed has been submitted. To the extent that any information is not furnished, the information shall be identified and reasons set forth with particularity regarding the reasons why the information was not furnished.

"(h) ORAL EXAMINATIONS.—

"(1) PROCEDURES.—The examination of any person pursuant to a civil investigative demand for oral testimony served under this section shall be taken before an officer authorized to administer oaths and affirmations by the laws of the United States or of the place where the examination is held. The officer before whom the testimony is to be taken shall put the witness on oath or affirmation and shall, personally or by someone acting under the direction of the officer and in the officer's presence, record the testimony of the witness. The testimony shall be taken stenographically and shall be transcribed. When the testimony is fully transcribed, the officer before whom the testimony is taken shall promptly transmit a copy of the transcript of the testimony to the custodian. This subsection shall not preclude the taking of testimony by any means authorized by, and in a manner consistent with, the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

"(2) PERSONS PRESENT.—The false claims law investigator conducting the examination shall exclude from the place where the examination is held all persons except the person being examined, the person's counsel, the officer before whom the testimony is to be taken, and any other stenographer taking such testimony.

"(3) WHERE TESTIMONY TAKEN.—The oral testimony of any person taken pursuant to a civil investigative demand served under this section shall be taken in the judicial district of the United States within which such person resides, is found, or transacts business, or in such other place as may be agreed upon by the false claims law investigator conducting the examination and such person.

"(4) TRANSCRIPT OF TESTIMONY.—When the testimony is fully transcribed, the false claims law investigator or the officer before whom the testimony is taken shall afford the witness, who may be accompanied by counsel, a reasonable opportunity to examine and read the transcript, unless such examination and reading are waived by the witness. Any changes in form or substance which the witness desires to make shall be entered and identified upon the transcript by the officer or the false claims law investigator, with a statement of the reasons given by the witness for making such changes. The transcript shall then be signed by the witness, unless the witness in writing waives the signing, is ill, cannot be found, or refuses to sign. If the transcript is not signed by the witness within 30 days after being afforded a reasonable opportunity to examine it, the officer or the false claims law investigator shall sign it and state on the record the fact of the waiver, illness, absence of the witness, or the refusal to sign, together with the reason, if any, given therefor.

"(5) CERTIFICATION AND DELIVERY TO CUSTODIAN.—The officer before whom the testimony is taken shall certify on the transcript that the witness was sworn by the officer and that the transcript is a true record of the testimony given by the witness, and the officer or false claims law investigator shall promptly deliver the transcript, or send the transcript by registered or certified mail, to the custodian.

"(6) FURNISHING OR INSPECTION OF TRANSCRIPT BY WITNESS.—Upon payment of reasonable charges therefor, the false claims law investigator shall furnish a copy of the transcript to the witness only, except that the Attorney General, the Deputy Attorney General, or an Assistant Attorney General may, for good cause, limit such witness to inspection of the official transcript of the witness's testimony.

"(7) CONDUCT OF ORAL TESTIMONY.—(A) Any person compelled to appear for oral testimony under a civil investigative demand issued under subsection (a) may be accompanied, represented, and advised by counsel. Counsel may advise such person, in confidence, with respect to any question asked of such person. Such person or counsel may object on the record to any question, in whole or in part, and shall briefly state for the record the reason for the objection. An objection may be made, received, and entered upon the record when it is claimed that such person is entitled to refuse to answer the question on the grounds of any constitutional or other legal right or privilege, including the privilege against self-incrimination. Such person may not otherwise object to or refuse to answer any question, and may not directly or through counsel otherwise interrupt the oral examination. If such person refuses to answer any question, a petition may be filed in the district court of the United States under subsection (j)(1) for an order compelling such person to answer such question.

"(B) If such person refuses to answer any question on the grounds of the privilege against self-incrimination, the testimony of such person may be compelled in accordance with the provisions of part V of title 18.

"(8) WITNESS FEES AND ALLOWANCES.—Any person appearing for oral testimony under a civil investigative demand issued under subsection (a) shall be entitled to the same fees and allowances which are paid to witnesses in the district courts of the United States.

"(i) CUSTODIANS OF DOCUMENTS, ANSWERS, AND TRANSCRIPTS.—

"(1) DESIGNATION.—The Attorney General shall designate a false claims law investigator to serve as custodian of documentary material, answers to interrogatories, and transcripts of oral testimony received under this section, and shall designate such additional false claims law investigators as the Attorney General determines from time to time to be necessary to serve as deputies to the custodian.

"(2) RESPONSIBILITY FOR MATERIALS; DISCLOSURE.—(A) A false claims law investigator who receives any documentary material, answers to interrogatories, or transcripts of oral testimony under this section shall transmit them to the custodian. The custodian shall take physical possession of such material, answers, or transcripts and shall be responsible for the use made of them and for the return of documentary material under paragraph (4).

"(B) The custodian may cause the preparation of such copies of such documentary material, answers to interrogatories, or transcripts of oral testimony as may be required for official use by any false claims law investigator, or other officer or employee of the Department of Justice, who is authorized for such use under regulations which the Attorney General shall issue. Such material, answers, and transcripts may be used by any such authorized false claims law investigator or other officer or employee in connection with the taking of oral testimony under this section.

"(C) Except as otherwise provided in this subsection, no documentary material, answers to interrogatories, or transcripts of oral testimony, or copies thereof, while in the possession of the custodian, shall be available for examination by any individual other than a false claims law investigator or other officer or employee of the Department of Justice authorized under subparagraph (B). The prohibition in the preceding sentence on the availability of material, answers, or transcripts shall not apply if consent is given by the person who produced such material, answers, or transcripts, or, in the case of any product of discovery produced pursuant to an express demand for such material, consent is given by the person from whom the discovery was obtained. Nothing in this subparagraph is intended to prevent disclosure to the Congress, including any committee or subcommittee of the Congress.

"(D) Notwithstanding subparagraph (C), documentary material, answers to interrogatories, or transcripts of oral testimony obtained under a civil investigative demand issued under this section shall be disclosed to an agency of the United States if—

"(i) that agency files, in a district court of the United States in which petitions under subsection (j) may be filed, and serves upon the person named in the civil investigative demand and, in the case of an express demand for any product of dicovery, the person from whom such discovery was obtained, a petition requesting such disclosure;

"(ii) any person so served has an opportunity to be heard on the petition;

"(iii) the court finds that disclosure of the information involved is relevant to an investigation by the agency which it is authorized by law to conduct; and

"(iv) the court issues an order requiring such disclosure.

The provisions of paragraphs (5) and (6) of subsection (j) (relating to jurisdiction and applicability of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure) apply to petitions under this subparagraph.

"(E) While in the possession of the custodian and under such reasonable terms and conditions as the Attorney General shall prescribe—

"(i) documentary material and answers to interrogatories shall be available for examination by the person who produced such material or answers, or by a representative of that person authorized by that person to examine such material and answers; and

"(ii) transcripts of oral testimony shall be available for examination by the person who produced such testimony, or by a representative of that person authorized by that person to examine such transcripts.

"(3) USE OF MATERIAL, ANSWERS, OR TRANSCRIPTS IN OTHER PROCEEDINGS.—Whenever any attorney of the Department of Justice has been designated to appear before any court, grand jury, or Federal agency in any case or proceeding, the custodian of any documentary material, answers to interrogatories, or transcripts of oral testimony received under this section may deliver to such attorney such material, answers, or transcripts for official use in connection with any such case or proceeding as such attorney determines to be required. Upon the completion of any such case or proceeding, such attorney shall return to the custodian any such material, answers, or transcripts so delivered which have not passed into the control of such court, grand jury, or agency through introduction into the record of such case or proceeding.

"(4) CONDITIONS FOR RETURN OF MATERIAL.—If any documentary material has been produced by any person in the course of any false claims law investigation pursuant to a civil investigative demand under this section, and—

"(A) any case or proceeding before any court or grand jury arising out of such investigation, or any proceeding before any Federal agency involving such material, has been completed, or

"(B) no case or proceeding in which such material may be used has been commenced within a reasonable time after completion of the examination and analysis of all documentary material and other information assembled in the course of such investigation, the custodian shall, upon written request of the person who produced such material, return to such person any such material (other than copies furnished to the false claims law investigator under subsection (f)(2) or made by the Department of Justice under paragraph (2)(B)) which has not passed into the control of any court, grand jury, or agency through introduction into the record of such case or proceeding.

"(5) APPOINTMENT OF SUCCESSOR CUSTODIANS.—In the event of the death, disability, or separation from service in the Department of Justice of the custodian of any documentary material, answers to interrogatories, or transcripts of oral testimony produced pursuant to a civil investigative demand under this section, or in the event of the official relief of such custodian from responsibility for the custody and control of such material, answers, or transcripts, the Attorney General shall promptly—

"(A) designate another false claims law investigator to serve as custodian of such material, answers, or transcripts, and

"(B) transmit in writing to the person who produced such material, answers, or testimony notice of the identity and address of the successor so designated.

Any person who is designated to be a successor under this paragraph shall have, with regard to such material, answers, or transcripts, the same duties and responsibilities as were imposed by this section upon that person's predecessor in office, except that the successor shall not be held responsible for any default or dereliction which occurred before that designation.

"(j) JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS.—

"(1) PETITION FOR ENFORCEMENT.—Whenever any person fails to comply with any civil investigative demand issued under subsection (a), or whenever satisfactory copying or reproduction of any material requested in such demand cannot be done and such person refuses to surrender such material, the Attorney General may file, in the district court of the United States for any judicial district in which such person resides, is found, or transacts business, and serve upon such person a petition for an order of such court for the enforcement of the civil investigative demand.

"(2) PETITION TO MODIFY OR SET ASIDE DEMAND.—(A) Any person who has received a civil investigative demand issued under subsection (a) may file, in the district court of the United States for the judicial district within which such person resides, is found, or transacts business, and serve upon the false claims law investigator identified in such demand a petition for an order of the court to modify or set aside such demand. In the case of a petition addressed to an express demand for any product of discovery, a petition to modify or set aside such demand may be brought only in the district court of the United States for the judicial district in which the proceeding in which such discovery was obtained is or was last pending. Any petition under this subparagraph must be filed—

"(i) within 20 days after the date of service of the civil investigative demand, or at any time before the return date specified in the demand, whichever date is earlier, or

"(ii) within such longer period as may be prescribed in writing by any false claims law investigator identified in the demand.

"(B) The petition shall specify each ground upon which the petitioner relies in seeking relief under subparagraph (A), and may be based upon any failure of the demand to comply with the provisions of this section or upon any constitutional or other legal right or privilege of such person. During the pendency of the petition in the court, the court may stay, as it deems proper, the running of the time allowed for compliance with the demand, in whole or in part, except that the person filing the petition shall comply with any portions of the demand not sought to be modified or set aside.

"(3) PETITION TO MODIFY OR SET ASIDE DEMAND FOR PRODUCT OF DISCOVERY.—(A) In the case of any civil investigative demand issued under subsection (a) which is an express demand for any product of discovery, the person from whom such discovery was obtained may file, in the district court of the United States for the judicial district in which the proceeding in which such discovery was obtained is or was last pending, and serve upon any false claims law investigator identified in the demand and upon the recipient of the demand, a petition for an order of such court to modify or set aside those portions of the demand requiring production of any such product of discovery. Any petition under this subparagraph must be filed—

"(i) within 20 days after the date of service of the civil investigative demand, or at any time before the return date specified in the demand, whichever date is earlier, or

"(ii) within such longer period as may be prescribed in writing by any false claims law investigator identified in the demand.

"(B) The petition shall specify each ground upon which the petitioner relies in seeking relief under subparagraph (A), and may be based upon any failure of the portions of the demand from which relief is sought to comply with the provisions of this section, or upon any constitutional or other legal right or privilege of the petitioner. During the pendency of the petition, the court may stay, as it deems proper, compliance with the demand and the running of the time allowed for compliance with the demand.

"(4) PETITION TO REQUIRE PERFORMANCE BY CUSTODIAN OF DUTIES.—At any time during which any custodian is in custody or control of any documentary material or answers to interrogatories produced, or transcripts of oral testimony given, by any person in compliance with any civil investigative demand issued under subsection (a), such person, and in the case of an express demand for any product of discovery, the person from whom such discovery was obtained, may file, in the district court of the United States for the judicial district within which the office of such custodian is situated, and serve upon such custodian, a petition for an order of such court to require the performance by the custodian of any duty imposed upon the custodian by this section.

"(5) JURISDICTION.—Whenever any petition is filed in any district court of the United States under this subsection, such court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the matter so presented, and to enter such order or orders as may be required to carry out the provisions of this section. Any final order so entered shall be subject to appeal under section 1291 of title 28. Any disobedience of any final order entered under this section by any court shall be punished as a contempt of the court.

"(6) APPLICABILITY OF FEDERAL RULES OF CIVIL PROCEDURE.—The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure shall apply to any petition under this subsection, to the extent that such rules are not inconsistent with the provisions of this section.

"(7) DISCLOSURE EXEMPTION.—Any documentary material, answers to written interrogatories, or oral testimony provided under any civil investigative demand issued under subsection (a) shall be exempt from disclosure under section 552 of title 5.

"(k) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) the term 'false claims law' means—

"(A) this section and sections 3729 through 3732; and

"(B) any Act of Congress enacted after the date of the enactment of this section which prohibits, or makes available to the United States in any court of the United States any civil remedy with respect to, any false claim against, bribery of, or corruption of any officer or employee of the United States;

"(2) the term 'false claims law investigation' means any inquiry conducted by any false claims law investigator for the purpose of ascertaining whether any person is or has been engaged in any violation of a false claims law;

"(3) the term 'false claims law investigator' means any attorney or investigator employed by the Department of Justice who is charged with the duty of enforcing or carrying into effect any false claims law, or any officer or employee of the United States acting under the direction and supervision of such attorney or investigator in connection with a false claims law investigation;

"(4) the term 'person' means any natural person, partnership, corporation, association, or other legal entity, including any State or political subdivision of a State;

"(5) the term 'documentary material' includes the original or any copy of any book, record, report, memorandum, paper, communication, tabulation, chart, or other document, or data compilations stored in or accessible through computer or other information retrieval systems, together with instructions and all other materials necessary to use or interpret such data compilations, and any product of discovery;

"(6) the term 'custodian' means the custodian, or any deputy custodian, designated by the Attorney General under subsection (i)(1); and

"(7) the term 'product of discovery' includes—

"(A) the original or duplicate of any deposition, interrogatory, document, thing, result of the inspection of land or other property, examination, or admission, which is obtained by any method of discovery in any judicial or administrative proceeding of an adversarial nature;

"(B) any digest, analysis, selection, compilation, or derivation of any item listed in subparagraph (A); and

"(C) any index or other manner of access to any item listed in subparagraph (A).".

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of contents for chapter 37 of title 31, United States Code, is amended by adding after the item relating to section 3731 the following:

"3732. False claims jurisdiction.

"3733. Civil investigative demands.".

SEC. 7. CRIMINAL PENALTIES.

Section 287 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking "five" and inserting "ten".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. BROWN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GLICKMAN] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BROWN] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GLICKMAN].

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this is a very important bill, the False Claims Amendments Act, because it increases significantly the penalties for filing false claims against the Government of the United States; claims that could involve the Medicare system, claims to the Defense Department, the veterans' system, welfare; you name it. It deals with the issue of civil and criminal penalties for those who try to take advantage of taxpayers in this country by filing false claims against the Government.

This bill increases, rather substantially, the rights of citizens to challenge that and the penalties incurred thereby.

Before I begin my statement, I would like to especially thank those Members that have helped with this piece of legislation. They are Mr. KINDNESS, Mr. FISH, and Mr. BROWN of Colorado from the Republican side, who has been so cooperative in helping with this area, as well as Mr. BROOKS, Mr. FRANK, Mr. BRYANT, Mr. STARK, Mr. BEDELL, and Mr. IRELAND.

I also want to particularly give reference to Mr. BERMAN of California because it was largely through his efforts on the citizens' suit or the qui tam provisions that we were able to work this deal together. Again, to our colleague from Texas, Mr. BROOKS, for his help as well.

Mr. Speaker, in 1863, during the Civil War, the False Claims Act became law. This act, sometimes referred to as the "Abraham Lincoln Law", was enacted amid reports of widespread corruption and fraud in the sale of supplies and provisions to the union government during the war. As orginally enacted, the statute imposed civil and criminal liability for false claims against the Government.

Unfortunately, fraud against the U.S. Government did not end with the conclusion of the Civil War in 1865. However, the act has only been amended twice in 123 years: Amendments to the qui tam provisions were enacted in 1943, and in 1982, technical amendments were made during the recodification of title 31, where the civil false claims provisions are set forth in the United States Code. With this brief background of the False Claims Act, it is easy to understand why the current law is quite outdated. During hearings before the Subcommittee on Administrative Law and Governmental Relations, several witnesses pointed out that a large part of the problem in prosecuting civil fraud cases is because of the ambiguities and lack of clarity in the current statute, and also because the monetary penalties are no longer a serious deterrent to the filing of false claims.

H.R. 4827, the False Claims Amendments Act of 1986, is a very important piece of legislation. The False Claims Act is the primary vehicle by which the Government prosecutes civil fraud. In 1986, with a deficit in the range of $200 billion, I think it is critically important that we modernize this statute so that the Government has a workable law through which to prosecute fraud and recoup the losses suffered by the Government.

One of the major provisions of H.R. 4827 increases the amount of damages recoverable to not less than $5,000 and not more than $10,000. The bill also provides for recovery of consequential damages. Under the current statute, the penalty is $2,000 and makes no provision for the recovery of consequential damages. As an example of how out of date this statute has become, the Congressional Research Service has informed me that the equivalent of $2,000 in 1863 would today be close to $18,000.

Other provisions of the bill include expanding the qui tam, or citizen suit, provisions of the law, as well as providing the Government with the power to issue civil investigative demands.

Civil investigative demands [CID's] are a pre-lawsuit discovery mechanism which allows the Department of Justice to conduct discovery in civil false claims cases, without the expense of first filing a civil fraud case in Federal district court. This CID provision, however, can only be utilized by the Department of Justice if the Attorney General himself approves the issuance of such.

The bill which we are considering today and which is at the desk, is not exactly like the bill which was reported by the full committee on June 10, 1986. Although H.R. 4827, as amended, was reported by the full committee by a unanimous (35-0) rollcall vote, several Members still had reservations about a few provisions contained in the bill. In order to satisfy these reservations, a compromise was reached which includes the following changes to the bill:

First, there is a change to section 3, the qui tam provisions of the bill. In the bill as reported by the committee, the qui tam plaintiffs rights when the Government enters the lawsuit, were based on the rights of mandatory intervention, pursuant to rule 24(a) of the Federal rules of civil procedure. The bill at the desk adopts the standard of intervention to be that of permissive intervention pursuant to rule 24(b) of the Federal rules. The compromise bill also includes language which provides the qui tam plaintiff with the right to notice of any motion to dismiss filed by the Government and a right to a hearing on any such motion.

Second, the administrative remedy (section 7) was deleted in its entirety. The administrative remedy contained in the bill as reported by the committee applied governmentwide and there were numerous concerns with this provision by several Members. Therefore, this provision has been deleted.

Third, in section 3 of the bill, the Contract Disputes Act language is deleted. With the deletion of the administrative remedy, this bill amends only the current False Claims Act. Since the False Claims Act and the Contract Disputes Act of 1978 have coexisted since 1978, it was decided as part of the compromise, to delete this portion of the bill.

As I said earlier, the False Claims Amendments Act of 1986 is a very important piece of legislation. It is important because it is the primary mechanism through which the Government recoups losses suffered through fraud. It is especially important today given the enormous deficit the Government faces today. Perhaps, if the False Claims Act had been clarified and updated 30 years ago, we might not face quite the same deficit we do today. In any event, the modernization of this statute can and should enable the Government to recoup potentially thousands of dollars lost through fraud each year.

I would note for the record that the administration supports this bill, and, in addition, the Congressional Budget Office indicates that the bill would have a positive impact on our deficit.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I support H.R. 4827 as it is presented today and hope that my colleagues will also. This legislation makes important improvements to the False Claims Act of 1863. That act was enacted during the Civil War to stem the massive corruption and abuse occurring in the procurement of union war supplies. Today, it serves as the Government's chief statutory weapon to combat fraud. Except for two relatively minor amendments, however, the False Claims Act has not been revised since its enactment 123 years ago.

Today's bill would make changes to update the False Claims Act in several significant ways. First, it will increase the civil penalties authorized under the current law. The 1863 act provided for a doubling of actual damages, a $2,000 fine and recovery of the cost of the lawsuit. H.R. 4827 will increase these penalties to double actual damages plus consequential damages, a fine from $5,000 to $10,000, and the costs of suit. These increases in the penalties fixed in 1863 are needed to keep the deterrent value of the False Claims Act current and effective in our modern world.

H.R. 4827 also makes changes to the act's original qui tam, or citizen suits, provisions. The False Claims Act contains provisions which allow citizens to bring suits for false claims on behalf of the Government. These "Lincoln" provisions, named after the President, will be strengthened by H.R. 4827. The incentives for citizens to file such suits are increased, the ability of the citizen who brings such a suit to follow through with the litigation is enhanced, and "whistle-blower" protections are provided employees who report fraud and abuse in conjunction with false claims prosecutions.

Further, the Justice Department is given greater investigative powers and tools to ferret out false claims and fraud under provisions of the bill.

Together, these changes will add new force and vigor to the Nation's efforts to stop fraud in Government services and procurements. They are urgently needed in light of the recent indications of massive procurement abuses occurring in the recent military buildup. Along with the changes this bill makes, there are other reforms and ideas pertinent to this problem which merit serious consideration. Today's bill is not a cure-all, but rather an important first step in revising current out-of-date statutory provisions. I hope my colleagues will pass this measure, and I look forward to working with them on further efforts to address the problem of procurement and services fraud which has plagued our Nation to a greater or lesser extent throughout our history.

Mr. BROWN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the ranking Republican on the Judiciary Committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], who is the original sponsor of the administration's initiative in this area.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the False Claims Amendments Act of 1986. This legislation will greatly enhance the ability of the Federal Government to deal with fraud and waste in Government grant and loan programs and procurement contracts. As the principal sponsor of the administration's original proposals (H.R. 3334; H.R. 3335) on this subject, I believe that we have fashioned a workable, effective compromise and want to express my sincere appreciation to the administration, in particular the Department of Justice, for its expert assistance in this effort.

Mr. Speaker, the False Claims Act is one of the oldest and potentially most effective remedies available to the United States to discourage and respond to the fraudulent misuse of Federal resources. It is the principal statute upon which the Government relies to seek monetary recovery in fraud cases. The statute was first enacted in 1863, at the height of the Civil War. It permits the Federal Government to recover two times the amount of any false or fraudulent claim submitted, plus a $2,000 civil fine. Closely patterned after bills I originally introduced, the amendments contained in H.R. 4827 would make several statutory changes so as to resolve inconsistencies and ambiguities in current case law and strengthen the Government's ability to investigate, litigate, and otherwise resolve fraud cases.

It should be stressed, Mr. Speaker, that we are dealing here with a civil—not a criminal—statute. The False Claims Act is remedial in nature. The reason for my emphasis on this point is that considerable confusion has been prompted by judicial decisions that have treated the False Claims Act as if it were a criminal statute. These decisions have severely hampered the Justice Department and other Federal agencies in their efforts to effectively recover losses incurred as a result of fraud, waste, and abuse. These cases, in part, are the reason why I introduced the administration's package.

Second, while the False Claims Act is not a penal statute, it does have an important deterrent effect. The False Claims Act allows the Government, on behalf of the taxpayer, to recover losses suffered through the submission of fraudulent claims. The double damages remedy has been a part of this law since 1863 and it implicitly contains a significant deterrence element. The double damages recovery, with the accompanying civil fine, is intended to be a substantial penalty—to forcefully discourage individuals and companies that do business with the United States from engaging in fraudulent practices. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the dual purpose of any such law should always be to deter as well as punish fraudulent conduct.

Under current law, the Federal Government is limited to actual damages, which are then doubled under the statutory formula. Section 2 of H.R. 4827 would make consequential damages the measurement standard—thus allowing a recovery for indirect losses that are the result of the fraud as well as actual, direct losses. This is a realistic, fair change which ensures the recovery will reflect actual replacement cost in every instance.

Last, but not least, I feel I must stress that I do not view these legislative proposals as anticontractor in nature. Rather, I view these legislative proposals as protaxpayer. There is no question in my mind but that the responsible representatives of the private sector share our common goals. Specifically, those goals are: First, an efficent Federal procurement process that results in the purchase of quality products and services at fair prices; and second, an effective mechanism for the Government to employ in recovering its losses when victimized by fraud.

Mr. Speaker, allow me to turn to those provisions in the bill that are deserving of special note. To my mind, one of the most important amendments contained in H.R. 4827 deals with the intent standard and the burden of proof in the False Claims Act. The language of the False Claims Act currently provides that the Federal Government need only prove that the defendant knowingly submitted a false claim. However, this statutory standard has been misconstrued by some courts so as to require that the Government prove the defendant had actual knowledge of the fraud and, even, establish specific intent to submit a false claim. See United States v. Mead, 426 F.2d 118 (9th Cir., 1970). A specific intent standard, Mr. Speaker, is inappropriate in a civil statute and H.R. 4827 would remove the ambiguity created by this case law by defining knowingly as: First, actual knowledge of the information; second, deliberate ignorance of the truth or falsity of the information; or third, acts in reckless disregard of the truth or falsity of the information.

The burden of proof in civil false claims cases is another area where legislative clarification is necessary to resolve ambiguities which have developed in the case law. Some courts have required that the United States prove a violation by clear and convincing, even unequivocal, evidence. United States v. Ueber, 299 F.2d 310 (6th Cir., 1962). Because the False Claims Act is a civil statute, the traditional "preponderance of the evidence" burden of proof is more appropriate. Consequently, H.R. 4827 specifically provides that the Government must prove its case by a preponderance of the evidence, the ordinary standard in civil litigation.

H.R. 4827 also contains numerous other amendments, which are designed to resolve specific problems which have arisen under the act:

Section 2(a) raises the fixed statutory penalty for submitting a false claim from $2,000 to not less than $5,000 and not more than $10,000. The $2,000 figure has remained unchanged since the initial enactment of the False Claims Act in 1863.

Section 2(a) also amends the act to permit the United States to bring an action against a member of the Armed Forces, as well as against civilian employees. When the act was first enacted in 1863, the military was excluded because the Government then had available more severe military remedies.

Also, as I mentioned earlier, section 2(a) would permit the Government to recover consequential damages it suffers from the submission of a false claim.

Section 2(a) also provides that an individual who makes a material misrepresentation to avoid paying money owed the Government would be equally liable under the act as if he had submitted a false claim for money or property. This is better known as a reverse false claim. For instance, the manager of HUD-owned property may falsely understate income and/or overstate expenses in order to reduce the rental receipts which must be paid to HUD at the end of each month. The existing failure to cover these reverse false claims is a serious loophole in the present law. The requirement that there must be a strict demand for money or property before an actual claim can exist under the False Claim Act should be broadened. Instead, the concept of claim should cover all those circumstances where the Government suffers a real financial loss, through a fraudulent misrepresentation or statement.

Section 5 amends the statute of limitations to permit the Government to bring an action within 6 years of when the false claim is submitted, the current standard, or within 3 years after the Government learns of the violations, whichever is later.

Section 6 of the bill modernizes the jurisdiction and venue provisions of the False Claims Act to permit the Government to bring suit, not only in the district where the defendant is found, the current standard, but also where a violation occurred. Currently, when multiple defendants live in different districts, the Government may be required to bring multiple suits, a time-consuming process that is wasteful of judicial and litigation resources.

Another important amendment—contained in section 6—is the grant of civil investigative demand [CID] authority to the Department of Justice to aid in the investigation of False Claims Act cases. The CID provisions are patterned after and analogous to the authority already exercised by the Antitrust Division under the Hart-Scott-Rodino Act. 15 U.S.C. 1311-1314. If the Attorney General of the Civil Division believes that a person has access to information relating to a False Claims Act investigation, he may, prior to filing a complaint, require the production of documents, answers to interrogatories, and oral testimony. The standards governing subpoenas and ordinary civil discovery would apply so as to protect against the disclosure of privileged information. The CID could be enforced in district court, like any other subpoena. The use of CID authority in the antitrust context has been upheld as constitutional. Hyster Company v. United States, 338 F.2d 183 (9th Cir., 1964); Petition of Gold Bond Stamp Co., 221 F. Supp. 391 (D. Minn. 1963), aff'd., 325 F.2d 1018 (8th Cir., 1964).

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to commend subcommittee Chairman DAN GLICKMAN, the ranking Republican TOM KINDNESS, and the other subcommittee members for their hard work in bringing this legislation to the floor. There is no question that Congress must seek out appropriate legislative mechanisms to insure that the taxpayers' money is well spent and protected from fraud and waste. This bill, Mr. Speaker, will accomplish just that.

Mr. BROWN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the bill we have before us today reflects the work of several Members and reflects major improvements in existing Federal law governing false claims submitted to the United States. Indeed, a 1981 report by the General Accounting Office identified over 77,000 fraud cases in 21 Federal agencies during a 2½ year period, with estimated losses of $150 to $220 million.

With this background in mind, the Judiciary Committee voted in favor of reporting H.R. 4827, the False Claims Act Amendments of 1986. The bill before us today is preferable to the earlier versions in several respects, such as providing somewhat more realistic and constitutionally defensible penalties. Nonetheless, there remain some areas in which further improvements are sorely needed to insure that due process rights are fully honored. In supporting this legislation today, it is my hope that some of these concerns will be addressed in conference.

Among the primary areas of concern generated by H.R. 4827, which we hope will be corrected in conference, are the following: First, consequential damages should be limited to those which were reasonably foreseeable and proximately caused by prohibited acts; and second, civil investigative demands, if authorized at all, should certainly not extend to written interrogatories.

CONSEQUENTIAL DAMAGES

H.R. 4827, as reported by the Judiciary Committee, amends the False Claims Act, 31 U.S.C. 3729 et seq., to include civil penalties for persons who submit false claims in an amount equal to the consequential damages sustained. In the committee bill, such damages are defined to include those "which the United States would not have sustained but for (A) the commission of any of the [prohibited] acts . . ., or (B) entering into or making any contract or grant as a result, in any material part, of any false statement, record, or claim." Current law, by contrast, has not authorized the imposition of civil penalties based on consequential damages, such as those attributable to the prohibited act. United States v. Aerodex, Inc., 469 F. 2d 1003, 1011 (5th Cir. 1972).

As reported by the committee, the definition of consequential damages is far too sweeping. From a fairness standpoint, assessments of damages should be limited to those which were proximately caused by a prohibited act, and which were reasonable foreseeable. Both of these concepts are well defined in the common law and, consequently, can be readily applied by the courts. In the absence of such limitations, persons may be subject to penalties based on highly speculative, attenuated and subjective considerations.

CIVIL INVESTIGATIVE DEMANDS

H.R. 4827, as reported by the committee, grants to the Justice Department, for the first time, authority to issue civil investigative demands [CID] to persons who may be in possession of information relevant to a false claims law investigation, before any civil proceeding is commenced. Demands could extend to documentary material, written interrogatories, and oral testimony. While the need for such authority has not been demonstrated conclusively, the bill reported by the committee as improved by an amendment confining the issuance of CID's to cases personally approved by the Attorney General. However, the committee's failure to adopt an amendment deleting authority for the issuance of written interrogatories was a serious omission.

Written interrogatories may be subject to great abuse and encourage fishing expeditions. The authority to obtain documents pursuant to a civil investigative demand will give the prosecution access to enough information to determine whether a civil action should be brought. At that point, written interrogatories, oral testimony, and the full array of discovery procedures are already available.

Mr. Speaker, we strongly support the goal of cracking down on fraud against the Government. H.R. 4827 can be further improved in conference in order to preserve due process rights and achieve its ultimate goals. Accordingly, I hope House conferees will support efforts to modify the definition of consequential damages, and restrict the scope of civil investigative demands.

With these changes, Mr. Speaker, we will have a bill that can work fairly and efficiently.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consumer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS].

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I, too, join in what seems to be unanimous support for the fast clearance of this legislation and for its final adoption by the Congress of the United States.

I suppose there is nothing more vital to the taxpayer, if we heed the daily conversations of the average American citizen, than the horror stories that they hear on a daily basis—and most of them are justified—as to what goes on in several sectors, in fact, in almost all sectors of the Government at one time or another relating to fraud and waste. If there is anything that galls the taxpayer more, I would like to know what it is, than to learn that their taxpayer dollars are wasted in one form or another.

I do not consider this to be a small thing but, rather, a major thrust, and every little bit that we can do, first of all, to eliminate or reduce fraud and waste, and second, to allay the worries of our taxpayers that indeed there might be an attitude in the Congress that pooh-poohs fraud and waste would be a step in the right direction. So these kinds of bills ought to be adopted on a regular basis.

Mr. Speaker, I support the measure, and I commend all those who made it possible for us to have a quick resolution of this issue.

Mr. BROWN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS] for his leadership in this area.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished chairman of our Committee on the Judiciary, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. RODINO].

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, on June 10, 1986, the Judiciary Committee favorably reported H.R. 4827, the False Claims Amendments Act of 1986 to the floor by a unanimous (35-0) rollcall vote. The purpose of this legislation is to amend the existing civil false claims statute in order to strengthen and clarify the Government's ability to detect and prosecute fraud, as well as to recoup damages suffered by the Government as the result of such fraud.

The False Claims Act was originally enacted in 1863 because of reports of widespread corruption and fraud in the sale of supplies and provisions to the Union Government during the Civil War. Unfortunately, fraud is still prevalent today. While fraud has become more sophisticated, the law through which the Government prosecutes fraud and recoups its losses has not followed the same pattern. This law has remained largely unchanged since it was enacted in 1863.

H.R. 4827 updates and clarifies the current law, by defining terms which previously were not defined in the False Claims Act. For example, this statute has never defined the term "claim." Because of this lack of a definition, court interpretations of what constitutes a claim under this statute have varied.

This bill increases the civil penalties for filing a false claim, expands the qui tam or citizen suit provisions of the law and provides the Government with the power to issue civil investigative demands [CID's].

These amendments to the False Claims Act are long overdue. This statute has existed for 123 years but is out of date and no longer an effective tool for prosecution of civil fraud cases. Passage of H.R. 4827, as amended, will make this 123-year-old statute a more effective tool for prosecution of these cases. It will also provide the Government with a more effective tool for the recovery of the dollar losses suffered through fraud.

I particularly wish to commend the gentleman from Kansas and the other members of the Judiciary Committee for accomplishing the task of reaching a compromise acceptable to everyone while maintaining the goal of this legislation.

I urge my colleagues to pass this important legislation.

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman of our committee.

Mr. Speaker, before I yield time to the gentleman from California [Mr. BERMAN], I would like to pay a special tribute to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. IRELAND], who has been intimately involved with the qui tam provisions, and that is the part that the gentleman from California [Mr. BERMAN] has been most responsible for. I want to point out that there has been a genuine bipartisan effort in this bill to try to root out and effectively enhance the enforcement of fraud against the Government, and so I think the record ought to reflect that at least with respect to this particular issue we have had genuine bipartisan support.

So now, Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to my colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. BERMAN], who basically spearheaded the qui tam provisions of this bill.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 4827, the False Claims Amendments Act of 1986.

I want in particular to thank the chairman of our subcommittee, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GLICKMAN] for his kind words, and, more importantly, for his leadership in bringing before this body the outstanding bill we are considering today. In a few short months, he has established himself as the House leader on this issue, and has brought this important legislation to the point where it now has an excellent chance of enactment.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to second the gentleman's comments with respect to our friend and colleague, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. IRELAND], as well as our colleague, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BEDELL]. Long before this speaker had ever heard of this legislation and this issue, these gentlemen were legislating and pushing in this area, and without their help I am sure we would not be where we are today.

I do not know if it is comforting or not to realize that many of our contemporary problems were shared by our forebearers over a century ago. But it is indeed the case that in the 1860's, President Abraham Lincoln felt obliged to call upon Congress to pass the False Claims Act, in order to crack down on defense contractor fraud.

Instances were uncovered of defense contractors who resold the same horses two and three times to the Union cavalry, and who were paid for muskets but provided boxes of sawdust. There is billions of dollars difference between that fraud and the defense contractor fraud found in our headlines today, but the principle is the same: The U.S. taxpayers are being bilked, and we need all the resources we can obtain to address the problem.

Unfortunately, over the years changes were made in the Abraham Lincoln law which undermined its effectiveness. That is why I joined my colleagues BERKLEY BEDELL and ANDY IRELAND in introducing a false claims amendments bill last year, and why I am so pleased to support the bill before the House today.

I am particularly pleased with the qui tam or citizens suit provisions in the bill. These provisions improve the incentives for citizens with knowledge of fraudulent claims against the Federal Government to go public with the information, and afford such whistleblowers protection against retaliation by their employers.

In particular, H.R. 4827:

Protects plaintiffs and witnesses from being fired, harassed, suspended or demoted.

Allows the plaintiff in a qui tam suit to maintain his or her involvement in the suit even if the United States enters the case, to ensure that the case is effectively prosecuted on its merits.

Prevents a suit from being dismissed on the Government's assertion that it already had the information brought forward by the plaintiff, to ensure that the Government is indeed acting on the information; and Provides guarantees of adequate monetary awards and attorneys fees for plaintiffs.

Except where an action is based completely on information already known to the Government, the qui tam plaintiff is entitled to at least 15 percent, but not more than 25 percent of the proceeds of the action or settlement, depending on his or her contribution to the prosecution of the action. This guaranteed minimum is a critical incentive and reward for persons who come forward with information, putting themselves at risk on behalf of the Federal Treasury and American taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, I want to point out that under H.R. 4827, liability for false claims attaches to a person who has actual knowledge of the falsity of a claim, acts in deliberate ignorance of its truth or falsity, or acts in reckless disregard of its truth or falsity. Given the sorry record of hundreds of millions of dollars in fraudulent claims by Federal contractors, persons and entities doing business with the Government must be made to understand that they have an affirmative obligation to ascertain the truthfulness of the claims they submit. No longer will Federal contractors be able to bury their heads in the sand to insulate themselves from the knowledge a prudent person should have before submitting a claim to the Government. Contractors who ignore or fail to inquire about red flags that should alert them to the fact that false claims are being submitted will be liable for those false claims.

H.R. 4827 contains provisions strengthening the Government's hand in prosecuting false claims cases. And in light of Gramm-Rudman and a newfound reliance on private citizens to help right wrongs, the qui tam provisions of the bill are a critically needed supplement—and prod—to Government prosecution. Frankly, whether as a result of a lack of resources or worse, the Department of Justice has not done an acceptable job of prosecuting defense contractor fraud. I look to H.R. 4827 as a critical incentive to self-policing by Government contractors and, barring that, to effective prosecution of false claims.

I note the support for this bill of thousands of business executives and entrepreneurs from large and small businesses across America who belong to Business Executives for National Security [BENS].

And I am particularly delighted to cite the substantial contribution of John Phillips, director of the Center for Law in the Public Interest, based in Los Angeles. John is one of the most knowledgeable people in the country about how the present False Claims Act works—or fails to work. His interest in this issue arose when his office received anonymous calls from potential whistleblowers in defense plants who were aware of illegal practices, but were not sure what they should do with the information. They were fearful that if they went to the Government or their employers with the information, at best nothing would be done, and at worst, they would be fired. The center's research has been instrumental in pointing out the weaknesses of present law, and the need for the bill we have before us today.

Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that only those who cheat the U.S. Government have anything to fear from H.R. 4827. As members of BENS have noted, "the size of our deficit warrants all reasonable congressional actions to recoup the billions of dollars leaking out of the system through fraud." H.R. 4827 is sound, urgently needed legislation, and I urge its adoption.

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I would just conclude by saying that the other body has passed a comparable bill under the leadership of the senior Senator from Iowa. It is indeed possible that this could become law this year.

Mr. BEDELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 4827, the False Claims Act Amendments of 1986. As an original cosponsor of legislation sponsored by Congressman ANDY IRELAND to restore the qui tam, or informer, provisions of the civil False Claims Act to their original strength, I am pleased that the bill before us today embodies much of our original bill.

Congressman ANDY IRELAND first introduced legislation in 1983 to restore the Lincoln qui tam law to its original strength. In the 99th Congress, Congressman HOWARD BERMAN of the Judiciary Committee assisted in drafting a superior version of the 1983 bill that contained several new elements. Finally, Congressman DAN GLICKMAN provided the leadership as chairman of the House Judiciary Subcommittee on Administrative Law by holding hearings and bringing a compromise version to the attention of the full House today.

The world's second oldest profession, some say, is stealing from the public purse. More than 100 years ago, during the Civil War, President Abraham Lincoln became so frustrated with Government fraud and the failure of his Justice Department to deal with the problem that he pushed Congress to enact the qui tam, or informer, provisions in the False Claims Act. Lincoln fought fraud against the Government by offering persons who knew of fraud a portion of damages recovered by the Government when those persons provided their evidence to the Government or when they brought suit themselves for the Government.

Lincoln's original qui tam law remained in force until 1943, when defense contractors became concerned that it may be used more frequently, and persuaded the Attorney General to push through Congress a qui tam revision that vested almost all discretion with the Justice Department. The one legitimate objection raised at the time was that the qui tam law might encourage parasitic suits by people who really had no original information to share.

What is wrong with current law as enacted in 1943? First, when a citizen files a suit alleging fraud, the Government can decide to take over the case and then sit on it or seek to have it dismissed. Testimony before the House Judiciary Committee this year demonstrates that the current administration may have done exactly that in the Gravitt case. H.R. 4827 prevents this by establishing that the citizen who originally brought the suit may intervene to ensure diligent prosecution even after the Government has taken over the case.

Another problem with current law is that, if the Government decides not to proceed with an action, the court can still dismiss an action brought by a private citizen if the case is based upon "evidence or information the Government had when the action was brought." Clearly, there may be many cases where evidence is somewhere in the hands of some Government official, even if the Government does not have the evidence in organized form or even knows it has the information. H.R. 4827 allows the court to dismiss a citizen's action brought upon evidence previously disclosed under certain circumstances, but also provides that the court shall permit the suit if the Government was aware of the information for 6 months and took no action. This addresses the legitimate concern about parasitic suits.

Third, under current law a citizen who risks bringing suit cannot be sure of receiving any portion of damages recovered, and has few legal protections against the crudest forms of reprisals through loss of employment, et cetera. H.R. 4827 establishes specific minimum and maximum percentages of damages that citizens shall receive depending on their contribution to a successful case. In addition, the bill provides "whistleblower protections" to qui tam plaintiffs who suffer reprisals.

At a more fundamental level, some people may question whether it is right for the Government to encourage informers and to give them standing to bring suit in court on behalf of the Government. But during my years in Congress, people have told me that they have reported fraud to the proper authorities but that no one seemed interested and nothing was done. Even if the authorities are interested, they are overwhelmed by work already. Also, in many cases, the authorities will not prosecute for political reasons. In my opinion, citizen informer suits will bring more fraud to light, recover more damages for the taxpayers, and ultimately prevent much fraud by creating a far less cavalier attitute toward stealing from the public purse.

I think that my experiences cause me to have a generally balanced approach to this issue. During the last Congress, my Small Business Subcommittee was very involved in the passage of two Federal procurement reform laws, the Procurement Reform Act of 1984 (Public Law 98–525) and the Small Business and Federal Procurement Competition Enhancement Act of the 1984 (Public Law 98–577). I believe that these and more recent laws go a long way toward improving the procurement process. However, my experience tells me that we cannot legislate common sense or integrity, and that, as in Abe Lincoln's time, the Justice Department has neither the political will nor the resources to always enforce the all of the laws. We need some mechanism that uses informer suits.

However, I am also a small businessman, and I understand the dangers involved. We must be careful not to add to the legal burdens of the vast majority of honest business persons who give the Government the best product they can at the best price. I am pleased to note that H.R. 4827 provides that a defendant can receive expenses and lawyers' fees from the plaintiff if the court finds that a suit is clearly vexacious, frivolous or brought solely for purposes for harassment. Second, H.R. 4827 provides that a civil False Claims Act suit may not be brought by the Government in order to intimidate a small business out of filing a good faith action against the Government under the Contract Disputes Act of 1978.

While I believe that the bill is as balanced as possible, it will be important for Congress to oversee its implementation closely to ensure that this balanced congressional intent is respected.

I urge the House to pass this bill today and the Congress to quickly agree on legislation for the President's signature.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I am in strong support of the False Claims Amendments Act. My colleague from Kansas and the rest of the Judiciary Committee are to be commended for bringing to the floor a bill that serves notice that the Federal Government will no longer be an easy mark for would-be cheats and frauds.

H.R. 4827 wisely and judiciously reforms the incentives facing Government contractors and employees to discourage strongly the temptation to defraud and to encourage those who see or suspect fraud to report it to the Government. It also improves the procedures under which fraud cases are handled to facilitate prosecution. The deletion of the military exemption will allow the Government to recoup losses suffered from fraud in military contracts; and the improvements in whistleblower protections are among the strongest parts of the bill.

One section that I am particularly happy to support is the qui tam provision, which allows a private citizen to sue on behalf of the Government and to share in the award if the action is successful. This section goes a long way toward restoring teeth to a law that was basically defanged in 1943 and rendered useless. I believe it is good policy to encourage citizens to help ensure that their tax dollars are spent well and to pressure the Government to follow through on cases raised by those citizens. I am very pleased to see something that I have worked on with Mr. BERMAN and other Members for nearly 2 years finally realized.

While the False Claims Amendments Act does accomplish many positive things, I don't believe we should stop here. In the next Congress I would like to see the committee return to this area to develop a framework providing for an administrative remedy to certain small-dollar cases and to further refine and strengthen the qui tam provisions. The citizens of this country do not mind paying taxes if they think that all are paying their fair share and that their money is not being wasted. The tax reform bill which will come to the floor soon brings more fairness to the revenue side; I believe that H.R. 4827 will improve confidence in the expenditure side.

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GLICKMAN] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4827, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from further consideration of the Senate bill (S. 1562) to amend the False Claims Act, and title 18 of the United State Code regarding penalties for false claims, and for other purposes, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the requst of the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. BROWN of Colorado. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would reserve the right to object for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Kansas to explain the measure, and I yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is my intention to take up the Senate companion bill and engage in the normal legislative action, which is to strike the language of S. 1562 and insert the House-passed text which we just passed today and send it back to the other body.

Mr. BROWN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman, and I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

S. 1562

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 3729 of title 31, United States Code, is amended by—

(1) inserting "(a)" before "A person";

(2) striking out "$2,000," and inserting in lieu thereof "$10,000, unless the court finds:

"(A) the defendant furnished officials of the United States responsible for investigating false claims violations with all information known to such defendant about such violation within 30 days after the date on which the defendant first obtained the information;

"(B) the defendant fully cooperated with any Government investigation of such violation; and

"(C) at the time the defendant furnished the United States with the information about the violation, no criminal prosecution, civil action, or administrative action had commenced under this title, with respect to such violation, and the defendant did not have actual knowledge of the existence of an investigation into such violation; in which case the court may assess not less than $5,000, or unless the court finds that the defendant is a partnership, corporation, association, or organization, the annual gross receipts of which did not exceed $1,000,000 at the time the action was brought, and which had not more than 80 employees at the time the action was brought, and the court finds the assessment of $10,000 will result in substantial hardship under the circumstances for the defendant, in which case the court may assess not less than $5,000;

(3) striking out "2 times the amount of damages" and inserting in lieu thereof "3 times the amount of damages unless the court finds the provisions of paragraphs (A) through (C), in which case the court may assess not less than 2 times the amount of damages, in addition to the amount of the consequential damages";

(4) striking out "not a member of the armed forces of the United States" the first place it appears;

(5) striking out "or" at the end of clause (5);

(6) striking out the period in clause (6) and inserting in lieu thereof "; or"; and

(7) adding at the end thereof the following:

"(7) knowingly makes, uses, or causes to be made or used, a false record or statement to conceal, avoid, or decrease an obligation to pay or transmit money or property to the Government.

"(b) Consequential damages as used in subsection (a) shall include damages which the United States would not have sustained but for—

"(1) the doing or commission of any of the acts prohibited by subsection (a); or

"(2) having entered into or made any contract or grant as a result of any material part of any false statement, and which were reasonably foreseeable to the defendant at the time the alleged fraud was committed or at the time of the submission of the claim or statement.

"(c) For purposes of this section, the terms 'knowing' and 'knowingly' mean the defendant—

"(1) had actual knowledge;

"(2) acted in deliberate ignorance of the truth or falsity of the information; or

"(3) acted in reckless disregard of the truth or falsity of the information; and no proof of specific intent to defraud is required.

"(d) For purposes of this section, 'claim' includes any request or demand whether under a contract or otherwise for money or property which is made to a contractor, grantee, or other recipient if the Government provides any portion of the money or property which is requested or demanded or if the Government will reimburse such contractor, grantee, or other recipient for any portion of the money or property which is requested or demanded.

"(e)(1) The Attorney General or his designee may apply for provisional relief to any district court having jurisdiction pursuant to section 3732 whenever he has reasonable cause to believe this section or section 3730, or 3731 may have been violated. If the court finds there is a reasonable likelihood that the United States will prevail after trial on the merits of its claims, the court shall enjoin the defendant from taking any action which the court, in the exercise of its discretion, finds reasonably likely to hinder or delay the United States in the collection of any judgment which may be obtained in such action.

"(2) In addition, the court may from time to time make such other orders as it deems appropriate, including requiring the defendant to post security for judgment, to seek the prior approval of the court before making any transfer without adequate and full consideration, paying an antecedent debt which has matured more than thirty days prior to the date of payment, or otherwise engaging in any transaction not in the usual and regular course of the defendant's business. Except as provided in this section, such application and proceedings by the Attorney General shall be governed by Rule 65 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

"(f) Any information furnished pursuant to clauses (A) through (C) of subsection (a) shall be exempt from disclosure under section 552 of title 5.".

SEC. 2. Section 3730 of title 31, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 3730. Civil actions for false claims

"(a) The Attorney General diligently shall investigate a violation under section 3729 of this title. If the Attorney General finds that a person has violated or is violating section 3729, the Attorney General may bring a civil action under this section against the person.

"(b)(1) Except as provided in subsection (e), a person may bring a civil action for a violation of section 3729 of this title for the person and for the United States Government. The action shall be brought in the name of the Government. An action may be dismissed only if the court and the Attorney General give written consent and their reasons for consenting.

"(2) A copy of the complaint and written disclosure of substantially all material evidence and information the person possesses shall be served on the Government under Rule 4(d)(4) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The complaint shall be filed in camera, shall remain under seal for at least 60 days, and shall not be served on the defendant until the court so orders. The Government may elect to intervene and proceed with the action within 60 days after it receives both the complaint and the material evidence.

"(3) The Government may, for good cause shown, move the court for stays and for extensions of the time during which the complaint shall remain under seal. Any such motions may be supported by affidavits or other submissions in camera. The defendant shall not be required to respond to any complaint filed under this section until 20 days after the complaint is unsealed and served upon him pursuant to Rule 4 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

"(4) Before the expiration of the initial 60-day period or any stays obtained, the Government shall—

"(A) proceed with the action, in which case the action shall be conducted only by the Government; or

"(B) notify the court that it declines to take over the action, in which case the action shall be conducted by the person bringing the action.

"(5) Where a person brings an action under this subsection, no person other than the Government may intervene or bring a related action based on the facts underlying the pending action.

"(c)(1) If the Government proceeds with the action, the action is conducted solely by the Government and it shall not be bound by an act of the person who initiated the action. If he so requests, the person bringing the action shall be served with copies of all pleadings filed in the action, shall be supplied with copies of all deposition transcripts (at his expense), and shall be permitted to file objections with the court and petition for an evidentiary hearing to object to any proposed settlement or to any motion to dismiss filed by the Government. The court may grant such an evidentiary hearing only upon a showing of substantial and particularized need. The person bringing the action may move the court for leave to conduct the action in the name of the United States if, after making its election to take over the suit, the Government does not proceed with the action with reasonable diligence within six months or such reasonable additional time as the court may allow after notice.

"(2) If the Government elects not to proceed with the action, the action shall be conducted by the person who initiated the action. If the Government so requests, it shall be served with copies of all pleadings filed in the action and shall be supplied with copies of all deposition transcripts (at its expense). Where a person proceeds with the action in the name of the United States pursuant to subsection (b), the court may nevertheless permit the Government to intervene and proceed with the action by its own attorneys at a later date upon a showing of good cause.

"(3) Notwithstanding subsection (b), the Government may elect to pursue its claim through any alternate remedy available to it, including, but not limited to, any administrative civil money penalty proceeding.

"(d)(1) If the Government proceeds with the action, including any proceeding pursuant to subsection (c)(3), the person bringing the action may receive an amount the court decides is reasonable. The amount may not be less than 10 percent, nor more than 20 percent, of the proceeds of the action or settlement of a claim and shall be paid out of those proceeds.

"(2) If the Government does not proceed with an action, the person bringing the action or settling the claim may receive an amount the court decides is reasonable for collecting the civil penalty and damages. The amount may not be less than 20 percent, nor more than 30 percent, of the proceeds of the action or settlement and shall be paid out of those proceeds.

"(3) The amount awarded under this section shall be in the discretion of the court, taking into account—

"(A) the significance of the information provided to the Government;

"(B) the contribution of the person bringing the action to the result obtained; and

"(C) whether the information which formed the basis for the suit was known to the Government.

"(4) Where the persons brought an action based primarily on disclosures of specific information relating to allegations or transactions in a criminal, civil, or administrative hearing, a congressional or Government Accounting Office report or hearing, or from the news media, the court may award such sums as it deems appropriate, not to exceed 10 percent of the recovery and taking into account the significance of the information and the role of the person in advancing the case to litigation.

"(5) In addition to any other amounts awarded by the court, the court may also award the person bringing the action reasonable attorney fees and other expenses. The Government shall not be liable for the expenses or legal fees a person incurs in bringing or defending an action under this section.

"(6) If the Government does not proceed with the action and it is litigated by the person bringing the action, the court shall award to the defendant its reasonable attorney fees and expenses if the defendant prevails in such action and the court finds that the claim of the person bringing the action was clearly frivolous, vexatious, or brought for purposes of harassment. In cases where it appears that the person is bringing an action which is frivolous, vexatious, or brought for purposes of harassment, the court shall require such assurances that payment of legal fees and expenses will be made, if such are awarded, as it deems appropriate before allowing the action to proceed.

"(7) After any final judgment is issued in any action brought under this section, or any alternate remedy available to the Government, any person who brought an action under subsection (b) shall have 60 days to petition the court for any award to which he is entitled under this section.

"(e)(1) No court shall have jurisdiction over an action brought by a former or present member of the armed services under subsection (b) of this section against a member of the armed forces arising out of such person's service in the armed forces.

"(2) No court shall have jurisdiction over an action brought against a member of Congress, a member of the judiciary, or a senior executive branch official if the action is based on evidence or information known to the Government when the action was brought.

"(3) For purposes of this subsection, 'senior executive branch official' means those officials listed in section 201(f) of Appendix IV of title 5.

"(4) In no event may a person bring an action under this section based upon allegations or transactions which are the subject of a civil suit or an administrative civil money penalty proceeding in which the Government is already a party.

"(5)(A) No court shall have jurisdiction over an action under this section based upon the public disclosure of allegations or transactions in a criminal, civil, or administrative hearing, a congressional, administrative, or Government Accounting Office report, hearing, audit or investigation, or from the news media, unless the action is brought by the Attorney General or the person bringing the action is an original source of the information.

"(B) For purposes of this paragraph, 'original source' means an individual who has direct and independent knowledge of the information on which the allegations are based and has voluntarily informed the Government or the news media prior to an action filed by the Government.

"(f) The district courts shall have jurisdiction over any action brought under State law for the recovery of funds paid by State or local governments where such action grows out of the same transaction or occurrence as an action brought under this section.

"(g) The Attorney General or his designee is authorized to make payments from Department of Justice appropriations for information or assistance leading to a civil or criminal recovery under this section, section 3729, or sections 3731 through 3734, known as the False Claims Act or under section 286, 287, or 1001 of title 18. Any such payment shall be at the discretion of the Attorney General or his designee.

"(h) In civil actions brought under this section by the United States, the provisions of section 2412(d) of title 28 shall apply.

SEC. 3. Section 3731 of title 31, United States Code, is amended by—

(1) inserting before the period at the end of subsection (b) the following: "or within three years after the date when facts material to the right of action are known or reasonably should have been known by the official of the United States charged with responsibility to act in the circumstances, whichever occurs last"; and

(2) inserting after subsection (b), the following new subsections:

"(c) In any action brought under this section or section 3729, 3730, 3732, or 3733, the United States shall be required to prove all essential elements of the cause of action, including damages, by a preponderance of the evidence.

"(d) Notwithstanding any contrary provision of law, the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, or the Federal Rules of Evidence, a final judgment rendered in favor of the United States in any criminal proceeding charging fraud or false statements, whether upon a verdict after trial or upon a plea of guilty or nolo contendere, shall estop the defendant from denying the essential elements of the offense in any action brought by the United States pursuant to this section or section 3729, 3730, 3732, or 3733.".

SEC. 4. Subchapter III of chapter 37 of title 31, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"§ 3732. False claims jurisdiction

"(a) The district courts of the United States, including such courts for Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, and any territory or possession of the United States, shall have jurisdiction over any action commenced by the United States under this section, or under section 3729, 3730, 3731, 3733, or 3734. Venue of any such action shall be proper in any district in which any defendant, or in the case of multiple defendants, any one defendant can be found, resides, transacts business, or in which any act prescribed by such sections is alleged by the United States to have occurred. A summons as required by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure shall be issued by the district court and served at any place within the United States, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, any territory or possession of the United States, or in any foreign country.

"(b) The United States Claims Court shall also have jurisdiction of any such action if the action is asserted by way of counterclaim by the United States. The United States may join as additional parties in such counterclaim all persons who may be jointly and severally liable with such party against whom a counterclaim is asserted by reason of having violated this section, or section 3729, 3730, 3731, or 3733, except that no cross-claims or third-party claims shall be asserted among such additional parties unless such claims are otherwise within the jurisdiction of the United States Claims Court.".

SEC. 5. Subchapter III of chapter 37 of the title 31, United States Code is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"§ 3733. Civil investigative demands

"(a) For purposes of this section, the term—

"(1) 'False Claims Act law' means—

"(A) this section and sections 3729 through 3731 of this title, commonly known as the False Claims Act; and

"(B) any Act of Congress enacted after this section which prohibits, or makes available to the United States in any court of the United States any civil remedy with respect to any false claim, bribery, or corruption of any officer or employee of the United States;

"(2) 'False Claims Act investigation' means any inquiry conducted by any False Claims Act investigator for the purpose of ascertaining whether any person is or has been engaged in any violation of any provision of the False Claims Act law;

"(3) 'False Claims Act investigator' means any attorney or investigator employed by the Department of Justice who is charged with the duty of enforcing or carrying into effect any False Claims Act law or any officer or employee of the United States acting under direction and supervision of such attorney or investigator in connection with a False Claims Act investigation;

"(4) 'person' means any natural person, partnership, corporation, association, or other legal entity, including any State or political subdivision;

"(5) 'documentary material' includes the original or any copy of any book, record, report, memorandum, paper, communication, tabulation, chart, or other document, or data compilations stored in or accessible through computer or other information retrieval systems, together with instructions and all other materials necessary to use or interpret such data compilations, and any product or discovery;

"(6) 'custodian' means the custodian, or any deputy custodian, designated by the Attorney General; and

"(7) 'product of discovery' includes without limitation the original or duplicate of any deposition, interrogatory, document, thing, result of an inspection of land or other property, examination, or admission obtained by any method of discovery in any judicial or administrative litigation or action of an adversarial nature, any digest, analysis, selection, compilation, or any derivation thereof, and any index or manner of access thereto.

"(b)(1)(A) Whenever the Attorney General has reason to believe that any person may be in possession, custody, or control of any documentary material, or may have any information relevant, and not otherwise reasonably available, to a False Claims Act investigation, he may, prior to the institution of a civil proceeding, issue in writing and cause to be served upon such person, a civil investigative demand requiring such person to produce such documentary material for inspection and copying, to answer in writing written interrogatories, to give oral testimony concerning documentary material or information, or to furnish any combination of such material, answers, or testimony. Whenever a civil investigative demand is an express demand for any product of discovery, the Attorney General shall cause to be served, in any manner authorized by this section, a copy of such demand upon the person from whom the discovery was obtained and notify the person to whom such demand is issued of the date on which such copy was served.

"(B) Notwithstanding the provisions of section 510 of title 28, the Attorney General may not authorize the performance of any function of the Attorney General vested in him pursuant to this paragraph, by any other officer, employee, or agency.

"(2)(A) Each such demand shall state the nature of the conduct constituting the alleged violation of a False Claims Act law which is under investigation, and the applicable provision of law.

"(B) If such demand is for production of documentary material, the demand shall—

"(i) describe each class of documentary material to be produced with such definiteness and certainty as to permit such material to be fairly identified;

"(ii) prescribe a return date for each such class which will provide a reasonable period of time within which the material so demanded may be assembled and made available for inspection, and copying; and

"(iii) identify the False Claims Act investigator to whom such material shall be made available.

"(C) If such demand is for answers to written interrogatories, the demand shall—

"(i) set forth with definiteness and certainty the written interrogatories to be answered;

"(ii) prescribe dates at which time answers to written interrogatories shall be submitted; and

"(iii) identify the False Claims Act investigator to whom such answers shall be submitted.

"(D) If such demand is for the giving of oral testimony, the demand shall—

"(i) prescribe a date, time, and place at which oral testimony shall be commenced;

"(ii) identify a False Claims Act investigator who shall conduct the examination and the custodian to whom the transcript of such examination shall be submitted;

"(iii) specify that such attendance and testimony are necessary to the conduct of the investigation;

"(iv) notify the person receiving the subpoena of the right to be accompanied by an attorney and any other representative; and

"(v) describe the general purpose for which the subpoena is being issued and the general nature of the testimony, including the primary areas of inquiry, which will be taken pursuant to the subpoena.

Any such demand which is an express demand for any product of discovery shall not be returned or returnable until twenty days after a copy of such demand has been served upon the person from whom the discovery was obtained.

"(E) The date prescribed for the commencement of oral testimony pursuant to a civil investigation demand issued under this section shall be a date which is not less than seven days after the date on which demand is received, unless the Attorney General or an Assistant Attorney General designated by the Attorney General determines that exceptional circumstance are present which warrant the commencement of such testimony within a lessor period of time.

"(F) Any official before whom oral testimony under this section is to be taken shall exclude from the place where the testimony is to be taken all persons except the person giving the testimony, the attorney and any other representative for the person giving the testimony, the attorney for the Government, any person who may be agreed upon by the attorney for the Government, and the person giving the testimony, and any stenographer taking such testimony.

"(G) The Attorney General shall not authorize a second demand for oral testimony to a person unless such person requests otherwise or unless the Attorney General, after investigation, notifies that person in writing that an additional demand for oral testimony is necessary. The Attorney General may not authorize the performance of any function vested in him under this subparagraph, by any other officer, employee, or agency, notwithstanding section 510 of title 28.".

"(c)(1) No such demand shall require the production of any documentary material, the submission of any answers to written interrogatories, or the giving of any oral testimony if such material, answers, or testimony would be protected from disclosure under—

"(A) the standards applicable to subpoenas or subpoenas duces tecum issued by a court of the United States to aid in a grand jury investigation; or

"(B) the standards applicable to discovery requests under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, to the extent that the application of such standards to any such demand is appropriate and consistent with the provisions and purposes of this section and sections 3729 through 3731.

"(2) Any such demand which is an express demand for any product of discovery supersedes any inconsistent order, rule, or provision of law (other than this section) preventing or restraining disclosure of such product of discovery to any person. Disclosure of any product of discovery pursuant to any such express demand does not constitute a waiver of any right or privilege which may be invoked to resist discovery of trial preparation materials to which the person making such disclosure may be entitled.

"(d)(1) Any such demand may be served by any False Claims Act investigator, or by any United States Marshal or Deputy Marshal, at any place within the United States.

"(2) Any such demand or any petition filed under subsection (k) may be served upon any person who is not found within the United States, in such manner as the Federal Rules of Civil Procedures prescribe for service in a foreign country. To the extent that the courts of the United States can assert jurisdiction over such person consistent with due process, the United States District Court for the District of Columbia shall have the same jurisdiction to take any action respecting compliance with this section by such person that such court would have if such person were personally within the jurisdiction of such court.

"(e)(1) Service of any such demand or of any petition filed under subsection (k) may be made upon a partnership, corporation, association, or other legal entity by—

"(A) delivering an executed copy thereof to any partner, executive officer, managing agent, or general agent thereof, or to any agent thereof authorized by appointment or by law to receive service of process on behalf of such partnership, corporation, association, or entity;

"(B) delivering an executed copy thereof to the principal office or place of business of the partnership, corporation, or entity to be served; or

"(C) depositing such copy in the United States mails, by registered or certified mail, return receipt requested, addressed to such partnership, corporation, association, or entity at its principal office or place of business.

"(2) Service of any such demand or of any petition filed under subsection (k) may be made upon any natural person by—

"(A) delivering an executed copy thereof to the person to be served; or

"(B) depositing such copy in the United States mails by registered or certified mail, return receipt requested, addressed to such person at his residence or principal office or place of business.

"(f) A verified return by the individual serving any such demand or petition setting forth the manner of such service shall be proof of such service. In the case of service by registered or certified mail, such return shall be accompanied by the return post office receipt of delivery of such demand.

"(g) The production of documentary material in response to a demand served pursuant to this section shall be made under a sworn certificate, in such form as the demand designates, by the person, if a natural person, to whom the demand is directed or, if not a natural person, by a person having knowledge of the facts and circumstances relating to such production and authorized to act on behalf of such person. The certificate shall state that all of the documentary material required by the demand and in the possession, custody, or control of the person to whom the demand is directed has been produced and made available to the custodian.

"(h) Each interrogatory in a demand served pursuant to this section shall be answered separately and fully in writing under oath unless it is objected to, in which event the reasons for the objection shall be stated in lieu of any answer, and it shall be submitted under a sworn certificate, in such form as the demand designates, by the person, if a natural person, to whom the demand is directed or, if not a natural person, by a person or persons responsible for answering each interrogatory. The certificate shall state that all information required by the demand and in the possession, custody, control, or knowledge of the person to whom the demand is directed has been submitted. To the extent that any materials are not furnished, they shall be identified and reasons set forth with particularity for each.

"(i)(1) The examination of any person pursuant to a demand for oral testimony served under this section shall be taken before an officer authorized to administer oaths and affirmations by the laws of the United States or of the place where the examination is held. The officer before whom the testimony is to be taken shall put the witness on oath or affirmation and shall personally, or by someone acting under his direction and in his presence, record the testimony of the witness. The testimony shall be taken stenographically and transcribed. When the testimony is fully transcribed, the officer before whom the testimony is taken shall promptly transmit a copy of the transcript of the testimony to the custodian. This subsection shall not preclude the taking of testimony by any means authorized by, and in a manner consistent with, the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

"(2) The False Claims Act investigator conducting the examination shall exclude from the place where the examination is held all other persons except the person being examined, his counsel, the officer before whom the testimony is to be taken, and any other stenographer taking such testimony.

"(3) The oral testimony of any person taken pursuant to a demand served under this section shall be taken in the judicial district of the United States within which such person resides, is found, or transacts business, or in such other place as may be agreed upon by the False Claims Act investigator conducting the examination and such person.

"(4) When the testimony is fully transcribed, the False Claims Act investigator or the officer shall afford the witness, who may be accompanied by counsel, a reasonable opportunity to examine the transcript and the transcript shall be read to or by the witness, unless such examination and reading are waived by the witness. Any changes in form or substance which the witness desires to make shall be entered and identified upon the transcript by the officer or the False Claims Act investigator with a statement of the reasons given by the witness for making such changes. The transcript shall then be signed by the witness, unless the witness in writing waives the signing, is ill, cannot be found, or refuses to sign. If the transcript is not signed by the witness within thirty days after his being afforded a reasonable opportunity to examine it, the officer or the False Claims Act investigator shall sign it and state on the record the fact of the waiver, illness, absence of the witness, or the refusal to sign, together with the reason, if any, given therefor. A refusal to sign or an unreasonable absence shall be deemed to be an acknowledgment of its accuracy and an affirmation of its contents.

"(5) The officer shall certify on the transcript that the witness was sworn in by him and that the transcript is a true record of the testimony given by the witness, and the officer or False Claims Act investigator shall promptly deliver it or send it by registered or certified mail to the custodian.

"(6) Upon payment of reasonable charges therefor, the False Claims Act investigator shall furnish a copy of the transcript to the witness only, except that the Attorney General, the Deputy Attorney General, or an Assistant Attorney General may, for good cause, limit such witness to inspection of the official transcript of his testimony.

"(7)(A) Any person compelled to appear under a demand for oral testimony pursuant to this section may be accompanied, represented, and advised by counsel. Counsel may advise such person, in confidence, with respect to any question asked of such person. Such person or counsel may object on the record to any question, in whole or in part, and shall briefly state for the record the reason for the objection. An objection may be properly made, received, and entered upon the record when it is claimed that such person is entitled to refuse to answer the question on grounds of any constitutional or other legal right or privilege, including the privilege against self-incrimination. Such person shall not otherwise object to or refuse to answer any question, and shall not by himself or through counsel otherwise interrupt the oral examination. If such person refuses to answer any question, the False Claims Act investigator conducting the examination may petition the district court of the United States pursuant to subsection (k)(1) for an order compelling such person to answer such question.

"(B) If such person refuses to answer any question on the grounds of the privilege against self-incrimination, the testimony of such person may be compelled in accordance with the provisions of part V of title 18.

"(8) Any person appearing for oral examination pursuant to a demand served under this section shall be entitled to the same fees and mileage which are paid to witnesses in the district courts of the United States.

"(j)(1) The Attorney General, or his authorized designee shall designate a False Claims Act investigator to serve as custodian of documentary material, answers to interrogatories, and transcripts of oral testimony received under this section, and shall designate such additional False Claims Act investigators as he determines from time to time to be necessary to serve as deputies to such officer.

"(2) Any person upon whom any demand under subsection (b)(1) for the production of documentary material has been served shall make such material available for inspection and copying to the False Claims Act investigator designated therein at the principal place of business of such person, or at such other place as such False Claims Act investigator and such person thereafter may agree and prescribe in writing, or as the court may direct pursuant to subsection (k)(1) on the return date specified in such demand, or on such later date as such custodian may prescribe in writing. Such person may, upon written agreement between such person and the custodian, substitute copies for originals of all or any part of such material.

"(3)(A) The False Claims Act investigator to whom any documentary material, answers to interrogatories, or transcripts of oral testimony are delivered shall take physical possession thereof, and shall transmit them to the custodian who shall be responsible for the use made thereof and for the return of documentary material pursuant to this section.

"(B) The custodian may cause the preparation of such copies of such documentary material, answers to interrogatories, or transcripts of oral testimony as may be required for official use by any authorized official or employee of the Department of Justice or any authorized officer or employee of the United States acting under the direction and supervision of an attorney or investigator of the Department of Justice in connection with any False Claims Act investigation, under regulations promulgated by the Attorney General. Notwithstanding subparagraph (C) of this subsection, such material, answers, and transcripts may be used by any such person in connection with the taking of oral testimony pursuant to this section.

"(C) Except as otherwise provided in this section, while in the possession of the custodian, no documentary material, answers to interrogatories, or transcripts of oral testimony, or copies thereof, so produced shall be available for examination, without the consent of the person who produced such material, answers, or transcripts, and, in the case of any product of discovery produced pursuant to an express demand for such material, of the person from whom the discovery was obtained, by any individual other than an authorized official or employee of the Department of Justice, or an authorized officer or employee of the United States acting under the direction and supervision of an attorney or investigator of the Department of Justice in connection with any False Claims Act investigation. Nothing in this section is intended to prevent disclosure to either body of the Congress or to any authorized committee or subcommittee thereof, or to any other agency of the United States for use by such agency in furtherance of its statutory responsibilities. Disclosure to any other agency of the United States shall be allowed only upon application, made by the custodian to a United States district court, showing substantial need for use by such agency in furtherance of its statutory responsibilities.

"(D) While in the possession of the custodian and under such reasonable terms and conditions as the Attorney General shall prescribe—

"(i) documentary material and answers to interrogatories shall be available for examination by the person who produced such material or answers, or by an authorized representative of such person; and

"(ii) transcripts of oral testimony shall be available for examination by the person who produced such testimony, or his counsel.

"(4) Whenever any attorney of the Department of Justice has been designated to appear before any court, grand jury, or Federal administrative or regulatory agency in any case or proceeding, the custodian of any documentary material, answers to interrogatories, or transcripts of oral testimony may deliver to such attorney such material, answers, or transcripts for official use in connection with any such case, grand jury, or proceeding as such attorney determines to be required. Upon the completion of any such case, grand jury, or proceeding, such attorney shall return to the custodian any such material, answers, or transcripts so delivered which have not passed into the control of such court, grand jury, or agency through the introduction thereof into the record of such case or proceeding.

"(5) If any documentary material has been produced in the course of any False Claims Act investigation by any person pursuant to a demand under this section, and—

"(A) any case or proceeding before any court or grand jury arising out of such investigation, or any proceeding before any Federal administrative or regulatory agency involving such material, has been completed, or

"(B) no case or proceeding in which such material may be used has been commenced within a reasonable time after completion of the examination and analysis of all documentary material and other information assembled in the course of such investigation, the custodian shall, upon written request of the person who produced such material, return to such person any such material (other than copies thereof furnished to the custodian pursuant to paragraph (2) of this subsection or made by the Department of Justice pursuant to paragraph (3)(B) of this subsection) which has not passed into the control of any court, grand jury, or agency through the introduction thereof into the record of such case or proceedings.

"(6) In the event of the death, disability, or separation from service in the Department of Justice of the custodian of any documentary material, answers to interrogatories, or transcripts of oral testimony produced under any demand issued pursuant to this section, or of the official relief of such custodian from responsibility for the custody and control of such material, answers or transcripts, the Attorney General or his authorized designee shall promptly (A) designate another False Claims Act investigator to serve as custodian of such material, answers, or transcripts, and (B) transmit in writing to the person who produced such material, answers, or testimony notice as to the identity and address of the successor so designated. Any successor designated under this subsection shall have, with regard to such material, answers or transcripts, all duties and responsibilities imposed by this Act upon his predecessor in office with regard thereto, except that he shall not be held responsible for any default or dereliction which occurred prior to his designation.

"(k)(1) Whenever any person fails to comply with any civil investigative demand served upon him under subsection (b) or whenever satisfactory copying or reproduction of any such material cannot be done and such person refuses to surrender such material, the Attorney General, through such officers or attorneys as he may designate, may file in the district court of the United States for any judicial district in which such person resides, is found, or transacts business, and serve upon such person a petition for an order of such court for the enforcement of this section.

"(2)(A) Within twenty days after the service of any such demand upon any person, or at any time before the return date specified in the demand, whichever period is shorter, or within such period exceeding twenty days after service or in excess of such return date as may be prescribed in writing, subsequent to service, by any False Claims Act investigator named in the demand, such person may file, in the district court of the United States for the judicial district within which such person resides, is found, or transacts business, and serve upon such False Claims Act investigator a petition for an order of such court, modifying or setting aside such demand. In the case of a petition addressed to an express demand for any product of discovery, a petition to modify or set aside such demand may be brought only in the district court of the United States for the judicial district in which the proceeding in which such discovery was obtained is or was last pending.

"(B) The time allowed for compliance with the demand, in whole or in part, as deemed proper and ordered by the court shall not run during the pendency of such petition in the court, except that such person shall comply with any portions of the demand not sought to be modified or set aside. Such petition shall specify each ground upon which the petitioner relies in seeking such relief, and may be based upon any failure of such demand to comply with the provisions of this section or upon any constitutional or other legal right or privilege of such person.

"(3) Within twenty days after the service of any express demand for any product of discovery upon, or at any time before, the return date specified in the demand, whichever period is shorter, or within such period exceeding twenty days after service or in excess of such return date as may be prescribed in writing, subsequent to service, by any False Claims Act investigator named in the demand, the person from whom such discovery was obtained may file, in the district court of the United States for the judicial district in which the proceeding in which such discovery was obtained is or was last pending, and serve upon any False Claims Act investigator named in the demand and upon the recipient of the demand, a petition for an order of such court modifying or setting aside those portions of the demand requiring production of any such product of discovery. Such petition shall specify each ground upon which the petitioner relies in seeking such relief and may be based upon any failure of such portions of the demand to comply with the provisions of this section, or upon any constitutional or other legal right or privilege of the petitioner. During the pendency of such petition, the court may stay, as it deems proper, compliance with the demand and the running of the time allowed for compliance with the demand.

"(4) At any time during which any custodian is in custody or control of any documentary material, answers to interrogatories delivered, or transcripts of oral testimony given by any person in compliance with any such demand, such person, and in the case of an express demand for any product of discovery, the person from whom such discovery was obtained, may file, in the district court of the United States for the judicial district within which the office of such custodian is situated, and serve upon such custodian, a petition for an order of such court requiring the performance by such custodian of any duty imposed upon him by this section.

"(5) Whenever any petition is filed in any district court of the United States under this section, such court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the matter so presented, and to enter such order or orders as may be required to carry into effect the provisions of this section. Any final order so entered shall be subject to appeal pursuant to section 1291 of title 28. Any disobedience of any final order entered under this section by any court shall be punished as a contempt thereof.

"(6) To the extent that such rules may have application and are not inconsistent with the provisions of this section, the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure shall apply to any petition under this subsection.

"(7) Any documentary material, answers to written interrogatories, or oral testimony provided pursuant to any demand issued under this section and sections 3729 through 3731 shall be exempt from disclosure under section 552 of title 5.".

SEC. 6. (a) Subchapter III of chapter 37 of title 31, United States Code, is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"§ 3734. Whistleblower protection

"Any employee who is discharged, demoted, suspended, threatened, harassed, or in any other manner discriminated against in the terms or conditions of such employment by his employer because of the good faith exercise by such employee on behalf of himself or others of any option afforded by this Act, including investigation for, initiation of, testimony for, or assistance in an action filed or to be filed under this Act, shall be entitled to all relief necessary to make him whole. Such relief shall include reinstatement with full seniority rights, backpay with interest, and compensation for any special damages sustained as a result of the discrimination, including litigation costs and reasonable attorney fees. In addition, the employer shall be liable to such employee for twice the amount of backpay and special damages and, if appropriate under the circumstances, the court shall award punitive damages.".

(b) The table of sections for chapter 37 of title 31, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new items:

"3732. False claims jurisdiction.

"3733. Civil investigative demands.

"3734. Whistleblower protection.".

SEC. 7. (a) Section 286 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking out "$10,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$1,000,000 notwithstanding the provisions of section 3623,".

(b) Section 287 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking out "$10,000, or imprisoned not more than five years" and inserting in lieu thereof "$1,000,000, or imprisoned for not more than ten years, or both, notwithstanding the provisions of section 3623".

SEC. 8. This Act and the amendments made by this Act shall become effective upon the date of enactment.

(11) Section 701 of the Powerplant and Industrial Fuel Use Act of 1978 (42 U.S.C. 8411) is amended—

(A) in subsection (b), by striking "(other than under section 402)" and "or installation";

(B) by striking subsection (c);

(C) in the title of subsection (d), by striking "AND EXEMPTIONS";

(D) in the first sentence of subsection (d)(1), by striking "or any petition for any other granting an exemption (or permit)" and "(other than under section 402)";

(E) in subsection (d)(1)(B), by striking "or in the consideration of such petition";

(F) in subsection (f), by striking "402 or" the first place it appears, and by striking "or a petition for an exemption (or permit) under this Act (other than under section 402 or 404),"; and

(G) by striking subsection (g).

(12) Section 702 of the Powerplant and Industrial Fuel Use Act of 1978 (42 U.S.C. 8412) is amended—

(A) in the title of subsection (a), by striking "OR EXEMPTION";

(B) in subsection (a), by striking "or granting an exemption (or permit)";

(C) by striking subsection (b);

(D) in the first sentence of subsection (c)(1), by striking ", or by the denial of a petition for an order granting an exemption (or permit) referred to in subsection (b),";

(E) in the first sentence of subsection (c)(1), by striking "such rule, order, or denial is published under subsection (a) or (b)" and inserting "such rule or order is published under subsection (a)";

(F) in the first sentence of subsection (c)(2), by striking "the rule, order, or denial" and inserting "the rule or order";

(G) in the second sentence of subsection (c)(2), by striking "(or denial thereof)"; and

(H) in subsection (c)(3), by striking "any such rule, order, or denial" and inserting "any such rule or order".

(13) Section 711 of the Powerplant and Industrial Fuel Use Act of 1978 (42 U.S.C. 8421) is amended by striking in the first sentence of subsection (a), "or major fuel-burning installation".

(14) Section 721 of the Powerplant and Industrial Fuel Use Act of 1978 (42 U.S.C. 8431) is amended by striking subsection (c).

(15) Section 722 of the Powerplant and Industrial Fuel Use Act of 1978 (42 U.S.C. 8432) is amended by striking "(other than section 402)".

(16) Section 723 of the Powerplant and Industrial Fuel Use Act of 1978 (42 U.S.C. 8433) is amended—

(A) in subsection (a), by striking "(other than section 402)"; and

(B) by striking subsections (b) and (c).

(17) Section 731 of the Powerplant and Industrial Fuel Use Act of 1978 (42 U.S.C. 8441) is amended—

(A) in subsections (a)(1) and (g)(3), by striking "title II or"; and

(B) in subsection (e)(1), by striking "or major fuel-burning installation" and "or major fuel burning installation".

(18) Section 745 of the Powerplant and Industrial Fuel Use Act of 1978 (42 U.S.C. 8455) is amended by striking in the first sentence of subsection (a), "from new and existing electric powerplants and major fuel-burning installations" and inserting "from existing electric powerplants".

(19) Section 761 of the Powerplant and Industrial Fuel Use Act of 1978 (42 U.S.C. 8471) is amended—

(A) in subsection (a), by striking "any existing or new electric powerplant or major fuel-burning installation" and inserting "any existing electric powerplant"; and

(B) in subsection (b), by striking "new or" and "section 212(b) or".

(20) Section 763 of the Powerplant and Industrial Fuel Use Act of 1978 (42 U.S.C. 8473) is amended by striking "or major fuel-burning installation" each place it appears, and by striking paragraph (2)(B).

SEC. 2. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this title shall take effect on the first day of the first calendar month beginning more than ten days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

TITLE II—INCREMENTAL PRICING

SEC. 201. REPEAL OF INCREMENTAL PRICING REQUIREMENTS.

(a) REPEAL.—Title II of the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978 (15 U.S.C. 3341-3348) is repealed.

(b) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Section 121(b) of such Act (15 U.S.C. 3331(b)) is amended—

(A) by striking "Effective beginning on the effective date of the incremental pricing rule required under section 201, the" and inserting in lieu thereof "The"; and

(B) by striking "shall cease to apply" and inserting in lieu thereof "shall not apply".

(2) Section 502 of such Act (15 U.S.C. 3412) is amended by striking subsection (d).

(3) Section 504(b) of such Act (15 U.S.C. 3414(b)) is amended—

(A) by striking paragraph (3) and redesignating subsequent paragraphs accordingly;

(B) in paragraph (1), by striking "paragraphs (2) and (3)" and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraph (2)"; and

(C) in paragraph (3) (as redesignated), by striking "paragraph (1), (2), or (3)" and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraph (1) or (2)".

(4) Section 506 of such Act (15 U.S.C. 3416) is amended—

(A) in subsection (a)(1) by striking "section 504(b)(4)" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 504(b)(3)"; and

(B) by striking subsection (d).

(5) Section 507(a) of such Act (15 U.S.C. 3417(a)) is amended by inserting "and" at the end of paragraph (1), by striking "; and" at the end of paragraph (2) and inserting in lieu thereof a period, and by striking paragraph (3).

(6) Section 507(c) of such Act (15 U.S.C. 3417(c)) is amended—

(A) by striking "sections 122, 202, and 206" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 122"; and

(B) by striking paragraph (3).

(7) Section 601(c)(2) of such Act (15 U.S.C. 3431(c)(2)) is amended—

(A) by striking "—(A)" and inserting in lieu thereof a comma;

(B) by striking "and" at the end of former subparagraph (A); and

(C) by striking "(B) such recovery is not inconsistent with any requirement of any rule under section 201 (including any amendment under section 202),".

(8) The table of contents for such Act is amended by striking the items relating to title II.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The repeal and amendments made by this section shall apply—

(1) with respect to requirements made applicable under section 201 of the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978, to any costs incurred by interstate pipelines after the date of the enactment of this Act; and

(2) with respect to any requirements which may be construed to be applicable under section 202 of the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978, to any costs of an interstate pipeline, whenever incurred.

TITLE III—LNG IMPORTATION

SEC. 301. REVOCATION OF IMPORT ORDER.

In the case of facilities to which this title applies, any order issued under section 3 of the Natural Gas Act before the date of the enactment of this Act authorizing the importation of natural gas to be processed or transported by such facilities is hereby revoked.

SEC. 302. PROHIBITION OF RECOVERY OF COSTS RELATED TO LNG VOLUMES AND OCEAN TRANSPORTATION.

With respect to any volume of LNG which has been authorized for importation through facilities to which this title applies but which has not been imported, the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission shall not permit the recovery in rates by any natural-gas company of any payment made or amount awarded with respect to such LNG volumes or the ocean transportation thereof.

SEC. 303. PROHIBITION OF RECOVERY OF COSTS RELATED TO FACILITIES.

With respect to facilities to which this title applies, the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission shall not permit recovery of or on any equity investment.

SEC. 304. NEW IMPORT AUTHORITY.

No order authorizing the importation of LNG through facilities to which this title applies shall be issued pursuant to section 3 of the Natural Gas Act unless the Secretary of Energy determines, after a hearing on the record and in addition to any other criteria such Secretary deems appropriate, that—

(1) the delivered price of the LNG is competitive with the delivered price of alternate supplies of natural gas available to the market involved; and

(2) the contract terms governing the sale of such LNG are responsive to changes in the natural gas market.

SEC. 305. APPLICABILITY.

This title shall apply with respect to—

(1) any facility constructed pursuant to a certificate of public convenience and necessity under section 7(c) of the Natural Gas Act, and

(2) any tankers, owned by United States persons, constructed for the ocean transportation of LNG to any such facility which commenced deliveries of LNG after April 1, 1980, and before the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 306. DEFINITIONS.

For the purposes of this title—

(1) the term "LNG" has the same meaning given such term in section 2(11) of the Natural Gas Pipeline Safety Act of 1968 (49 U.S.C. App. 1671(11)); and

(2) the term "natural-gas company" has the same meaning given such term in section 2(6) of the Natural Gas Act.

TITLE IV—EXEMPTION FROM FEDERAL REGULATION

SEC. 401. EXEMPTION FROM FEDERAL REGULATION.

Any interstate natural gas pipeline—

(1) which on September 3, 1986, is recovering the cost of all its interstate transportation facilities under rates set—

(A) solely by two or more State regulatory commissions; and

(B) as a component of its retail sales rates;

(2) of which the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission certificated portion is less than 30 miles long; and

(3) which was the subject of a Federal Energy Regulatory Commission declaratory order issued July 24, 1986, with Federal Energy Regulatory Commission docket No. CP86-316-000, shall be subject to such State commission jurisdiction with respect to such transportation, and shall be exempt from regulation of such rates by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

TITLE V—EXPEDITED DECISION

SEC. 501. EXPEDITED DECISION.

The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission shall, not later than January 31, 1987, issue a final order in Central Illinois Light Company v. Panhandle Eastern Pipe Line Company, Federal Energy Regulatory Commission docket No. RP82-105-000 filed June 10, 1982.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHARP] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FIELDS] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHARP].

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, let me indicate to our colleagues what the bill before us will do.

Title I will repeal the Fuel Use Act of 1978. This act is an anachronistic law that barred large energy consumers from burning oil and gas because oil and gas were going to be high priced and scarce. Those predictions have proved wrong and now repealing the Fuel Use Act will give distressed U.S. producers new markets and give consumers the right to make their own fuel selections in an increasingly deregulated energy marketplace.

I might also add that we will save between $1 and $2 billion of cost at the Department of Energy for administering this act.

Title II repeals the incremental pricing requirement of the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978. That provision, too, was anachronistic or is anachronistic today, given changes in the gas markets.

Title III sets tough, market-based tests for any new imports of Algerian liquefied natural gas. It also bans the pass through of most of the costs associated with the now failed Trunkline LNG import project.

Title IV provides a narrow exemption from Federal Energy Regulatory Commission regulation for an Iowa gas utility that has for decades been regulated by the Illinois and Iowa State Commissions and has also fallen under the jurisdiction of the FERC, and there is no one I believe who thinks there is adequate reason for that to be the case today.

Title V orders an expedited Federal Energy Regulatory Commission decision by January 31, 1987, in the so-called CILCO case, which has been pending at the Commission for 4 years. This provision does not tell the Energy Commission what to say or how to rule, but does set a final deadline for their decision.

Mr. Speaker, I want to stress that the provisions in this package have bipartisan support. They are among the various gas issues probably the least controversial. Several are, however, of considerable significance. Most of them have enjoyed a broad base of support as gas legislation has been considered over the last 4 years, but as people know who have observed or participated in the legislative process on natural gas issues, it has been extremely difficult throughout the 40- or 50-year history of gas legislation to achieve consensus on a whole range of very significant issues.

We did attempt to seek a consensus on some broader and very important issues relative to wellhead pricing. Especially we worked hard on trying to receive a consensus on common carriage, open carriage or open access to the pipelines which many of us believe is very important to be accomplished, but I am afraid that on those larger questions the potential for being bogged down is enormous. Therefore we are here to do what is doable with these less controversial issues in hopes that we can make these changes in natural gas regulation and legislation to improve the natural gas markets both from the producer's point of view and the consumer's point of view and hopefully we will be able to see in the next Congress further action on other critical issues relative to natural gas.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may use to the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER].

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, today the House is considering H.R. 4669, a bill to repeal certain key provisions of the Powerplant and Industrial Fuel Use Act.

The motion to suspend the rules also contains an unrelated amendment to prohibit the pass-through of the settlement costs involving a liquefied natural gas facility stemming from a contract between an interstate natural gas pipeline and the Government of Algeria.

The amendment further prohibits future LNG imports unless the price is competitive and flexible.

The amendments also adds repeal of the incremental pricing provisions of title II of the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978 and makes it clear that a certain distribution company is not considered an interstate pipeline under the Natural Gas Act by virtue of a supply line that runs into another State.

One thing should be made crystal clear from the outset. There is no disagreement over whether the Fuel Use Act should or should not be repealed. Its repeal is in H.R. 2734, the Comprehensive Natural Gas bill, introduced by Congressman BILL RICHARDSON and myself, along with a bipartisan majority of the Fossil Fuel Subcommittee on June 12, 1985.

Furthermore, fuel use repeal is in H.R. 4604, the natural gas bill introduced on behalf of the Reagan administration this year. In fact, President Reagan has called for its repeal several times.

Furthermore, I am certainly sympathetic to the regional issues addressed by the amendment contained in the motion to suspend the rules and pass H.R. 4669, as so amended.

I have discussed the LNG situation with the affected Members, as well as the technical amendment relating to the definition of an interstate pipeline.

In fact, I have no substantive objection to the provisions and indicated my interest in working with the affected Members to address them in a timely manner; however, it should be noted for the record and vigorously observed that this legislation, even with the addition of the repeal of incremental pricing, fails to adequately address the problems now facing the domestic oil and gas industry.

It is particularly ironic that we are taking up H.R. 4669 with a nongermane amendment containing miscellaneous measures. I do not doubt the intention of those who sought the nongermane provisions. As just noted, I have great sympathy for them.

Rather, my remarks are inspired by those of my colleagues on the Committee on Energy and Commerce from the other side of the aisle who voted to exclude from consideration in subcommittee and full committee markup my amendments to get to the heart of the matters affecting the domestic industry. Why is it that germaneness precludes us from even taking up gradual removal of price controls and mandatory contract carriage, but germaneness can be discarded to deal with relatively less important local concerns.

The lack of comprehensive natural gas legislation in the 99th Congress due to the actions of the majority party is in stark contrast to the rhetoric coming from my California colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. COELHO]. I do not see the gentleman on the floor now; perhaps he will find his time to be here shortly. The chairman of the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee on August 16, 1986, gave the Democrat response to the President's weekly radio address. His theme was a populist revolt based on discontent in such key sectors of the economy as textiles, steel, autos, timber, and yes, even oil and gas.

Mr. Speaker, let the record show that this President and his Secretary of Energy have been diligently seeking that this House act on H.R. 4604 or similar natural gas reform legislation.

As Mr. COELHO stated, the news is indeed bad in energy States. The real issue, though, is, "Who is trying to do something about it, and who is standing in the way?"

No amount of fancy parliamentary footwork can avoid the fact that this bill is an embarrassingly empty response to the problems of the domestic industry. We should be ashamed that this is the most that we can do.

This legislation merely rectifies a mistake in natural gas energy policy that should never have been made in the first place. It is heartwarming to see our Democrat colleagues acknowledge that Jimmy Carter's energy policy was wrongheaded. The Fuel Use Act represents the worst of the philosophy on energy borrowed from Chicken Little that the sky was falling in, that shortages of natural gas were inevitable, and that as a result, the Federal Government should regulate the use of fuel in certain key applications. Its repeal is long overdue, but one must seriously question whether this bill is but a whimper of the response to the cries for comprehensive natural gas reform that we have heard from many quarters.

With a soft gas market characterized by falling prices and ample supplies, the need for price decontrol and access to transportation is both never more compelling for producers and never more beneficial to consumers, be they residential, commercial, or industrial.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire how much time was used?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). The gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER] consumed 6 minutes.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TAUKE].

Mr. TAUKE. Mr. Speaker, section 401 of this legislation corrects a problem that affects a natural gas distribution company located in my congressional district. This particular distribution company obtains natural gas from an interstate pipeline in Illinois and has built facilities to deliver this gas to its customers in northeast Iowa. Because the transportation of this gas crosses a State line, the local distribution company is considered an "interstate pipeline" and is subject to regulation by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission. Therein lies the problem, which is corrected by H.R. 4669.

This local distribution company has always operated as a local distribution company and is regulated by two State public utility commissions. It doesn't make sense for this local distribution company to be regulated by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission [FERC] as an interstate pipeline, and this legislation removes this local distribution company from regulation by the FERC.

The removal of this additional—and unnecessary—regulatory hurdle will facilitate the transportation of natural gas for users in my congressional district. Currently, a fertilizer manufacturer in Clinton, IA, is trying to reduce its cost of natural gas—which is the major raw material associated with the production of fertilizer—by purchasing its gas directly from a producer. Unfortunately, because of current law the local distribution company must jump through FERC's hoops, and this situation is preventing the fertilizer company from purchasing cheaper gas. This language, in H.R. 4669, will correct this regulatory quagmire and may well prevent the loss of 140 jobs in eastern Iowa.

Finally, I wish to express my appreciation to the chairman of the Energy and Commerce Committee, Congressman DINGELL, and of the chairman of the Fossil Fuels Subcommittee, Congressman SHARP, as well as ranking Republicans of the full committee and the subcommittee, Congressmen LENT and DANNEMEYER, for their support and assistance in correcting this problem. I urge my colleagues to support passage of H.R. 4669.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BRYANT], the principal sponsor of the repeal of the Fuel Use Act.

Mr. BRYANT. Mr. Speaker, I want to say a special thanks to the chairman of the full committee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL], and the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHARP], as well as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARKEY], for their expedited handling of this important matter, and I would like to say that I identify very much with the frustrations expressed by the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER] earlier with regard to his desire for even further improvements in the law with regard to energy. He cannot get what he wants today; I cannot get what I want today, either, which is an oil import fee.

I cannot get that because the administration opposes it, and Mr. DANNEMEYER cannot get what he wants because some Members of this Congress oppose it, but what we have before us today is something that we all want, and that is the repeal of the Fuel Use Act.

This measure was introduced by me with 20 bipartisan cosponsors in April. It has moved rapidly because of widespread agreement that it is very necessary to the health of the energy industry and to the health of the consuming public.

The simple fact is that the restrictions imposed by the Fuel Use Act on industrial and utility users are no longer necessary. They were imposed in a time of shortage, but in today's marketplace those restrictions not only contradict the forces of the marketplace, but contradict all logic as well. If there was ever a time to repeal the fuel use restrictions, it would be now, at a time of overabundant supplies.

Under current law, new plants for either industrial or utility purposes are prohibited from burning oil or natural gas as a primary fuel. This legislation would repeal those restrictions. They have inhibited market forces by dictating, often to the disadvantage of both our critical energy industry and to the consuming public, fuel choices for utilities and major industrial users. With a surplus of oil and gas worldwide, surely this is the best time to repeal them.

I would point out that in 1985, the last year for which figures are available, 81 petitions out of 105 filed for waivers from the Fuel Use Act were not acted upon. Those 81 petitions had a value of $500 million. The passage of this act will interject that $500 million into the energy economy. I urge every Member to support this bill today.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, as a cosponsor of H.R. 4669, legislation to repeal major portions of the Fuel Use Act, I am pleased that this legislation, along with a committee amendment repealing incremental pricing, is before the House today.

The Powerplant and Industrial Fuel Use Act was one of five elements of the Carter administration's National Energy Act of 1978. The act prohibited the use of oil and gas as primary fuel in new electric powerplants and in new major fuel-burning installations. The act also required that new facilities be capable of using coal or an alternate fuel. Finally, the Fuel Use Act required the conversion of existing electric powerplants to coal or an alternate fuel by 1990. The conversion provision of the Fuel Use Act was repealed only a few years after enactment in 1981.

Not a single Republican signed the conference report on the Fuel Use Act. I am happy to see that many of my Democratic colleagues have recognized the error of their ways and are now supporting repeal of the ill-begotten Powerplant and Industrial Fuel Use Act.

The Natural Gas Policy Act was another segment of the Carter administration's National Energy Act. The committee amendment of H.R. 4669 repeals one portion of the NGPA—incremental pricing. Incremental pricing was intended to protect residential fuel users from rising natural gas prices by forcing industrial users to pay a greater share of new gas costs. Incremental pricing, too, was a dismal failure. Residential gas prices were increased, not decreased, by incremental pricing as industrial users switched to alternative fuels leaving residential customers with even greater fixed gas costs then they would have borne if industrial users had continued to burn natural gas.

So, I strongly support repealing both these provisions of the previous administration's energy policy. However, I am extremely disappointed that H.R. 4669 addresses only the Fuel Use Act and incremental pricing. While repeal of the Fuel Use Act and incremental pricing are first steps in removing burdensome, counterproductive regulations from natural gas producers and consumers, they are only first steps.

When the Energy and Commerce Committee began reviewing possible natural gas legislation earlier this summer, I had high hopes that current low natural gas prices combined with abundant supply would create an atmosphere in which a rational natural gas policy could be crafted.

The distortions caused by the Natural Gas Policy Act are evident for all who want to see. Congress legislatively encouraged producers to explore for high-cost gas while leaving less-costly gas in the ground. Roughly one-half of all natural gas was decontrolled on January 1, 1985. Liberal energy organizations woefully predicted that without Government regulation prices would dramatically "fly up." Instead, prices have plummeted to half their pre-1985 level. We all know now how flawed the theories were of those who predicted dramatic price fly-ups. Fully decontrolling natural gas could unlock trillions of cubic feet of low-cost natural gas which will not otherwise be produced. By unlocking low-cost gas, decontrol would be good for both producers and consumers of natural gas. Yet, full decontrol of natural gas is not contained in this bill.

I am also disappointed that H.R. 4669 does not contain language requiring a natural gas pipeline to transport gas from a producer to an end user on a nondiscriminatory basis. Those seeking to sell gas and those seeking to buy gas need the assurance of access to transportation to open up the marketplace in natural gas. Although the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission's order 436 is a bold step in creating an open access structure, order 436 is not a mandatory program. The FERC needs statutory authority to mandate nondiscriminatory transportation.

I believe Congress still could agree to simple language giving authority to the FERC to mandate gas transportation. Both the producers and consumers of natural gas would benefit.

I stand ready to work with my colleagues in drafting legislation which truly return the natural gas industry to the free marketplace.

Let's not kid ourselves. While repeal of the Fuel Use Act and incremental pricing is a positive step, it is largely symbolic. Exemptions to the Fuel Use Act have been freely granted. In fact, no request for an exemption has been denied since 1981.

So, while I am pleased that we are acting to repeal the Fuel Use Act, I am extremely disappointed that we are not acting to solve the real problems in the natural gas industry. More than a Fuel Use Act and incremental pricing repeal is needed. We need full decontrol of natural gas. We need mandatory contract carriage language.

So, I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 4669. Let's pass repeal of the Fuel Use Act and incremental pricing but now let's get on with legislation which will truly benefit producers and consumers of natural gas.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Energy Conservation and Power, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARKEY].

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this bill. I would like to particularly compliment the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHARP], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BRYANT], who helped put together this coalition to make it possible for us to have this piece of legislation, and many others who are here at this time and who also should share in the credit for the crafting of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I support this bill. It was reported unanimously by the Subcommittee on Energy Conservation and Power, which I chair, with an amendment, and reported by the full committee by voice vote. I commend the sponsors of the bill on both sides of the aisle especially Mr. BRYANT and Mr. SHARP for crafting a consensus bill that does not overreach into areas of great controversy.

I recall that the Fuel Use Act, which was a part of the comprehensive National Energy Act, was one of the first bills I encountered when I came to Congress. At that time, our energy use was expanding and our oil imports were rising accordingly. Because of artificial distinctions in the pricing of interstate and intrastate natural gas, shortages had arisen in the interstate markets.

The energy laws adopted at that time have proven to be successful. Our imports of oil have decreased so dramatically that the OPEC cartel has been smashed apart. Natural gas now flows into the interstate market without impediment, and supplies are plentiful.

It is in this new context that we are now reconsidering the Fuel Use Act. Several important facts have changed since 1978 that draw into question the continuation of this law. First, the conversion of oil-fired powerplants to coal has been virtually completed. Oil consumption by electric utilities has fallen by 72 percent, from 1.7 million barrels/day in 1978 to just 475,000 barrels/day in 1965.

Second, the price of natural gas has risen under the phased deregulation of the Natural Gas Policy Act to market clearing levels. The prohibition on natural gas use by utilities and large boilers was based, in part, on the premise that the price of natural gas had been kept below that of alternative fuels, and that natural gas was, therefore, being overused as a boiler fuel.

Third, the Fuel Use Act has been administered in an extremely loose fashion over the years. Exemptions are routinely granted, and virtually none are refused. This process appears to require high administrative costs with little positive benefit.

These changed circumstances permit us to review a policy that was aimed at fuel-switching as a temporary measure to reduce our reliance upon imports and to preserve natural gas for uses such as residential heating. However, we cannot afford to become complacent, or we will be right back enacting the Fuel Use Act again. Our best defense against demand outstripping supplies, is a continuing concerted effort toward energy conservation. Conservation, rather than fuel-switching, is the only long-term policy that will prevent us from returning to rising imports.

In 1981, the Congress repealed a provision in the Fuel Use Act that prohibited utilities from burning natural gas after 1990. The repeal was accompanied by a requirement that utilities implement conservation programs so that their customers would use their electricity more efficiently. From 1978 to 1981, prior to the repeal of the off-gas provision, utility use of gas increased from 3.2 to 3.6 trillion cubic feet. Ironically, after the off-gas provision was repealed, but a conservation provision added, gas use declined to 3 trillion cubic feet last year. This provides further evidence that conservation efforts are the key to our energy future. In fact, the Department of Energy's annual report to Congress states that conservation programs pursuant to the act have saved 1.5 trillion cubic feet of gas over the past 5 years.

Natural gas is a clean-burning fuel and can be used efficiently. The bill will open natural gas markets and will provide welcome relief to producers who find themselves with gas to sell, but no markets for their product.

I am well aware that many of the sponsors of this bill would like to see further changes in natural gas legislation. I am also aware that many members from consuming States, including myself, would oppose those changes. By limiting this legislation to matters on which there is general agreement, the sponsors of this bill have increased the chances that this bill can be enacted in the short time remaining in this session, and have provided real action, and not just rhetoric, in expanding natural gas markets.

Again, I would like to compliment the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SYNAR], the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. TAUZIN], the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SLATTERY], and the chairman of the full committee, along with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHARP], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BRYANT], and the minority Members for working together to craft what I believe is a sound piece of energy legislation.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to a very active member of our subcommittee who has been very strong on this and other issues involving natural gas, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SYNAR].

Mr. SYNAR. Mr. Speaker, let me thank my chairman, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHARP], for bringing this important legislation to our attention today.

This is an important step that will open additional gas markets. It is a much-needed shot in the arm for the troubled energy industry, not only here in our country, but particularly in the States of Oklahoma, Louisiana, and Texas.

Repeal of the remaining fuel use restraints will return our fuel choice flexibility of industrial and electric power markets. Currently, coal is the only viable option for large-scale power generation; nuclear is too expensive; and gas and oil are prohibited by the Fuel Use Act.

Removing the fuel use restraints will be a tremendous benefit to consumers and ratepayers because addition of lower cost gas plants to rate base will result in significantly less rate shock as increased power production is needed.

Removing the restraints will also be a tremendous benefit to producers as well. Each additional 500-megawatt gas plant burns 20- to 25-billion cubic feet of gas annually, and that represents between $64 million and $83 million in added gas purchases. The result is that it will benefit the economies of the producing States.

Significant environmental benefits are also gained by this bill because of the burning of natural gas, but perhaps the most important part of the repeal of the Fuel Use Act is that it will restore the stability to the gas markets and encourage exploration and drilling for future gas supplies.

Utility managers can once again rely on the marketplace of prudent business decisions, rather than the Federal Government regulation, to select their fuel of choice and plan their future demand growth.

Even though we did not get all we wanted through the Fuel Use Act and natural gas deregulation, Mr. Speaker, I am confident that Congress will continue to move toward a more competitive, open gas market, thereby benefiting producers and consumers alike.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to that great Member, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COATS].

Mr. COATS. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the House of Representatives is moving forward on legislation to repeal the Fuel Use Act's prohibitions on the use of natural gas and petroleum as a primary energy source in new electric powerplants and in major new fuel-burning installations.

There are many reasons to repeal the Fuel Use Act, but the first and foremost reason is the overabundant supply of natural gas. Today, we see that the premise of the Fuel Use Act, while well intentioned, was wrong.

Fuel Use Act repeal cannot help but benefit the economically depressed oil and gas producing States, as well as those States that are home to the many industries that are struggling to stand up to foreign competition. Coming from northeastern Indiana, I am all too familiar with the need for continuing economic growth. The road to many of our energy-intensive smokestack industries is a difficult one, but the road is made rockier still by the Fuel Use Act.

Electricity consumers will especially benefit in two ways from FUA repeal. First, electric utilities will be able to choose natural gas for electric generation, which could reduce utility fuel costs; and second, it will allow electric utilities to develop such promising new technologies as: combined cycle generators and "select use" of natural gas, in conjunction with coal or residual oil, for emission reduction, which are currently precluded by FUA. Furthermore, optimal development of cogeneration technology is hindered by the need to receive a Fuel Use Act exemption.

We have everything to gain and nothing to lose by repealing the Fuel Use Act. In addition, I am pleased that the committee amendment to H.R. 4669 includes a repeal of the incremental pricing provisions of the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978. The Incremental Pricing Program requires that prices charged for gas used by certain industrial boilers must be set at rough parity with high-sulfur residual oil, even if the price of gas would otherwise be less than the price of residual oil.

Incremental pricing injures our Nation for three reasons: First, it precludes the opportunity to reduce the use of imported oil; second, it distorts market preferences even for consumers that use only natural gas; and third, it has been ineffective, sometimes causing higher residential gas bills as a result of lost industrial gas sales.

My interest in these issues is well known. Congressman SLATTERY and I introduced legislation over 1 year ago that would repeal the Fuel Use Act restrictions and the Incremental Pricing Program. Passage of this legislation is an important step toward a more rational energy policy, and I urge my colleagues to vote to suspend the rules and pass H.R. 4669.

Finally, I want to thank the subcommittee chairman, the ranking member, and the gentleman from Texas for their sincere and dedicated work in bringing this bill to the floor.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the previous speaker, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COATS] has been a cosponsor of legislation incorporated in this legislation, and an active member of our committee, and I commend him for his work.

I now want to recognize another very active member of our subcommittee, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. TAUZIN], who has been energetically involved on this issue as well as a number of others.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. TAUZIN].

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I want to especially thank the chairman of our subcommittee, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHARP] for the intensive work he did in bringing this bill to the floor.

While it does not do all that we hoped it would do in natural gas, it does complete some of the work begun years ago in repealing this section of the law that has done untold damage to the natural gas markets of this country.

When I first arrived in Congress, Congressman HALL and Congressman SYNAR and I joined in an effort to repeal another section of this same law, section 301, that would have had the effect of forcing current boilers that use natural gas to convert to other forms of energy by the year 1990. A study done that year indicated that that particular section would have tripled utility bills in our region of the country, that kind of a conversion.

There still remains in the law that provision which prohibits the further construction and use of large boilers to burn natural gas in industries and utilities and that section of the law which penalizes industries which now choose to use natural gas where it is permitted.

Those two sections would be repealed by the bill before us today. Those two sections were initiated into law by those with good intent who meant to accomplish a single goal; and that was to forbid natural gas used by industries or to discourage it as much as possible for industries and utilities.

Well, that goal was accomplished. Many industries, many utilities got off of gas. The net result, however, was not all good. To consumers in the residential market who suddenly saw themselves liable for the full cost of pipelines rather than having that cost shared by industries and utilities, those consumers saw large increases in their fuel bills.

For those consumers in America concerned about acid rain, the cleanest fuel available for consumption in utilities and industries was forbidden in this bill. So by repealing the bill, we restore that capability to industries and utilities around the country to indeed burn that clean fuel, natural gas.

Finally, by repealing these two sections, we will restore to the marketplace real and free choice in energy products. The workers in Louisiana who produce natural gas for America's homes, the commercial outlets and industries, are proud of the work they do. They are dignified by that work. They have been insulted for many years by the law which says to some customers in America that their product is forbidden and cannot be used.

Today, by repealing those sections of the law, we restore that dignity to those workers, and we reinvite investments into the gas fields of the Southwest.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHARP] has 9 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FIELDS] has 5 minutes remaining.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to one of the cosponsors of this legislation, as well as a cosponsor of two parts of this legislation, repeal of fuel use as well as incremental pricing, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SLATTERY].

Mr. SLATTERY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 4669, legislation that will repeal the Fuel Use Act and the incremental pricing provisions of the Natural Gas Policy Act.

Last year, my colleague from Indiana, DAN COATS, and I introduced legislation to do exactly what we will accomplish with approval of the committee amendment to this bill. I would like to express my appreciation to Chairman PHIL SHARP, our colleague from Texas, JOHN BRYANT, and to Chairman JOHN DINGELL for the leadership they have shown in bringing this measure to the floor.

Enactment of this bill will be a needed step toward removal of regulatory barriers, the promotion of domestic energy production, and the protection of gas consumers. Repeal of the Fuel Use Act will allow domestically produced natural gas to compete for a greater share of energy sales to industry and powerplants. Repeal of incremental pricing will allow our country to reduce oil imports by removing the requirement that some domestically-produced natural gas must be artificially elevated to price parity with residual fuel oil. These policies just don't make sense in today's marketplace.

Mr. Speaker, as my colleague from Texas pointed out, none of us have been able to get all of what we want in this area but this bill represents about all we can get this year. Mr. Speaker, I hope the other body follows our lead and that we can send this bill to the President as soon as possible.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RAHALL], the chairman of the House Coal Caucus.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the bill.

Mr. Speaker, natural gas is a very valuable natural resource. It is a very clean-burning fuel and is one that makes an important contribution to the energy needs of the Nation. Nonetheless, it is an extremely volatile fuel from the standpont of supply. I remember well the winter of 1977-78 when factories and schools closed throughout the country due to a natural gas shortage.

Yet today we seem to have forgotten that cruel and brutal winter because there currently exists a glut of natural gas on the market. We seem to be unable to look beyond this day—we seem to all come down with a massive case of amnesia when it comes to formulating energy policy.

This legislation is representative of that amnesia, of the inability of this Nation to take lessons from its energy past. We forget all too often the energy situation the United States faced during the decade of the 1970's—a situation that is bound to be repeated under measures such as H.R. 4669.

Why is this bill being considered today? Because today there is a natural gas surplus. Yet, this bill will have an impact long into the future. And when it comes to natural gas supply, that future is murky and uncertain.

I strongly believe we must give priority to home heating, commercial, and industrial uses of natural gas as opposed to allowing this valuable energy resource to be used as an electric utility boiler fuel, as H.R. 4669 would allow.

All of the most recent energy outlooks that I have seen state that the total U.S. supply of natural gas is expected to remain relatively constant through 1995 and beyond. No dramatic increase in domestic gas production is anticipated. I repeat, no dramatic increase in U.S. gas production is to occur.

And it was only in August of this year that the consensus at a meeting of some of the natural gas industry's top executives was that the gas bubble will break like a balloon much sooner than most people would expect. According to one report on the meeting:

> The impending shortfall, likely to show up as early as this winter if it's cold enough, is being stoked by a number of factors that are winding up for what could be a massive blow to unexpecting consumers.

An impending shortfall was the message from that meeting. I would submit that an impending shortfall of natural gas supplies is certainly not grounds for repeal of the Fuel Use Act.

For these reasons, the Fuel Use Act restriction on the construction of new natural gas electric utility boilers is not a demand restraint on gas use, but rather, a sensible and justifiable national policy.

Prudence dictates its retention, not its repeal.

This Nation sooner or later is going to have to wake up to the fact that we must formulate and stick with an energy policy that is premised on the long-term security of the country and which is resilient to the cyclical nature of energy supply and demand. Despite attempts to set in place and maintain such a policy, we are still very much hostage to the prevailing political winds when it comes to energy. Energy complacency is the order of the day, because today, energy prices are low and supplies are abundant.

As such, we are witnessing attempts to systematically dismantle any semblance of a long-term energy policy. The effort to repeal the Fuel Use Act is but part of that effort. It is far easier to react to the current energy situation with shortsighted remedies. It takes courage to consider the long-term ramifications of such so-called remedies.

Mr. Speaker, I urge defeat of this bill.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COMBEST].

Mr. COMBEST. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FIELDS] for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I think this bill, as has been eloquently pointed out by everyone basically who has spoken prior to myself, exactly what the bill does. It does not carry it as far as we would like; however, I do rise in full support of this legislation which would repeal the Fuel Use Act.

This is a portion of a comprehensive energy legislative package that a number of us have in, of which we were original cosponsors. It would redirect the energy policy of this country. I think it is unfortunate that many times when we began, those of us who represent heavy energy-producing areas begin to talk about energy problems, that many people look at those as parochial; and certainly we do understand: They are very important to us, the economic conditions that bad energy policies of the past have created.

However, I think equally important, and as many people will understand and many people agree, it is very important in this country that we have energy policy which sets us in a direction of self-sufficiency, of self-supply, and keeps us from being able to be the puppets of Mideastern countries or others in the world that might be able to dictate to us what our energy policy should be, and certainly hold us hostage in terms of supply.

I think it is in the long-term best interests of the consumers of this country and certainly of the national defense and the national security that we have an energy policy that puts us in the direction of self-sufficiency and puts us in the direction to where we can in fact ensure that the producer has that opportunity in this country of making a profit.

"Profit" is not a bad word in the energy industry. Because of the regulations and the overburdens of those regulations and restrictions in this country, it has led us down this path that today we find ourselves in in this situation.

I do urge passage. I think it is certainly a step in the right direction. I think it is one of the beginnings of the steps, one of the many things that we need to do to correct the energy policy of this country.

Mr. Speaker, I do urge passage of this overwhelmingly.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JONES] who has been an active supporter of repeal of the Fuel Use Act as well as other major changes in the natural gas legislation and has been very persistent in his efforts to get our committee and the House to act.

Mr. JONES of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I would like to first compliment and thank the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, Mr. SHARP, the chairman of the full committee on Energy and Commerce, Mr. DINGELL, my colleague from Oklahoma, Mr. SYNAR, the gentleman from Texas, Mr. BRYANT, who took the lead, and so many others on both sides of the aisle who brought this legislation to the floor today. This legislation is truly in the national interest. It is in the national interest of consumers because it widens the markets for a very clean and efficient fuel and by bringing more competition into the energy field it is also going to have the effect of lowering prices that the consumers pay for the necessary energy.

It is clearly good national policy for the producers of natural gas. In a State such as mine, an oil- and gas-producing State like Oklahoma, we are in depression times. We are in depression times because the energy industry is flat on its back.

The oil industry is flat on its back because of a policy initiated by some OPEC countries to drive producers out of the market.

It is flat on its back in the natural gas industry because they are producing efficiently, effectively, only to see their markets closed off to them. The legislation that closed off and restricted these markets was legislation that I opposed. It was shortsighted. It did not act on common sense or on fact.

But today we are repealing that, and we are giving a new breath of life to the natural gas producers.

In Oklahoma, where we once had animated drilling rigs and pumping jacks, today they stand like skeletons across the landscape. That hurts our economy, it hurts the national security of the United States. This legislation today is the most important and effective thing we can do to stimulate activity in the natural gas industry.

So I urge my colleagues to support it, to send a signal to the other body to act quickly on this so that before this Congress adjourns, it will be on the desk of the President and will be enacted into law.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today in support of H.R. 4669. As an original cosponsor of this legislation to repeal the Fuel Use Act, I would like to say that these restrictions on new gas-fired powerplants and industrial boilers should never have been imposed in the first place, and their repeal is long overdue.

The Fuel Use Act places unnecessary restrictions on the use of natural gas. It was enacted at a time when it was believed that we were running out of natural gas. History has proven that wrong. Our domestic natural gas reserves have remained stable since 1978, increased efficiency and conservation have lowered annual consumption, and there is currently an oversupply of gas on the market.

Because of the depressed oil and gas prices of the past few years and the precipitous drop in prices since the first of the year, many of our domestic energy producers are fighting for their survival. To artifically deny a large potential market for an abundant domestic resource runs the long-term risk of bringing about even greater dependence on foreign oil and gas than we now have.

In addition to being abundant, natural gas is a totally clean fuel. It does not pollute the environment, and it is easy to transport. it is extremely efficient. Electric consumers, both commercial and residential, will benefit in the long run from lower rates because gas-fired plants are less costly to build and maintain than coal-fired plants.

The natural gas industry is undergoing massive changes brought on as a result of deregulation: The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission has proposed pricing reforms and sweeping changes in transportation rules. Natural gas is moving toward a free market. Repeal of the Fuel Use Act will help us move in that direction.

I would like to commend my colleagues Mr. SHARP, chairman of the Subcommittee on Fossil and Synthetic Fuels, Chairman DINGELL of the Energy and Commerce Committee, and Minority Leader MICHEL for the bipartisan spirit with which they approached this legislation. I also want to commend MIKE SYNAR and JOHN BRYANT for their tireless efforts inside the committee of move the bills.

This legislation is truly in the national interest, as well as in the best interests of energy producers, consumers of electric power, and the pipelines which transport natural gas. I urge my colleagues to vote for the motion to suspend the rules and pass this bill.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTON].

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I would like to rise in support of the bill before us to repeal the Fuel Use Act.

The Fuel Use Act arose out of a misguided belief in the late 1970's that we were running out of all of our fossil fuels and that we needed to conserve the remaining fuel for certain segments of our society.

The Fuel Use Act never should have been passed in the first place.

Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the chairman of the Committee on Energy and Commerce, Mr. DINGELL, and the chairman of the subcommittee, Mr. SHARP, for working with the members of the minority on those committees and subcommittees to bring this bill to the floor.

I am not a member of that particular committee, but I am the Republican task force chairman of the Committee on Energy and Environment Research. We have done a lot of research on this.

I would like to point out to one of my colleagues who said that this would distract from the use of coal, I do not think it does. I think it recreates a level playing field and it lets the marketplace decide which is the most economical fuel to be used. It allows those areas that have a sufficiency of natural gas, to allow their industry to utilize natural gas. It is a clean-burning fuel. It is environmentally safe. I think it is long past the time that we should repeal the Fuel Use Act.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this measure.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHARP] has 3 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FIELDS] has 1 minute remaining.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WISE].

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to this act. I understand the problem, and I understand the concerns. What bothers me most is that this is a very short-term response to what I think is going to be a long-term problem, because what this does is to say that coal will no longer get the consideration it requires in developing a concerted and realistic energy policy. What is ignored here, for instance, is that there are known 300-year reserves of coal and that coal has always provided the underpinning for our basic utility power generation. It is sometimes a problem in thinking ahead, particularly when oil prices are dropping, when there is a glut of natural gas. So we forget the events of just a few years ago. But how long will this dropping-price situation continue? For instance, should the outbreak of war continue in the Middle East, should other foreign countries turn their oil spigots off as they have before, once we find ourselves in the same situation. You know, it was just a couple of years ago that we had gotten our oil dependency down to 26 percent of foreign oil supply; now we are somewhere to over one-third. So it is rising.

I am concerned about other areas, too, in repealing this act. What does this do to the advent of clean coal technology, the first real commitment of this country to study how to burn coal and how to burn it cleanly? Are we going to drain those natural gas reserves and yet not have the ability to respond to our energy needs with coal? You know, coal requires a lot of capital investment. Do you shut a mine up? You just do not turn it back on again. You do not just un-stop the well or unplug the well.

So I would hope that at least as this bill wends its way through the legislative process that language would be added requiring at least new utilities if not existing ones to maintain coal capability and the ability to keep coal as an alternative fuel.

I regret this day and I think we are going to revisit it again.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. FIELDS] has 1 minute remaining.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield my last minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER].

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, would an amendment be in order at this time to this bill to deregulate natural gas prices in this country?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. MONTGOMERY). No amendments are in order under suspensions of the rules.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, that lays the foundation for the statement that I want to make to the body.

What the Speaker just stated points up the very problem that the House is now facing about preventing what we should be doing. We should be deregulating the natural gas prices as a policy option, and the reason we are not doing it is because the Democratic leadership that controls this House refuses to let this measure come to the floor of the House under a procedure whereby this Member or some other Member could have offered the amendment that I am talking about.

When we have the courage to take that policy option, we will bring into the energy base of this country an additional 1 to 2 years of natural gas supply that we are otherwise never going to get. That is 20 trillion to 40 trillion cubic feet. It is a sad day when partisan differences, quite frankly, prevent the House from acting upon this measure.

I accept that most of my Democratic colleagues in this body believe we should regulate prices. I think the marketplace should prevail. But what is wrong with having an up or down vote so that the country can determine who favors an energy policy that is truly going to get this Nation on the road to energy independence? I am sad to say that we cannot offer that amendment today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHARP] has 1 minute remaining.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on International Economic Policy and Trade, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BONKER]. I regret that we have run out of time, but the gentleman will have time to ask a few questions.

Mr. BONKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

As I understand it, the resolution revokes previous licenses issued by the Department of Energy to a United States-based company for the import of liquefied gas from Algeria. My question is whether or not this action may be precipitous in view of the fact that the Department has not acted upon the settlement.

Mr. SHARP. We do not believe it is precipitous at all. Basically it is necessary because no gas is flowing under the existing license. It does not appear that there is any economic reason for it to flow in the future, but because in that settlement the Algerian Government becomes a major stockholder of a United States company it may for noneconomic reasons, noneconomic to the United States, end up trying to use a license where really there is no basis for using today.

Mr. BONKER, I thank the chairman.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Speaker, I simply want to urge my colleagues to adopt the legislation before us. The other body will have to act on these matters. These are issues that have been dealt with in many other pieces of legislation around the House and in the other body with respect to natural gas and have broad consensus support for. Regrettably, we cannot solve all of the problems in this regulated market which is increasingly becoming deregulated, but I think we can take useful steps forward that frankly would be useful to the natural gas markets without harming the coal markets.

Mr. MADIGAN. Mr. Speaker, I strongly support the committee amendment to H.R. 4669, to repeal and amend certain sections of the Powerplant and Industrial Fuel Use Act, particularly those provisions barring continued reliance on costly, insecure foreign imports of liquefied natural gas [LNG], and opening the door to price competitive natural gas supplies in central Illinois.

By way of background, Mr. Speaker, in the mid-1970's, energy shortages and oil and gas price controls led several gas pipelines to undertake costly, ambitious long-term LNG import projects.

Almost all of these projects have now collapsed, victims of the decontrol of oil/gas prices, the rise in the domestic gas supply outlook, and the availability of cheaper, more secure domestic fuels.

One project, the Trunkline-Panhandle LNG import project, is however still barely alive. Its LNG imports were stopped in 1983, because they were too costly. The gasification plant and LNG ships have been idle for three years.

But now, the company says it wants to renew these imports soon, only a month after paying Algeria $600 million to escape the old import contract made in 1975.

Title III of the committee amendment sets tough conditions on any new imports, and prevents most of the costs of the LNG project from being passed through to Panhandle ratepayers.

Full passthrough of those costs could mean price increases of $1 to $2 or more, an increase unacceptable to central Illinois where the farm economy is still suffering. Without congressional intervention, our regulatory system will allow consumers to be billed for Panhandle's uneconomic business decision. Today Panhandle may be more interested in keeping its LNG plant and ships in use, than in selling gas at a competitive price. Why? So it holds on to the "no Federal income tax" status it has enjoyed for years now, as a result of its energy and investment tax credits on the costly LNG facilities.

Panhandle may also be trying to placate Algerian shareholders who are now the company's largest single stockholders. The more we pay for foreign gas, the less of it we buy from our own domestic producers.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I want to stress the bipartisan nature of this LNG provision. This language has been in all natural gas bills considered by the Energy and Commerce Committee in 1983, 1984, and 1986.

Our committee's amendment also includes an important provision requiring the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission to make a decision in a proceeding that has been pending for 4 years. The Central Illinois Light Co. [CILCO] has been seeking abrogation of contract terms with its pipeline supplier that prevent the utility from obtaining price competitive gas supplies. The amendment requires FERC to make an expeditious decision in the CILCO case. A FERC decision allowing CILCO to utilize order 436 promoting voluntary nondiscriminatory transportation of natural gas, will be an important boost to economic development in central Illinois.

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that contract terms that require a utility to purchase 100 percent of its gas supplies from a single pipeline are consistent with deregulation of natural gas markets and a free marketplace. But the committee amendment does not decide this issue. It does not tell the FERC how to decide this case. It only says that the FERC must issue a final decision by January 31, 1987. Mr. Speaker, this is the least we can require. CILCO filed this complaint, claiming that Panhandle's tariff violates Federal law—the Natural Gas Act—on June 10, 1982. Over the past 4 years the FERC has allowed discovery, held hearings, provided four rounds of legal briefs and has an initial decision by an administrative law judge. Meanwhile, the costs passed on to captive customers have been enormous. The committee amendment would bring an end to the uncertainty. I think everyone can agree that more than 4½ years is an ample time for the FERC to reach a decision on this important matter.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 4669 with some reservations. In light of current market conditions it is time to repeal the prohibitions on the use of both natural gas and oil. The restrictions in the Fuel Use Act—enacted 8 years ago—are anachronistic and counterproductive. We should be doing all we can to stimulate domestic production and eliminate unnecessary regulations—repeal of the Fuel Use Act will be a small step in the right direction.

I see enactment of H.R. 4669 as a starting point. Back in June of 1985, I introduced H.R. 2734, a bill that would have facilitated the transition of the natural gas industry toward a more competitive market. I included a section that would have repealed the major remaining provisions of the Fuel Use Act. More needs to be done. It is essential that we maintain our domestic production capability for reasons of both national and economic security. The passage of H.R. 4669, while important, certainly does not go far enough. The broader issues of contract carriage and natural gas deregulation should be considered before natural gas production and exploration in this country are virtually wiped out. Recent projections say that we are quickly approaching the 40-percent level for oil and a mere 5-year reserve of natural gas. We are rapidly approaching the point where all of our conservation, exploration, and production incentives of the last 12 years will be wiped out in a flood of foreign oil.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to share with my colleagues the concerns I have for another fuel—coal—which is basic to our energy independence. I would like to explain why I believe that any changes to the Fuel Use Act should retain the requirement that new electric utility boilers be constructed coal capable.

In 1978, the PIFUA stated that coal would be the preferred future fuel by: First, requiring utility and large industrial boilers to be "off gas" by 1990; and second, that new boilers be constructed "coal capable" as well as prohibited from burning gas. The off gas provision was repealed in 1981 in view of the unrealistic 1990 deadline and today existing boilers are free to use any fuel according to economics.

H.R. 4669, would repeal PIFUA in its entirety in response to the collapse of oil and gas prices. Repeal or modification of PIFUA should, on sound lines, retain the requirement that new existing boilers be coal capable, yet allow actual fuel use be determined by economics.

The rationale for coal capability is sound. It provides for, first, fuel flexibility—technically, boilers designed to burn gas only, cannot later be converted to burn coal: A coal capable boiler can however, burn coal, gas, or oil. Second, it is insurance against obsolescence—a highly uncertain and volatile outlook for world oil prices in near term and depletion of domestic gas in the long term dictates new gas only capacity will become economically and socially obsolete. Third, there is a regulatory bias on the part of the public utility commissions to force utilities into sub-optimal gas plants, rather than capital intensive coal plants that are more economic in the long run.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the coal capability requirement should be retained. I would recommend that new large industrial boilers be excluded, since choices are not dictated by the regulators. Coal capability need only require that the utility boiler be coal capable and that sufficient real estate be available to accommodate that coal handling facilities if they are eventually called for. This reduces substantially the capital penalty of coal capability.

Mr. Speaker, I represent a district in New Mexico that has large deposits of oil, natural gas, and coal. I am concerned about the health of all three industries. I support H.R. 4669. I urge my colleagues to support this effort and reiterate my overall concern that much more needs and deserves to be done to preserve our energy independence. I intend to work diligently with House and Senate conferees in the days ahead to try and fashion a compromise to retain the requirement that new electric utility boilers be constructed coal capable.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I support H.R. 4669, which would in the main repeal the Fuel Use Act. The Fuel Use Act was an anachronism to begin with, and Republicans, in fact, opposed it at the very outset. So I am glad we are setting about, finally, to correct the error of our ways in this instance. It is only unfortunate that we are not going a step further and opening up the entire natural gas system to the competitive forces of the free marketplace.

I want to comment specifically on two provisions, included in the committee amendment, which will be beneficial to natural gas users in central Illinois and other parts of the Midwest.

The first provision would prohibit Panhandle Eastern Pipeline Co. from passing on to its customers in the Midwest costs of a sweetheart settlement it recently worked out with Algeria. This provision in essence represents the language of a bill ED MADIGAN and I introduced on August 11.

The Members may recall that a few years ago Panhandle was importing Algerian natural gas at a price almost double the going rate for domestic gas. Panhandle was in turn seeking to impose those high prices on its customers. This was at a time when the supply of domestic gas was plentiful and prices were on the decline.

We raised strong objection to this, introduced legislation to prohibit the import of Algerian gas, and called on the Federal regulatory agencies to prohibit the pass through of the high prices to the consumer.

With the Algerian gas included in its rates, Panhandle's prices were uncompetitive and sales fell off 40 percent. A few months after deliveries commenced, Panhandle was negotiating to reduce the volume, and it suspended purchases completely in December 1983, as a result of the market collapse. Since June 1984, Panhandle's Louisiana terminal has been mothballed.

During the period that the Algerian LNG was received, Panhandle increased the cost of gas to Midwestern ratepayers by more than $534 million compared to the cost of Texas and Louisiana production that was shut in to make room for the Algerian LNG.

In July of this year, Panhandle agreed to settle, for approximately $660 million, the arbitration claims that resulted from the 1983 suspension of purchases.

Panhandle has indicated that it expects to pass this additional cost on to Midwestern ratepayers. If recovered over 1 year, my constituents in Peoria would have their natural gas bills increased by upward of 13 percent, which would be an unconscionable increase for an area already suffering economically.

The Natural Gas Policy Act has allowed a measure of deregulation in the natural gas industry. In the deregulated environment, pipelines such as Panhandle must learn to accept responsibility for their management decisions. The committee amendment ensures that Algerian LNG imports cannot be resumed unless they are price competitive, and places the costs of the recent settlement negotiated by Panhandle where they belong, avoiding an additional cost to Midwestern ratepayers that would artifically discourage purchases of domestic gas.

The other key provision in the commit'ee amendment reflects the essence of another bill ED MADIGAN and I introduced. The provision would require the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission to make a final decision on a complaint case filed by the Central Illinois Light Co. way back in 1982.

In this case CILCO is seeking removal of an anticompetitive sole supplier restriction imposed by Panhandle which prevents CILCO from going out into the marketplace and obtaining lower priced natural gas from other producers. During the past few years consumers in central Illinois have not fully received the benefits of lower natural gas prices because of this restrictive tariff. This tariff enables Panhandle to exert a monopoly type stranglehold over CILCO, and represents one reason Panhandle was able to effectively pass on the cost of the high priced Algerian gas to the consumer.

I do not believe that such sole supplier restrictions are consistent with deregulation of natural gas markets and a free marketplace. But the committee amendment does not decide this issue. It does not tell the FERC how to decide this case. It only says that the FERC must issue a final decision by January 31, 1987. This is the least we can require. CILCO filed this complaint, claiming that Panhandle's tariff violates Federal law [the Natural Gas Act], on June 10, 1982. Over the past 4 years the FERC has allowed discovery, held hearings, provided four rounds of legal briefs, and has an initial decision by an administrative law judge.

It is simply ridiculous that the Commission should take this long to decide a case. The costs passed on to captive customers during this period of indecision have been enormous. The committee amendment would bring an end to the uncertainty. I think everyone can agree that more than 4½ years is an ample time for the FERC to reach a decision on this important matter.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, let me express appreciation to the chairman of the committee, Mr. DINGELL, and the chairman of the subcommittee, Mr. SHARP, as well as ranking members NORM LENT and BILL DANNEMEYER, for their willingness to work with ED MADIGAN and myself in including these provisions in the committee amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All time has expired.

The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHARP] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 4669), as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

The title of the bill as amended so as to read: "A bill to repeal and amend certain sections of the Powerplant and Industrial Fuel Use Act of 1978, and for other purposes."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 4669, the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

MAKING IN ORDER AT ANY TIME CONSIDERATION OF CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 3838, TAX REFORM ACT OF 1985

Mr. PEASE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it shall be in order at any time to consider the conference report on H.R. 3838, that all points of order against the conference report and against its consideration be waived, and that debate on the conference report continue not to exceed 3 hours, to be divided and controlled as provided by clause 2(a) of rule XXVIII, but that this request shall apply only if the conference report has been available to Members as provided by clause 2(a) of rule XXVIII.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, under my reservation I yield to the distinguished acting chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means to explain the need for the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. PEASE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, this request allows the House to take up the conference report on the Tax Reform Act at any time, and provides that time for debate on the report be three times that normally accorded conference reports. The time would be evenly divided between the majority and minority, with each side having 1½ hours.

The request also requires that there be 3 days between the filing of the conference report and its consideration by the House. This will insure that Members have time to review the report before House consideration.

Given the magnitude of the tax reform legislation, it will be necessary to waive certain points of order.

This is the most expeditious way to do so.

Mr. FRENZEL. Further reserving the right to object, I thank the gentleman from Ohio for his explanation.

Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the reason that the waiver is needed is because the conference exceeded the scope of the conference in a number of rather important respects, such as: Nondeductibility of State and local sales taxes; effective date of ITC carryover reduction; taxability of appreciated portion of gifts to charity by corporations and individuals; including credits against minimum tax; the volume cap on nongovernmental bonds, and many more.

Mr. Speaker, I am not going to vote for the tax bill. Nevertheless, I think it is important, if the House is to have the chance to work its will, that the unanimous-consent request prevail.

The conference did, indeed, exceed the scope. Many of those excesses are points on which I strongly disagree. However, probably the size and comprehensiveness of the bill would lead us to believe that it is a miracle the scope was not exceeded in more places.

If we were not to accede to this request, it would simply slow down the bill. That would cause more decisions to be deferred in the marketplace. People are confused enough about this bill already. It ought to be voted up or down as soon as possible without further adornments.

An objective to this request will only drive the committee into the arms of the rules which will readily grant the waives, but only after extracting its members' pound of flesh from tax reform. Keeping this bill, which is disruptive enough already, out of the hands of one more committee is reason enough to grant the unanimous-consent request.

I believe the bill is not good for the U.S. economy, but I believe it is destined to pass anyway. If it must pass, better it do so sooner rather than later. It should also be voted on in the form determined by the conference committee.

For all these reasons I believe the request of the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PEASE] should be granted, and I withdraw my reservation.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

□ 1430

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. MONTGOMERY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

MONTEREY BAY NATIONAL MARINE SANCTUARY ACT

(Mr. PANETTA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce legislation designed to provide protection for a marine resource of truly national significance and one of tremendous importance to the people of central California. Because of its unique biological, environmental, and economic significance, Monterey Bay was originally nominated by the State of California for National Marine Sanctuary status in 1977 and added to the National Oceanic Atmospheric Administration's list of active candidates in 1978.

The Monterey Bay sanctuary site is unique in many ways. The site is the only west coast active candidate site including a submarine canyon, the Pacific coast's largest. In addition, the bay within the proposed Monterey sanctuary hosts a number of endangered and threatened species of marine mammals and birds, as well as commercial and recreational fisheries and many tourist activities. The bay is also the focus of extensive national and international marine research efforts. The site was seriously considered as an active candidate by NOAA until November 1983.

Unfortunately, Monterey Bay and its vast array of marine life are threatened unless immediate action is taken to protect them. Findings during the past few years suggest that the bay and its tributaries are slowly being contaminated by toxic chemicals. Record levels of pesticides have been found in Watsonville, Espinosa, and Elkhorn Sloughs as well as the Salinas River; all of which empty into the bay. Residues of pesticides banned over a decade ago are still being found at high levels in the soils that drain into the bay. At the same time, several cities use Monterey Bay as an ocean outfall source for their sewage, and the demand by other cities to do the same is on the rise.

The decision to remove the bay from the list of active candidate sites was at best arbitrary, and at worst misguided. The reasons given by NOAA at the time bore little relationship to the facts involved. It was argued that there were already two sanctuaries offshore California protecting "similar resources." The large size of the bay was cited as placing an unacceptable enforcement burden on NOAA and finally, the argument was made that the bay was already protected by State and local agencies.

It should be noted that nowhere in the Marine Sanctuaries Act is it contemplated that geographical distribution would be decisive in determining protection or that a coastline as extensive and varied as California's would be limited to the number of potential sanctuaries. It should also be noted that a third California sanctuary, Cordell Banks, is now pending final approval. Also, no other marine sanctuary protects resources similar to Monterey because these resources are indeed unique, including the largest submarine canyon on the west coast, which provides the food source and habitat for an extraordinary variety of marine life including the threatened California sea otter.

Second, while the exact size of a Monterey Bay sanctuary has not been determined, it would certainly be smaller than the Channel Islands Sanctuary in southern California—500 square miles versus 1,200. Finally, there is no comprehensive management plan for the bay, and it is currently threatened by the drainage of sewage and toxic pesticides. The bay faces immediate threats from the proposed establishment of new sewage outfalls by the cities of Gilroy and Morgan Hill and by the proposal by the Bureau of Reclamation to use the bay for the disposal of toxic drainage water from the San Joaquin Valley.

Joined by other Members of the California congressional delegation, I have made numerous attempts to have NOAA place the bay back on its list of active candidates. Unfortunately the Agency will not reconsider its position until after the current list of 29 sites has been designated or rejected—a process which will take us well into the 1990's. According to the latest communication from NOAA, "the (Monterey) site will not be further evaluated as a national marine sanctuary."

It is clear that this unique national resource must be preserved, and that the threats posed by potential new industrial sewage outflows and toxic agricultural discharges are too immediate to wait for NOAA to take action it may never take. Because NOAA has closed the door on attempts to designate the bay as a marine sanctuary through the established process, I am today introducing the Monterey Bay National Marine Sanctuary Act. This legislation would designate the bay as a national marine sanctuary and would require the Secretary of Commerce to establish a management plan for the bay in accordance with the goals and purposes of the Marine Sanctuaries Act.

Monterey Bay's unique physical and biological qualities, its economic productivity, and its national cultural and research significance clearly warrant marine sanctuary designation and protection from the growing threat of toxic contamination. It is my hope that this legislation will bring about the protection needed for this unique national resource.

ANNUAL REPORT OF SAINT LAWRENCE SEAWAY DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION FOR 1985—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

SDI TEST BRUSHES WITH THE LAW

(Mr. BROWN of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, last Friday the Pentagon conducted a test in space that came dangerously close to violating both the 1972 Antiballistic Missile [ABM] Treaty and the existing moratorium against testing the U.S. antisatellite [Asat] weapon against objects in space. While the Pentagon's claim that the test was not illegal may be technically correct, there remain reasons for deep concern. In my view, it simply should not be the Pentagon's policy, or practice, to come as close as it possibly can to violating international treaties and the law of the land.

Friday's test involved the launching of two small spacecraft containing sophisticated sensor devices. The two satellites tracked each other while in orbit, and also tracked a ground-launched Aries rocket, before maneuvering and destroying each other in a head on collision. The alleged purpose of the test was to gather information useful for tracking and targeting rising ballistic missiles from space.

The Pentagon states that the test was not a violation of the ABM Treaty, claiming that the devices used were not ABM components, did not have an ABM capability, and were not tested in the ABM mode. Each of these claims is debatable.

If the devices were not ABM components, or not intended to be developed into such components, why were they tested? Clearly, the intention of the test was to determine whether the equipment eventually could serve as a component for an ABM system. Yet such a determination could only be made after the fact, after the test had occurred and the treaty was violated. This "try-and-see" approach to remaining in compliance with an international treaty is reckless and should not be condoned. Yet it is the approach represented in Friday's test.

It may be true that the devices launched on Friday did not have an ABM capability, and thus did not constitute a violation of the treaty. But it is obviously the Pentagon's objective to refine the technology to the stage of possessing an ABM capability as rapidly as possible. The test thus served as an announcement that another test is likely in the coming years that will indeed represent a treaty violation. And given the complete lack of notification to Congress about this test, it seems entirely possible that a future test, one that indisputably did violate the treaty, might occur before Congress or the public could even act to prevent it.

That the devices were not tested in an ABM mode is the Pentagon's third argument that it did not violate the ABM Treaty. Yet the test did seem to simulate a real-life ABM situation. An Aries rocket was launched as if it were an attacking missile, and it was tracked as if the intention was to intercept it. This certainly seems to me to constitute a test in the ABM mode.

There is no doubt that the test was conducted in an Asat mode, and this should be of great concern to those of us in Congress who support Asat arms control. The collision and destruction of the two satellites at the end of Friday's test clearly demonstrated an Asat capability. And as my colleagues well know, existing law prohibits tests in space of the United States Asat system so long as the Soviet Union continues its Asat moratorium. Because the language of the law specifically refers to the U.S. Asat launched from an F-15 aircraft, the test on Friday was not, strictly speaking, a violation of the law. It was, however, a clear effort to evade the intent of the law. The goal that Congress was seeking when it enacted the Asat moratorium was to prevent any further U.S. Asat tests involving targets in space. Yet the Pentagon went ahead and conducted just such a test.

That the Pentagon has taken this step to evade the law should not surprise any of us; the same tactic was taken in September 1985, when the Pentagon rushed to conduct a test of the F-15-launched Asat against a working scientific satellite. The Pentagon was so eager to complete an Asat test in space that it did so without meeting the requirements of the certification provision called for by the law at the time. The Pentagon also tried to scuttle ongoing congressional negotiations about the Asat moratorium last December by launching two target satellites, worth $20 million, just prior to enactment of the existing test restriction.

Friday's SDI test represented a close brush with the ABM Treaty and with the existing United States-Soviet moratorium on testing Asat's in space. I urge my colleagues to realize the mischief that the Pentagon is up to when it conducts such actions. It is acting in defiance of those who have negotiated arms control agreements in the past, and it is jeopardizing the opportunities for those who seek arms control agreements in the future. Friday's test was a definite setback for those of us seeking to place legal limitations on the arms race. It was a clear indication that we must be even more diligent if we are to create a legal regime that can harness the dangerous technologies that humanity has created over the past four decades.

Two news articles about Friday's test follow:

U.S. LAUNCHES DELTA ROCKET

(By R. Jeffrey Smith)

The United States regained its access to space yesterday with the successful launch in Florida of a Delta rocket carrying a classified experiment for the Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI), or "Star Wars" program.

As part of the experiment, two stages of the rocket deliberately collided with each other in space and were destroyed by explosives, sources said.

The launch, at 11:08 a.m., came on the heels of a spectacular series of six major U.S. launch failures, starting Jan. 28 with the Challenger space shuttle disaster and including the failure of a Delta rocket in May.

Yesterday's launch was normal and the rocket performed "exactly as planned" during the first moments of flight, said Hugh Harris, a National Aeronautics and Space Administration spokesman at the Kennedy Space Center.

The Defense Department also said the $150 million experiment, which lasted 2 hours and 45 minutes, was a success. Independent experts were skeptical, however, that it will significantly advance the Pentagon's long-term effort to develop a comprehensive defense against ballistic missiles, initially ordered by President Reagan in 1983.

Rep. George E. Brown Jr. (D-Calif.), who opposes the SDI, raised questions about the test's legality in the face of congressional and treaty limitations on military experiments in space. "At first glance, it would seem to evade at least the intent of the law," Brown said.

That claim was denied by the Pentagon's Strategic Defense Initiative Office, which described the experiment as basic research that will aid the development of "kinetic kill vehicles," devices capable of striking rockets and satellites at high speed in outer space. "In no manner was the experiment in violation of U.S. treaty obligations," said Lt. Col. Terry Monrad, an SDIO spokesman.

According to various sources, the experiment consisted primarily of two packages of sensors, which separated shortly after liftoff and then orbited near each other roughly 120 miles above Earth. One cluster of sensors was attached to a special device that substituted for the rocket's third stage, and the other was affixed to the rocket's second stage.

On command from the ground, they were maneuvered into orbits so that at times they crossed paths and at times they were farther than 100 miles apart. For a while, the rocket sensors observed each other and then, about an hour later, the sensors tracked a second, smaller rocket that the Defense Department launched from the White Sands Missile Range in New Mexico.

Last week, a similar rocket malfunctioned and was deliberately destroyed shortly after launch from White Sands; the accident was attributed to faulty construction by its manufacturer, Space Vector Corp.

But this time, the White Sands rocket operated flawlessly and reached an altitude greater than 100 miles in a flight that apparently lasted less than 10 minutes. The infrared sensors already in space were able to observe the plume and transmit data to Earth.

Finally, not long after the White Sands rocket burned up after reentering the atmosphere, the second and third stages of the Delta rocket were maneuvered into a collision. Both were blown into bits by a package of explosives that one carried.

The aim of the explosion was to obliterate all of the sensitive equipment on board.

Monrad and others said that military researchers will use the data they collected to evaluate the operation of the sensors and to help construct a library of missile plume pictures, both of which will aid in the design and development of future "Star Wars" weapons.

There is general agreement that the success of the effort will hinge in large measure on the United States' ability to locate intercontinental ballistic missiles and attack them shortly after launch. Missile plumes play an important role in this effort because they are extremely hot and contain many readily identifiable gases, making them much easier to detect than are the missiles.

At present, the military only has pictures of missile plumes taken from the ground, from airplanes and from satellites at high altitudes. Thus, the experiment, which was conducted at relatively low altitudes and with objects that maneuvered extremely close, apparently was able to help fill a gap in the Pentagon's knowledge.

Some critics say that it represents an extremely small advance acquired at a very high price. John Pike, a space expert with the Federation of American Scientists, said that "the problem in 'Star Wars' is to shoot a hole-in-one 10,000 times in a row"—to hit 10,000 missiles from a great distance. "Here we just spent millions of dollars comparing golf balls," he said.

In response to criticism that the experiment violated congressional and treaty limitations on space tests of antisatellite weapons and sophisticated antiballistic missile technologies, Monrad emphasized the limited scale of the experiment.

The equipment "was not capable of substituting for real antiballistic missile components," he said. Tracking was aided by a special reflecting device aboard one of the rocket stages, which would never be carried by a real missile, he said.

The missile stages or "targets" all cooperated with each other, which also was unrealistic, Monrad said. They also moved more slowly through space than a ballistic missile would, and one or both used hot, rather than cold, gases for propulsion into space. Hot gases are unusually easy to track and unlikely to be used in real missiles.

Brown questioned this reasoning. "The claim is that all of this is not yet at such a stage of refinement that it constitutes a banned test. But it is obviously aimed at getting to that stage as soon as possible," he said.

NASA officials declined comment on the military aspects of the experiment. But at a minimum, they said, it indicated that several million dollars worth of modifications made to the Delta rocket since the May accident were well spent. And, they said, it reestablished the nation's ability to conduct a successful space launch.

UNMANNED ROCKET ON SECRET MISSION LAUNCHED BY U.S.

(By William J. Broad)

CAPE CANAVERAL, FLA., September 5.—An unmanned Delta rocket carrying a secret payload for an antimissile system was fired into space today, marking a major United States success in a year plagued by catastrophe and mishap.

The secret project was the first major experiment in President Reagan's antimissile plan to be conducted entirely in space.

At 11:08 A.M., amid unusual secrecy and security, the $42 million rocket rose from pad 17B of the Cape Canaveral Air Force Station, arcing due east into a partly cloudy sky.

"WE'RE BACK IN THE GROOVE"

Ground controllers repeatedly cheered as the Delta soared flawlessly into space, ending a string of rocket failures highlighted by the explosion of the space shuttle Challenger on Jan. 28. A year ago a Delta launching would have attracted little notice.

"We're back in the groove," William A. Russell Jr., Delta Project manager at the Goddard Space Flight Center in Greenbelt, Md., said at a news conference here. He added that the rocket had put its payloads into an orbit 255 miles above the earth.

"This success is very significant," Charles D. Gray, director of expendable vehicles at the Kennedy Space Center here, said at the briefing. "We needed it for morale purposes, and the country needed it, because we've had a string of failures."

For weeks, the day and exact time of this launching had been kept secret by the Department of Defense and the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. A few details of the experiment were released in the course of the day.

Shortly after liftoff, space agency officials released a short statement saying that the Strategic Defense Initiative Organization "will be conducting a classified experiment to obtain rocket signature data" in the mission, adding that it complied with all American treaty obligations, including the Antiballistic Missile Treaty, which restricts research, development and testing of antimissile systems.

The test was meant to refine the ability to track satellites and rockets in space.

In New Mexico, more than an hour after the Delta flew into space, a 26-foot Aries rocket carrying a classified payload lifted off from the White Sands Missile Range. The Pentagon had given no advance warning of the Aries launching, which occurred at 12:40 P.M.

In Washington, Lieut. Col. Terry Monrad, an S.D.I. spokesman, said both launchings were related to the program and that the Delta payload was known as a Significant Technical Milestone Experiment.

In June an S.D.I. report to Congress described this as "a single launch device that puts two vehicles in closely related orbits," and added: "The vehicles will be maneuvered relative to each other to obtain sensor, guidance and navigation data. The experiment is a multifaceted exoatmospheric experiment involving research into the area of vehicle dynamics, guidance and sensor sciences."

A Pentagon spokesman said late today that the Delta had launched two research satellites, one a target and the other an attacker, that maneuvered around each other in space and then had a "head on" collision. The target satellite was equipped with reflectors to make it easier to track, the spokesman said.

John E. Pike, director of space policy at the Federation of American Scientists, a private group in Washington that has been critical of the antimissile plan, said the experiment "was too feeble to violate the ABM treaty." He likened today's test in space to shooting a hole in one. "If 'Star Wars' is going to work," he said of the program, "they're going to have to get 10,000 holes in one in a row," a reference to the large number of warheads and decoys that might be launched by the Soviet Union.

According to an Administration official familiar with the experiment, the attacker satellite from the Delta was also used to observe the "signature" of the Aries rocket, distinguishing between radiations from its cool rocket body and hot engine flame. Measuring the difference is important because, in theory, an antimissile weapon would track the hot flame of an enemy missile but would have to aim at and hit the cool rocket body.

MISSILE 'SIGNATURE' DATA

"They're trying to get data you can't get on the ground," said the Administration official. In the past, the Pentagon has used airplanes to obtain "signature" data from rising missiles.

At 3:45 P.M. today, the S.D.I. office in Washington released a short statement announcing the "successful completion," of the experiment. "The primary objective," it said, "was to obtain scientific data on rocket signatures during the close-in phase of a space intercept."

Today's mission, an unusual mixture of mystery and limited disclosures, was preceded by a secret countdown. Months ago a Delta launching date was publicly released by the space agency. But after a Delta rocket was blown up in May after its malfunction here, the Defense Department decided to classify any new launching date and countdown as secret. In the meantime, engineers struggled to correct the engine problems that doomed the previous Delta flight.

On Wednesday reporters around the country were given a "heads up" advisory by NASA officials to come to the Kennedy Space Center.

Around 7 o'clock this morning, NASA officials called reporters here and told them of the impending launching, although that news, they stressed, was "embargoed." At the launching site at the Cape Canaveral Air Force Station armed guards checked the badges of visitors while low-flying helicopters prowled the nearby coast for intruders or terrorists.

The 116-foot Delta stood poised on pad 17B, surrounded by dense tropical undergrowth, about a mile from the press site. Through binoculars, the S.D.I. insignia could just be made out on the side of the Delta rocket.

At 10 A.M., Hugh Harris, a space center spokesman, made the first public announcement about the secret countdown, saying it was proceeding smoothly. At 11:08, the Delta belched flame and headed for the sky since no official liftoff time had been made public, it was unclear if the launching had occurred on schedule. The possibility of delays, however, was considered great since the Delta was receiving extra close inspections in an attempt to avoid any problems.

Today's successful flight ended a string of failures that had plagued the American space program and grounded all major launching systems.

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE DONALD R. FORTIER, NATIONAL SECURITY COUNCIL

(Mr. BROOMFIELD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, this morning a memorial service was held at the Chevy Chase Presbyterian Church for a good friend and colleague, Donald R. Fortier of the National Security Council, who passed away during the congressional recess. Don had worked in and with the Congress on many issues—the most recent being a plan to aid the freedom fighters in Nicaragua.

Mr. Fortier was appointed Deputy Assistant to the President for national security affairs in December 1983. Prior to assuming that position, he served successively at the National Security Council as director of Western European and NATO affairs and Special Assistant to the President for political-military affairs. Mr. Fortier joined the administration in 1981 as Deputy Director for Policy Planning at the Department of State. In November 1982 he was awarded the Department's superior honor award for his contribution to U.S. foreign policy. Before joining the executive branch, he served as a senior staff consultant for the House Foreign Affairs Committee and had been a national security consultant to the Rand Corp. Mr. Fortier did his graduate work at the University of Chicago from 1971 to 1975, where he also served as the executive administrator of the Ford Foundation's symposium on "the role of the expert in a democracy." He received his undergraduate degree from Miami University in Oxford, OH, and his M.A. in political science and international relations at the University of Chicago, where he held a Ford Foundation scholarship.

I know I speak for every Member when I say to his wife, Alison, and his son, Graham: Don will be missed, but he will not be forgotten.

DONALD R. FORTIER

Even among the politically aware, few Americans will recognize the name Don Fortier. But for anyone who admires the rebirth of American self-confidence in foreign policy during the current administration, it is a name that should be remembered well.

Donald R. Fortier, 39, died Saturday night in Georgetown University Hospital; he had been ill with liver cancer since May. As deputy director of the National Security Council staff, he had been a key player in such initiatives as the administration's policy on Libya, the acceleration of stealth aircraft technology, the bid for Indian-Pakistani rapprochement, a nuclear non-proliferation arrangement with China and the Reagan doctrine in Latin America.

It was Mr. Fortier's talent to accomplish such things and still be known as "no ideologue." He was of course a student of Albert Wohlstetter, the consummate strategic realist; he was an alumnus of Rand Corp., a tireless Republican staff member on Capitol Hill, a drafter of the 1984 Republican platform on foreign policy and briefer for Ronald Reagan in his campaign debates. He was scarcely a man without opinions.

"Self-effacing" is, though, the adjective that springs to mind with everyone who knew him. His careful avoidance of the limelight was instrumental in his success as a consensus-builder, both within the administration and with Congress. In debilitating him, his illness also crippled the NSC machinery.

It is tragic to see such a talent struck down so quickly in the prime of life. But it is inspiring to remember that in an age of publicity and in a town of the self-important, a quiet and thoughtful man could make so large a contribution.

[From the Washington Post, Aug. 26, 1986]

Donald R. Fortier, the number-two man on the White House National Security staff, who died on Saturday at the age of 39, was not well known beyond a relatively small personal and professional circle. There was something modest, spare and tidy about the obituaries that appeared when Mr. Fortier died, which would no doubt have been just what he wanted and which also, in a way, reflected the style in which he chose to live his life. Mr. Fortier was uncommonly intelligent and discreet. He was the model staff person, and we mean that as a compliment. His involvement in government was the opposite of self-seeking. His commitment was to his work, to policy wisdom and success—not to his own image or reputation or acquisition of power.

That there are such people in Washington would not be immediatley—or, perhaps, ever—apparent to the fabled man from Mars dropping in on us without special knowledge of our ways. For it is very much in vogue these days to disparage staff people as creeps with special agendas or runaway policy makers who subvert their bosses and are unaccountable to the public or hired guns who will do any side's bidding or merely statistical evidence of the burgeoning of the federal payroll, as people gasp and sigh about how big staff has become in all three branches.

From the grousing you would not judge that there are dedicated, invaluable, self-effacing folks like Don Fortier around, but there are. We aren't meaning to suggest that Mr. Fortier, who came to the executive branch from the Hill and before that, the Rand Corporation, achieved some kind of perfection. When we observe that he sought policy wisdom, we don't mean to imply he always found it. Who does? We mean to say merely that he was in a very serious line of work and he brought a suitable degree of seriousness to it.

And he knew what was important: Mr. Fortier was perhaps best known over the years for his interest in nuclear nonproliferation; he was one of the true experts on that subject, and worked tireless to try to limit the spread of nuclear weapons around the world. His death at so young an age was a cruelty, not just to his family and friends and professional colleagues, but also to people who stood to profit from his best efforts in government—people who never knew his name.

LEGISLATION EXPRESSING DISPLEASURE AND CONDEMNATION FOR SOVIETS' TREATMENT OF NICHOLAS DANILOFF

(Mr. WORTLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. WORTLEY. Mr. Speaker, the American people, and we who represent them, are shocked by the arrest and the indictment of journalist Nicholas Daniloff.

The continuing detention of Mr. Daniloff by the KGB is reprehensible.

His indictment on trumped-up spy charges is an inexcusable farce.

Mr. Daniloff's imprisonment inhibits the free exchange of ideas and information between the people of the United States and the Soviet Union at a time when improved communications and understanding between the superpowers are essential. Intimidation of a free pass journalist must not be tolerated without protest.

Despite Mr. Mikhail Gorbachev's public statements that he wishes to improve relations with the United States, it is obvious that the Soviets are still the masters of deception within the world's international community. Mr. Gorbachev must be held directly responsible for the KGB's treacherous and deceitful behavior.

As a newspaper publisher and journalist, and one who is sworn to uphold freedom of the press as guaranteed by the first amendment to the Constitution, I consider the kidnaping of an accredited journalist as an act of terrorism, akin to outrages inflicted upon Americans by the Barbary pirates.

Today, I am introducing a concurrent resolution which expresses displeasure and condemnation upon the part of this Congress for the Soviets' arbitrary act against Mr. Daniloff.

Mr. Speaker, I call upon my colleagues in this body and in the Senate to join me in cosponsoring this concurrent resolution so that it can be enacted expeditiously and conveyed to the Soviet ambassador.

Mr. Speaker, I submit the text of the concurrent resolution for inclusion in the RECORD:

H. CON. RES. 388

Whereas the Soviet Union has arrested and indicted Nicholas Daniloff, an accredited and widely respected journalist, on trumped up charges of espionage;

Whereas the arrest of Nicholas Daniloff inhibits the free exchange of ideas and information which is vital to a better understanding between the United States and the Soviet Union;

Whereas the Soviet action undermines confidence in the good faith of Soviet leaders and their public statements calling for improved relations between the United States and the Soviet Union; and

Whereas this reprehensible action does little to promote trust or understanding between the United States and the Soviet Union at a time when such trust and understanding is vital to the progress of arms control negotiations: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Congress—

(1) condemns the arrest by the Soviet Union of Nicholas Daniloff;

(2) urges the Soviet Union to release Nicholas Daniloff immediately;

(3) holds the Soviet Union and its leader, Secretary General Michail Gorbachev, directly responsible for—

(A) all distress suffered by Nicholas Daniloff and his family during his period of imprisonment by the Soviet Union; and

(B) the severe impact such an unprincipled action must inevitably have on relations between the United States and the Soviet Union; and

(4) to demonstrate the outrage of the United States at this action, urges the President to take appropriate diplomatic and economic steps against the Soviet Union for as long as the unjust imprisonment of Nicholas Daniloff continues.

FORTY-SEVENTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE INVASION OF POLAND

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, the month of September marks the 47th anniversary of the invasion of Poland. On September 1, 1939, the forces of nazism invaded Poland from the west, and 16 days later, on September 17, the forces of communism invaded Poland from the east, turning the country into a tyrannized and persecuted nation.

The heroic and patriotic Polish people fought desperately to turn back the Nazi war machine, but the power of Hitler's army was too much for the Poles. When victory became certain, the Soviet Union decided to seize a share of the prize, and sent the Red army across the Polish frontier, annexing huge areas of Poland into the Soviet Union.

Members of the resistance movement and the Polish populace refused to betray their national honor by collaborating with the enemy, and fought bravely against the Nazi invader. The Polish nation lost close to one-quarter of her population, and the beautiful capital city of Warsaw was leveled to the ground. This destruction of Poland led the free nations of Europe to make that final decision to stop Hitler from a conquest of the entire continent.

In one of the ironic tragedies of history, Poland's people, who endured the worst of World War II, found that a new enemy had taken control of their country's destiny. The Communists quickly grabbed power at the end of the war as the Nazi forces were retreating, and ever since, the people of Poland have been subjected to this brutal and all-consuming tyranny.

Today Poles must face the daily oppression of their Communist rulers, and I join hands with the Polish people in their continuing struggle for their personal liberty and national integrity. Because of the numerous attempts of the Soviets to destroy the culture, religion, and spirit of the Poles, I added my name as a cosponsor to House Concurrent Resolution 209, a bill to urge the President of the United States to bring the rights of the Polish people to the attention of the Soviet Government. A copy of the resolution follows:

H. CON. RES. 209

Concurrent resolution asking that the President bring the rights of the Polish people to the attention of the Soviet Government

Whereas the successive governments of the Polish People's Republic have continued their repression of the natural rights of the people of that country, and have done so largely because the police and military powers of the Soviet Union require it;

Whereas the Polish regime, notwithstanding the pledges it made by signing the Helsinki accords of 1975, has done little for "the promotion of human rights", but has instead harassed and arrested citizens whose offense was to make attempts to monitor the Government's fulfillment of its international obligations under the accords;

Whereas few, if any, of the scores of formal agreements the Polish Government signed with the Solidarity free trade union have been honored; and this union which Government spokesmen in February 1981 called a permanent part of the Government structure has been declared illegal; and every kind of legal and illegal pressure is being applied to workers to join state unions organized by the Communist government;

Whereas some fifteen political and religious activists have died in police custody or under suspicious circumstances since the end of martial law, while many others have been beaten or tortured, and some who were freed in much publicized amnesties have since been reinterned; and

Whereas the Government of Poland has adopted new legal measures that make Polish civil law increasingly difficult to distinguish from martial law, including new police rights to search without a warrant, and the empowerment of courts to arrest, convict, sentence, and jail anyone of political or other crimes all within a forty-eight hour period and without a trial: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that at the November 1985 summit in Geneva, Switzerland, the President should raise with Soviet authorities at the highest level the matter of the continuing and thorough suppression of independent speech and peaceful political activity in Poland, and that by so doing the President raises and defends the principles of human rights as embodied in the Helsinki accords.

Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity on the 47th anniversary of the invasion of Poland to join with Polish Americans in the 11th Congressional District of Illinois which I am honored to represent and Americans of Polish descent all over this Nation, in their hopes and prayers for the day when the people of Poland can live in personal and economic freedom with the right to choose the course of their own destiny.

NATIONAL HOME CARE WEEK

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I am today introducing a resolution to designate beginning November 30, 1986, as "National Home Care Week." I am pleased that Representatives CLAUDE PEPPER and MATTHEW RINALDO have joined me in sponsoring this resolution. Congress has approved similiar resolutions in the past to recognize the services of home care programs and personnel, and I look forward to congressional passage once again.

As you all know, the operation and services provided by the thousands of home care agencies are an integral part of our Nation's health care delivery system. The concept of care made available through these operations recognize the individual needs of each patient and provides a valuable and respected alternative to institutionalization. For many patients in need of health care treatment, institutional care may be warranted. However, for that segment of the patient population which can be properly cared for outside the hospital or nursing home setting, effective alternatives must be offered. Home care agencies have proven very helpful and effective in responding to this need. Mr. Speaker, one of the most critical issues which face our Nation today centers around our health care system. The growth in the size of the elderly population is placing greater demands on the current system and encourages the development of a long term system to care for the elderly. In an effort to ensure adequate care for the elderly population, which is expected to total more than 30 million by the year 2000, home care agencies have helped many of the elderly to remain at home and in their communities. This offers a greater sense of independence for the patient and can be just as beneficial as any medical treatment. For this, home care agencies and the persons employed in this industry are to be commended.

The resolution I am introducing today is a very appropriate way to recognize the benefits of home care and bring greater attention to the value of this type of care. I urge my colleagues to join with me in supporting this resolution.

The resolution follows:

H.J. RES. 718

Joint resolution to designate the week beginning November 30, 1986, as "National Home Health Care Week"

Whereas organized home health care services to the elderly and disabled have existed in this country since the last quarter of the eighteenth century;

Whereas home health care is recognized as an effective and economical alternative to unnecessary institutionalization;

Whereas caring for the ill and disabled in their homes places emphasis on the dignity and independence of the individual receiving these services;

Whereas since the enactment of the medicare program including skilled nursing services, physical therapy, speech therapy, social services, occupational therapy, and home health aide services, the number of home health agencies providing these services has increased from less than five hundred to more than three thousand; and

Whereas many private and charitable organizations provide these and similar services to millions of patients each year preventing, postponing, and limiting the need for institutionalization: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week beginning November 30, 1986, hereby is designated as "National Home Health Care Week", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such week with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

CONSERVATIVE JURISPRUDENCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, I want to discuss today the most recent example we have gotten of the conservative jurisprudence that President Reagan has promised to bring to us.

We have been told that one of the hallmarks of this conservatism represented by the President is respect for the individual and in opposition to undo Government inference with individual freedoms. The President talks a great deal about the importance of restraining government, of putting checks on a government which he believes has grown too far.

It is distressing, therefore, to find that in its judicial mode, the President's brand of conservatism in fact appears to be bent on legitimizing governmental intrusion of the most inappropriate sort. I am referring most recently to an opinion issued by the U.S. Circuit Court of the District of Columbia. It is an opinion which was written by one of those judges appointed by the President of whom he is most proud, a man whom we are told might wind up on the Supreme Court, Judge Robert Bork. Judge Bork we are told, as I say, is one of the exemplars of this new conservatism.

The most recent opinion of Judge Bork tends to reaffirm the view that I have come to have, which is it will be very difficult for even the most inventive and creative of Government interveners, regulators, and interferers to come up with any extension of Government power from which Judge Bork would protect citizens. Judge Bork appears to be devoted to using his energies, and they seem to be considerable, to defending any Government assertion of power over individuals.

The case at hand is one in which several very conservative individuals by their own discription wanted to carry signs in front of the Russian and Nicaraguan Embassies. Judge Bork wrote an opinion which says it is perfectly legitimate for the Government of the United States and the District of Columbia government, which was the enforcer in this case, to prevent American citizens from insulting a foreign government.

Chief Judge Wald, who is one of those who represents what this administration likes to denigrate as a more intrusive Government philosophy, dissented very vigorously and very eloquently. He said, no, the government should not stop some conservative private citizens from carrying signs within 500 feet of the Nicaraguan and Russian Embassies.

As Judge Bork says himself, one of the criminals in this case—I guess you are a criminal if the Circuit Court of Appeals upholds the criminal conviction—I am quoting from Judge Bork:

> Mr. Waller, for example, wishes to carry a sign bearing the words "Stop the Killing" in front of the Nicaraguan Embassy.

So we have an individual who wanted to carry a sign that said "Stop the Killing" in front of the Nicaraguan Embassy.

□ 1440

Other people, according to Judge Bork, were guilty because, "They wished to carry signs critical of the Soviet and Nicaraguan Governments between 500 feet of their Embassies."

What do we get from this exemplar of the new conservative, protect individual rights jurisprudence? A ringing defense of the right of prosecutors to criminally convict people who want to carry signs within 500 feet of these embassies.

Chief Judge Wald, an appointee of the Carter administration, said, "No, it is not the business of the Federal Government to protect foreign governments from insult. Protect them from bombs, from threats, protect from violence, from the destruction or defacement of their property? Of course." To protect anybody in this society from an insult? Whatever happened to the first amendment, and how is this restraint on government when the Federal Government says, "Let us prosecute these people," and Judge Bork says, "Absolutely right. You cannot insult the Nicaraguan government within 500 feet of the Nicaraguan Embassy without our permission. We will decide."

By the way, if you wanted to carry a sign in front of the Nicaraguan Embassy saying "We love the Nicaraguan Government," if you wanted to carry a sign in front of the Russian Embassy saying, "You are right, Sahkarov is a dangerous lunatic, lock him up," then you can do that. But if you wanted to cary a sign, one individual saying, "Leave Andrei Sahkarov alone, stop persecuting this great man," you can be locked up and Judge Bork would say, "That is right; the Government has a right to do it."

Not just a right, but he says in his opinion he thinks the statute is a sensible one. Let me point out that Judge Bork himself makes the distinction in this particular law, and we are talking here about section 22-1115 of the District of Columbia Code, because we are talking about a legal situation where the law is about 50 years old. It was passed at a time when you did not have the kind of home rule we now have. I should say at this point that I recently came across this opinion. I have not yet fully gotten the results of the research I have asked to be done on it. It appears to be a District of Columbia statute. I think we ought to respect the home rule of the District of Columbia, so I do not intend to file legislation that would repeal what the District of Columbia has. I hope we can urge the District of Columbia to repeal this part of the statute and make it clear that Congress would be supportive of their doing that because section 22-1115 has two distinct parts. Part of it limits the right of people to congregate in front of an Embassy. I think that is legitimate. It can be abused, but it has a security basis. In other words, there is part of the statute that says you cannot have too many people there in front of the embassy because we have got a physical problem defending an embassy.

There is an entirely separate section that says, "and, you cannot have a single individual carrying anything offensive or insulting the dignity within 500 feet." Judge Bork himself makes it very clear they are two separate sections. He says at page 30 of his opinion, "The dissents discussion measures the statute only against the interest in security, having eliminated the interest in peace and dignity from the analysis. Since we have shown that this second interest is valid as well, we need express no judgment on whether the security interest standing alone would be sufficient to justify the constitutionality of section 22-1115."

When he says "peace" here, by the way, he is not talking about peace in the sence of preventing tumult and disorder. He is talking about serenity. He is talking about the right of an embassy not to have some nasty, controversial American who thinks free speech happens to apply all over Washington, DC, saying a rude word about the policies of the Russian or the Nicaraguan or any other government.

He reiterates this point that they are two separate issues, on page 47. "In addition to the need to ensure security, the other requirement imposed by the Vienna Convention, the maintenance of the peace and dignity of the Embassy's premises is clearly contained within section 22-1115's plainly legitimate sweep.

Let me now quote from Judge Bork, one of the exemplars of the new conservatism that we are told is going to protect individuals from being mistreated by the Government. This is a man Ronald Reagan has sent to us as a sworn upholder of the Constitution, presumably partly to keep the Government from transcending bounds and interfering with peoples' rights. Here is what he says:

> Demonstrations, even those by lone protestors, may threaten fulfillment of that obligation without necessarily posing a threat of violence.

In other words, if you are an American citizen and you are appalled by the actions of a foreign government, you may not, under penalty of criminal prosecution, freely express your viewpoint within 500 feet of the Embassy, not because of security, not because you pose any threat; no one can test the right of constituted authorities to take reasonable action to defend against physical threats. But Judge Bork is being honest here, at least.

He is saying, "wholly apart from any physical threat, we have a separate obligation to prevent you from insulting a foreign embassy, and the first amendment will have to take a back seat here to the Law of Nations."

He says, and, "We will prevent you from expressing your viewpoint." You can go and say the Embassy represents a wonderful Government but you cannot go and be critical. I think that is appalling. I think Chief Judge Wald's dissent is an eloquent affirmation of what Judge Bork was supposed to be representing: The right of citizens in this free country to act according to their own sense of what is appropriate and not be impinged upon by the Government. The courts, presumably, have some obligation to prevent, occasionally, errant governments from interfering.

Again, we are not talking about security or safety, we are talking purely about the right of a foreign government to be secure from being insulted. Judge Bork says this is not so bad, because while you cannot speak over here against the Government, you can speak somewhere else. You can go a mile away. You can go 600 feet away. He says that your right to free speech does not mean the right to choose where you are going to speak.

There are some terribly dangerous principles being enunciated by Judge Bork. I think they ought to be analyzed. If this is protection of the individual against Government intervention, God help us all when we get intervention. Because this is as intrusive and oppressive a justification for government power, not to protect anybody's life or property or safety; to prevent a foreign embassy from having its dignity ruffled by someone standing outside with a sign. Judge Bork says you can lock him up, and it is Judge Wald who dissents from that and says, "No, American citizens have first amendment rights, and when you come to this country, you better learn to live with freedom. You better learn to live with the fact that people can call you anything they want, they can engage in political controversy anywhere they want, they cannot interrupt your sleep, they cannot intrude on your property, but you cannot say I do not want to have, within my sight, on the public streets, anybody saying rude things about me."

What are the reasons for this? One, Judge Bork says, is after all, if Americans are allowed to criticize foreign governments near their embassy, that might endanger the security of Americans overseas. I think it is a disastrous mistake to allow the threat of irrational and unjustified violence against American diplomats to be used as a way to impinge on the right of Americans to speak freely.

Judge Bork says, "No, they can still speak freely, but not here and not there and not in this manner and not in that manner." It is none of the Government's business how private citizens express their freedom. It is not the legitimate business of the Government of the United States to say, "Yes, you may be critical of Nicaragua, but not here. You can say those bad things if you want to about Chile, but not in that manner. That is going to insult the Government of South Africa so please do not do that. If you do not obey us when we say please, then we can lock you up."

That is what Judge Bork is saying. That to avoid offending the sensibilities of foreign governments, we can begin to dictate to Americans how they can exercise free speech rights.

I want to emphasize, because I think people are going to have trouble believing this, we are talking about free speech. We are not talking about throwing an egg at the Embassy. We are not talking about painting something on the Embassy gate. We are not talking about trampling a blade of the Embassy's grass. We are talking about standing across the street from the Embassy with a sign. What you accomplish, of course, is you are making it less likely that the people in the Embassy will see this. Is it the business of the Government of the United States to shield people from criticism?

Judge Bork says, well, that is what the Law of Nations says. I find it a little ironic—and he is talking about this with regard to Nicaragua—he is saying, you know, we have got to obey the Law of Nations, and according to the Law of Nations, we cannot let somebody stand in front of the Nicaraguan Embassy with a sign saying "Stop the killing."

Apparently it is OK for us to send a hundred million dollars down to the Contras to shoot people in Nicaragua. How hypocritical can we be? The American Government is saying, "Oh, please, we must respect the Law of Nations." And according to the Law of Nations, you are not allowed to exercise free speech. You can shoot somebody, you can go down and plant a mine and blow up a civilian bus, and that is OK.

The World Court has said that the policy being followed by this administration, certainly with the support of this body now and the other body, is a violation of international law. So international law is not that much of a problem when you want to send a hundred million dollars a year down to blow people up, but all of a sudden the Law of Nations becomes inviolable if somebody threatens to exercise free speech.

Mr. Speaker, that comes under the category of "who is kidding whom?" It is simply not plausible for this administration to be invoking its sacred duty to the Law of Nations on behalf of the people of Nicaragua or the Government of Nicaragua or the Embassy of Nicaragua or the dignity of the Ambassador. What it is, unfortunately, is an instinct that says the Government is right.

I find this appalling in its implications for free speech. Let us understand what it says: The first amendment does not mean what it says. What ever happened to strict construction? What ever happened to looking at what the words say and applying them? Where is there in the first amendment that says, "We will make no law abridging the freedom of speech?" Where is that clause that says, "except if you are going to insult the Russian ambassador"? Because the Reagan administration found that "except," and they said, "Wait a minute, free speech is one thing, but you can't insult the Russian Ambassador where he can see it. If you want to go somewhere where he can't see it and insult him, you can do that, but we will tell you where and how. We will regulate this."

Understand again, to make the point about security, they are not banning demonstrators in front of the Embassy. You can have people stand in front of the Embassy with signs saying, "Russia is wonderful." You can have people standing there saying, "Daylight savings time is a pot." You can have people standing there saying anything. But as a side bar here from Judge Bork, maybe people will go in front of the Embassy and say bad things and they will get so excited they will rush the Embassy grounds and they will not be so well protected. I think we have an obligation to support law enforcement people. They have a very difficult job.

I think the law enforcement people who protect the embassies do a very good job. I am a little intrigued by their name. They are the Uniformed Branch of the Secret Service. It seems to me that once you are in a uniform you are no longer in a secret service, and by having a secret service it would seem to me that you undercut the principle when you put the members of that secret service in uniform, because they are not very secret. But putting that aside, they do a very good job.

If they said that what we absolutely need is a security zone of x number of feet, I would look at that, and if they were not overarguing it, I would say I would probably vote for that. But they explicitly say that is not what they are claiming.

Judge Bork says, over and above security, with no threat of violence, with one person carrying a sign, you cannot have it. He upholds that. He says that is legitimate.

Is there, then, anything from which he is prepared to protect the citizens? He is very sensitive. It is a very long opinion that he offers here. It is an opinion which debates constantly with Judge Wald's dissent. And he has a right to be sensitive because a lot of people are going to be saddened by the implications of what he says in specifics and in general.

In the specifics, again what he is saying is that with respect to your right to speak in the place and in the manner in which you choose and in which you think you are best able to express your opinion, that can be abridged by the Federal Government, not because you threaten security, not because you are going to disturb the peace, not because you are interrupting traffic, but because you might offend the dignity of some foreign diplomat.

I think the most important thing America can do for the world is to show the importance of freedom, and I think we serve ourselves very well if we say to diplomats, "Look, we are going to give you every absolute protection we can. We are even going to give you diplomatic immunity when you abuse it, which is often a necessity, but we would like you to understand what freedom means. Freedom means that anybody in this country can call you a fool or a murderer, and if you don't like that, you can respond and you can defend yourself. But that is freedom, and we don't abridge our freedom. We don't abridge it for ourselves, and we don't do it for you, and we don't think you have a legitimate interest in asking us to abridge it."

What do we say to the world when we say to them, "Oh, by the way, does it bother you if somebody has a debate outside your window?" Again, not at 3 o'clock in the morning, waking you up. "But are you offended if somebody carries a sign out there saying you do bad things to the Jews in the Soviet Union or to the Catholic Church in Nicaragua or to labor unions in Poland or to almost anybody you can think of in Chile? Are you offended by that? Well, we'll get them out of here. We will lock them up. They can't carry a sign under your window saying rude things about you. That is a violation of the Law of Nations. Of course, we may send a hundred million dollars down there to mine your harbors and blow up your roads. That is a separate subject. The Law of Nations is sometimes good and sometimes not so good."

But what kind of a message is this for a country that believes in freedom? This is what Judge Bork said is OK. Judge Bork is not the author of this. Whoever was the author of it, Senator Pittman apparently defended it. It was a congressional enactment as part of the D.C. law. But it was 50 years ago, and the first amendment has meant a lot more since then.

I guess one of the sad things about this is that Judge Bork, although he says differently, really does not appear to believe that the first amendment means anything more now than it did 50 years ago.

Anybody has a right to believe anything, but I say, "Please, don't come before us and say the Government has got a right to lock you up if you are insulting a foreign embassy because you might offend their dignity and then tell us that you are the defender of the individual against the Government."

Let us cut through this rhetoric. Of course, we have seen this before in this administration and in the viewpoint it represents. Again they like to talk about how they defend individuals against Government interference. But most recently the people who represent this administration's viewpoint on the Supreme Court gave us a majority decision in the case of Hardwick against Bowers in which the Supreme Court said that if a State wants to tell 40-year-old adults exactly what body parts they may apply to each other in the absolute privacy of their own bedroom, that is OK with them. That is another great example apparently of protecting the individual against intrusion by the Government.

What motivates people to want to do this I do not know, but to do it and then call yourself a defender of the individual against the Government just does not make any sense at all. But that is what we are getting from Judge Bork.

I hope that we will take some action on this. As I said, I do not want to interfere with the autonomy of the District of Columbia. I think the hundreds of thousands of people who live in this city have more rights than we recognize to govern themselves. On the other hand, this is not something that was adopted by the D.C. Government when it had autonomy. It is a hangover from the earlier time. At the very least, I hope they can be encouraged to take some action to get rid of it, and we might indicate that we are willing to do that.

I plan shortly to ask Members to join me in some appropriate action to deal with this matter, and I want to make it clear what I am saying. We are going to leave in place, I hope, the right of the law enforcement officials to physically protect embassies from violence, from physical abuse of their property, et cetera. But we have on the books, defended by Judge Bork, the legal exemplar of the new protect-the-citizen conservatism, a doctrine that says the Federal Government and the District of Columbia Government acting in effect as its agent can have you locked up if you insult a foreign government. They say, "If you criticize them in ways that they don't like, we will stop you from doing that in certain circumstances. If you decide that the most effective way to criticize them is to be in a certain place, then we will, at their request and maybe even not waiting for their request, lock you up, not because of the way you behave, not because you are any threat to peace or order, not because you are disorderly or disturbing the peace, but because of what you say. The U.S. Government will have you locked up because of the content of your message, because we interpret the Law of Nations to say you should not be allowed to insult a foreign government."

Mr. Speaker, I am disturbed by this—extremely disturbed. I am disturbed by the consequence. I am disturbed by the message it sends. I think American citizens ought to be free to do what they want and where they want, as long as they are not disturbing the peace or in other ways intruding on other people's right to enjoy themselves. You do not have a right to go into someone's home and interrupt them, you do not have a right to trespass on someone else's property, but in a public place, in a manner that complies with the laws involving disorderly conduct, it is certainly not right for an American citizen to be told that she or he cannot express a viewpoint because they do not like the viewpoint. And that is what they are saying. If a foreign government does not like the specific thing you say and you do it in a place where they can see you too easily, the cops will come and take you away.

That is an interference with the right of American citizens which in itself is terrible. The theory behind it is terrible. By the way, the statute in question says, only within 500 feet, but if you read Judge Bork's opinion, it could mean a 1,000 feet probably, and maybe it could happen in other ways. There is nothing in Judge Bork's opinion that says how limited this is. He says there are some limits to it. The foreign government could not shut you up completely, but nothing suggests that 500 feet is the outer reach of these kinds of limits.

So the notion is that this happens because other people find the content of your message offensive, and we are not talking about libel, we are not talking about misrepresentation, or we are not talking about verbal extortion.

What we are saying is if somebody finds the political content of your speech offensive, they can call the cops and have you locked up if you insist on continuing to say it in the place and in the manner in which you think it ought to be said. That is a terrible doctrine for a court to be upholding. It has terrible implications and when it comes from a man we are told is an example of the new conservatism that is going to protect citizens against interference, then I am discouraged and I think what it shows is the hypocrisy of that assertion.

The fact is that people like Judge Bork and others whom the President wants to put on the courts and others who are active in political support of this threaten in many, many ways, a new form of Government intrusion. They are people who want to tell you what to say, what to read and what movies to look at and when to pray and how to do a lot of other of the most intimate personal acts. I think that ought to be understood.

This pretense that this is a group of people who stand for individual freedom it seems to me is totally undercut. We have two major judicial figures here, Chief Judge Patricia Wald, appointed in the previous administration, a former official of the Justice Department, eloquently and cogently reaffirming the right of the citizens who speak without being harassed by the Government because some other government does not like the content of the speech.

American citizens being arrested in America to prevent foreign governments from being insulted, from having their dignity ruffled, I did not think most people thought that was possible. I was kind of unpleasantly surprised.

Well, it is the former Carter administration official appointed by Jimmy Carter who says, no, that is not what Government does. We have individual rights. There are limits to Government in this country, and as Judge Bork, a former Nixon administration Justice Department official and appointee of President Reagan, says no, the Government can do that if it wants to. If the Government wants to shut you up in that particular way, it can and they can tell you, well, go do it in some other way in some other fashion, because we are going to protect the dignity of foreign governments.

Mr. Speaker, that is a very dangerous attitude for those of us who believe in individual freedom. I am saddened by it.

I hope, and we are talking about some very conservative individuals who are trying to exercise their rights as Americans to show their distaste for the policies of the Russian and Nicaraguan Governments. I am sure they are going to appeal and I hope that the Supreme Court will show itself far more sensitive to the necessary limits that ought to be observed on government and to the rights of individuals than was Judge Bork in this case.

SENATE—Tuesday, September 9, 1986

(Legislative day of Monday, September 8, 1986)

The Senate met at 10 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the Honorable JAMES T. BROYHILL, a Senator from the State of North Carolina.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

Lord of life, we commend to your compassionate care Senator GARN as he enters the hospital for surgery to give his kidney to be transplanted into his daughter. Guide the surgeon and grant a successful process and recovery.

Gracious God and Father, I pray for the leadership of the Senate—Senators DOLE and SIMPSON; Senators BYRD and CRANSTON. These, your servants, are accustomed to pressure and to the exigencies of political stress. Grant to them in these weeks ahead a special dispensation of wisdom and grace, strength and energy to handle what seems like an impossible agenda. I pray for those who chair committees and subcommittees whose legislation is on the docket.

Father in heaven, You know the enormous task of legislation compounded by international incidents which weigh upon the Senate. Sensitize the awareness of the leadership to the availability of godly resources which You in Your love will provide whenever they are sought and received. Prevent the Senate from becoming a jungle filled with conflict. Guide in ways that will transform these final days into a period of extraordinary achievement and sense of accomplishment. In His name, whose love knows no bounds. Amen.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

The assistant legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, September 9, 1986.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of Rule I, Section 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable JAMES T. BROYHILL, a Senator from the State of North Carolina, to perform the duties of the Chair.

STROM THURMOND,
President pro tempore.

Mr. BROYHILL thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The acting majority leader is recognized.

SCHEDULE

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, as I think my colleagues are aware, there is now a period for the two leaders under the standing order for 10 minutes each. There is a joint congressional leadership meeting taking place at the White House this morning, and that is why neither Senator DOLE nor Senator BYRD are here. Accordingly, Senator PROXMIRE is the deputy minority leader and I am acting for Senator DOLE.

I would like the Senate to be advised that there are two special orders that have been entered into not to exceed 5 minutes each for Senator PROXMIRE, who is here, and for Senator LEVIN, and routine morning business that is not to extend beyond 10:30 a.m. this morning. Senators are, of course, permitted to speak for not to exceed 5 minutes each.

I would like to advise the Senate also on behalf of the majority leader that the Senate at 10:30 a.m. will resume consideration of H.R. 5234, the Interior appropriations bill. The Senate is going to stand in recess between the hours of 12 and 2 p.m. today for the weekly party caucuses, and then at 2 p.m. this afternoon there will be 30 minutes total debate on the Daniloff resolution and the terrorist resolution. At 2:30, by unanimous consent, the Senate will proceed to vote on the Daniloff resolution, to be immediately followed by a vote on the terrorist resolution.

The majority leader would like me to advise that the Senate could turn to the consideration of H.R. 5233, the Labor, Health and Human Services appropriations bill and that rollcall votes will occur during today's session of the Senate.

Mr. President, I have no further announcements.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, will the distinguished acting majority leader yield?

Mr. HEINZ. I am pleased to yield to my friend from Wisconsin.

Mr. PROXMIRE. As I understand it, the Senator has indicated that the Labor, Health and Human Services appropriations bill will be up, not the Interior appropriation bill, is that correct?

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to respond, this morning at 10:30 we will take up the Interior appropriations bill. But the majority leader has advised that sometime today we can be expected to turn to the Labor-HHS appropriations bill. I assume that that means the leader hopes to complete action on the Interior bill.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Is it possible that that might be done without completing action? The reason I ask is I think the Interior bill will take considerable debate and discussion. There is at least one amendment I will offer. There are other amendments. There are Senators, I understand, who will not be here today but tomorrow who are very anxious to discuss this Interior appropriations bill. So I wondered if the distinguished acting majority leader has any information on whether or not it might be possible to go to the Health and Human Services bill or whether we will stay with the Interior bill?

Mr. HEINZ. I say to the Senator from Wisconsin that it is certainly possible the Senate could lay aside the Interior appropriations bill and proceed for a period of time or even to the conclusion of the Labor-HHS bill, although that would be unlikely as well; that bill is often very time consuming. So that is entirely possible, but that is a decision the majority leader will obviously have to make later on today.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MINORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The acting minority leader is recognized.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Thank you, Mr. President.

PUBLIC OPINION MAY YET SAVE ARMS CONTROL

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, there is one simple truism about American government. It is that the President, and the President alone, as the Commander in Chief, must be the sole force in control of this Nation's military forces. Why did the Founding Fathers make the President the "Commander in Chief?" Possibly, an immediate reason was the presence of the first President as the great commander in chief of our Armed Forces during our successful revolution, in the person of George Washington. Was that all? No, indeed. There was another obvious logical reason. There was no other force that could or should share this power. What other force could serve as Commander in Chief? The Supreme Court? The Congress? An effective military force must have a single commander. It must be one person with total responsibility.

To an only slightly lesser extent, the President must exercise the prime control of the Nation's foreign policy. Why? For the same reason the country needs a single person as commander in chief of the military forces. The Nation must usually speak with a single voice in foreign affairs.

What should be the President's role, then, in negotiating arms control treaties? Obviously, the President must once again be the dominating force. Arms control represents a combination of control and direction of our military forces and negotiations with foreign powers. So it seems both logical and necessary that the President must be in charge.

If all this is true, what happens when public opinion, the dominant force in this democracy, strongly favors arms control and the President does not advance it? This Senator concluded years ago that arms control must fail under these circumstances. This Senator may have been wrong. The President may be losing his grip on arms control. President Reagan is being challenged by the House leadership now as no preceding President ever has been.

After 5½ years, the administration has been strong in its rhetoric, but it has accomplished nothing in advancing arms control. It is worse. The administration has presided over the end of both Strategic Arms Limitation Treaties—SALT I and SALT II. It has taken dead aim—and I mean dead aim—at the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty which prohibited both superpowers from building antimissile systems. The administration has even made the construction of a total antimissile system, also known as the Strategic Defense Initiative, or star wars, as its No. 1 military priority. What does this mean? That means the prime objective of the administration's military policy is to end the ABM treaty. So what remains from this arms control debacle? Literally nothing—not one major treaty restraining nuclear arms is left from the series of promising beginnings that emerged from the dawn of the nuclear age.

How can this happen in a democracy where public opinion is supposed to be supreme? How can this happen in this Republic of the people, by the people, and for the people? After all, the American people have overwhelmingly indicated that they want arms control. Don't the people have any recourse if the man they elect as their President brings arms control to a dead halt? Until a few weeks ago, I would have said that, as a practical matter, the American people are helpless in those circumstances. They have to patiently wait until the next Presidential election. Then they can try to elect a President pledged to make arms control as a means of achieving nuclear peace in the world as his top priority.

But now, I am not so sure. On three issues, the House of Representatives has pushed through arms control measures over strong Presidential opposition. The House has insisted on cutting funds for antisatellite development as long as the Soviets refrain from further antisatellite development. The House did this after the President refused to negotiate treaties with the Soviet Union to stop the development of antisatellite weapons. Similarly, the House has pushed ahead with provisions in funding bills that would deny the expenditure of funds to equip bombers with nuclear warheads in violation of the SALT II treaty unless there were proven violations of a similar nature by the Soviet Union of the treaty.

Finally, and most spectacularly, the House has proposed to shut down funding for nuclear weapons explosions for 1 year, as of January 1, 1987, provided the Soviet Union also stops nuclear weapons tests as of January 1, 1987, and provided the Soviet Union agrees to the deployment of seismic monitoring stations throughout the Soviet Union to verify Soviet compliance. The House Armed Services authorization bill that carries these arms control provisions must go to conference with the Senate. The conferees may drop the provisions or sharply reduce their potency. If not, the House and Senate may stalemate. The conferees might proceed without an armed services authorization in 1987. In that event, the House will still have an opportunity to attach restrictions on antisatellite funding or in providing appropriations for procurement or deployment that would violate SALT II or in providing funds for nuclear weapons tests. Do these actions by the House really take the arms control role away from the President? At least by flexing its spending muscles, Congress has put the most effective pressure yet on the President to move toward some significant arms control progress, at long last, with the Soviet Union.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the minority leader be reserved for his use later in the day and that my time be taken out of my regular order.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR LEVIN

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senator from Michigan is recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes.

Mr. LEVIN. I thank the Chair.

THE MYTH THAT TAX REFORM CANNOT MEAN DEFICIT REDUCTION

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, yesterday, in stating my opposition to the conference report on the tax reform legislation, I focused on the myth that this tax bill is unambiguously good news for the average American taxpayer. In fact, more than 15 million average Americans would get tax increases under the proposal.

Today, I would like to view things from a different perspective, that of deficit reduction. Simply put, it is a myth that tax reform cannot help us reduce the deficit. The bill is called revenue neutral, which implies that we would not use the revenues generated by loophole closing, and the revenues generated by a minimum tax on profitable corporations and wealthy individuals who are sheltering all their income—revenue, that is, from tax reform—to reduce the deficit. That view is neither prudent nor popular. And it would mean more than foregoing an opportunity for deficit reduction. It would make deficit reduction more difficult to achieve in the future and more unfair and harsher whenever it is achieved.

Many speeches have been given in this Chamber on the dangers of huge Federal budget deficits continuing year after year. The problem is well known. Suffice it to say now that the deficits present a clear and present danger to our economic growth. They contribute to the trade deficit, the effects of which are seen most strikingly in our agricultural and manufacturing sectors. The huge budget deficits are also an economic time bomb, because so much of our budget deficits are financed out of foreign borrowing. If the political or economic winds change, we could find ourselves with a continuing huge budget deficit but without the foreign inflow of cash to sustain it. The result would be higher interest rates, as the demand for deficit financing stayed the same while the available supply of borrowable funds shrank. Finally, the continuing huge budget deficits and the interest payments on them use up funds which could be more productively used to protect and improve our quality of life.

With the huge budget deficits at the core of the economic problems facing us, it is more than ironic that the tax reform bill, which the conference committee has now agreed to, does nothing to help with that situation. Knowing this—that so vast an effort as tax reform has as its affirmative goal to do nothing to improve our deficit problem over the next few years—makes the words of the chairman of the Budget Committee, Senator DOMENICI, during the debate on the Senate bill ring in my ears: "What a pity. What a pity," he said.

Mr. President, we can do otherwise and must do otherwise.

We must confront, first of all, an impression that a revenue-neutral tax reform bill does not raise revenues. In fact, this bill raises tens of billions of dollars in revenues from corporations and individuals. For many of them, it will result in a net tax increase. So, again, this bill does include revenue increases, and, for many corporations and individuals, actually includes net tax increases. The fact that it also includes tax cuts for others, and balances out to no net gain in revenue, should not mask the fact that it includes revenue increases for tens of millions of individuals and thousands of corporations. Therefore, an argument that there must be a revenue-neutral tax reform bill because we are against tax increases can only be made by someone who is not familiar with this bill. In a very real sense, the issue in tax reform is not whether to make changes in the Tax Code which would increase revenues. The issue is what to do with the tens of billions of dollars in revenues that tax reform will raise from some. Do we cut taxes for others or reduce the deficit?

Second, there is a contention that by definition tax reform must be revenue neutral. Reality—and history—are to the contrary. In 1982, the House and the Senate passed and the President signed the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act. It was a tax reform bill and it was not revenue neutral. Rather, it called for raising net revenues of more that $200 billion over 5 years.

Third, insisting on a revenue-neutral tax reform bill ignores the reality that if we are going to deal with the budget deficit in a meaningful and lasting way, then there will have to be a combination package of further spending cuts and increased revenues. We need increased revenues to reduce the deficit if we are to avoid reducing it by spending cuts alone involving unacceptably large reductions in domestic and defense programs.

The only way to increase revenues without imposing new tax burdens on middle- and low-income people is through a version of tax reform which has as its cornerstone an effective minimum tax on profitable corporations and wealthy individuals who have been sheltering all of their income and paying nothing in taxes. The new revenues from such a minimum tax, affecting not more than 5 percent of the taxpayers, can then be used to reduce the deficit. Put another way, a tax reform bill should have as its goal raising revenues to reduce the deficit in a way that eliminates the need for imposing new tax burdens on average Americans. Unfortunately, the reality of the tax reform bill reported out by the conference committee is that it not only would impose increased taxes on more than 15 million average Americans, it also would set the stage for imposing new taxes on them and on the rest of our people as well. Why is that? Because if all the revenue from tax loophole closing is going to be soaked up by the uneven tax cuts proposed by the bill, then in looking for additional revenue for deficit reduction, we will be forced to turn to regressive ways to generate revenue: Perhaps a national sales tax or increased excise taxes, or possibly increased user fees. Although generating new revenue through excise taxes and the like might make deficit reduction possible, it would impose taxes on many of the very people who are supposed to benefit from this tax reform bill and who are among the least able to shoulder additional revenue burdens.

Fourth, the conference report is represented as being revenue neutral over 5 years. The reality is that from 1988 through 1991 this bill would add to the deficit by $11 billion. This is because the language adopted by the Senate in the Domenici-Gramm amendment was dropped in conference. That amendment basically said that the $11 billion revenue windfall in 1987 could not be used for reducing the deficit in 1987, but rather should be counted against the bill's shortfall of $11 billion from 1988 to 1991. Senator PACKWOOD himself, in speaking in favor of the Domenici-Gramm amendment during the debate on the Senate bill, said:

> We do not want to attempt some phony deficit reduction with phony figures. The fact that this bill raises some money in the early years, drops in the middle years, and comes back in the end years may encourage Congress to use it in an attempt to meet our deficit projections of last year and in essence say that we shall worry about 1988 in 1988—let's just take the money now and worry about the devil next year * * * I very much support this amendment * * * this bill should not be used as an artificial vehicle to attempt to get us over a hurdle next year.

Those are Senator PACKWOOD's words.

> This bill should not be used as an artificial vehicle to attempt to get us over a hurdle next year.

But by dropping the Domenici-Gramm amendment in conference, it is exactly this kind of artificial deficit reduction for which we are setting ourselves up.

Now, some may say that it is inconsistent to argue that we should use tax reform to reduce the deficit generally but not use the $11 billion to reduce the deficit in 1987. However, there is no inconsistency at all. The goal of using tax reform revenues for deficit reduction should be to provide for meaningful and lasting deficit reduction. Using the $11 billion in 1987 would be deficit reduction for year one and a deficit increase in years two through five. It would be using a windfall in a way that would create a shortfall. The goal of using tax reform revenues to reduce the deficit is to help clean up the budgetary mess we are in. Using the first year windfall against the first year deficit reduction target in Gramm-Rudman would dig us into a deeper hole.

Finally, there is an impression that this bill must be revenue neutral because the people want it that way. In reality, however, there is strong evidence to the contrary. Early this year, a nationwide poll indicated that by a 3 to 1 margin the public supported using revenues from loophole closing and a minimum tax for deficit reduction instead of for tax cuts. The public knows that common sense lies in making the Tax Code fairer and reducing the deficit in one stroke.

Mr. President, our economy is living on borrowed time just as much as our deficit is being financed out of borrowed money. Everyone knows that action taken sooner will be less painful than action taken later. Tax reform should be used as a vehicle for meaningful deficit reduction. The conference report foregoes that opportunity and, even worse, would make deficit reduction more difficult. The Senate should not add its stamp of approval to that approach.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business with statements therein limited to 5 minutes each.

TERRORISM

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I take the floor to comment about the recent acts of terrorism involving the Pan-Am plane in Pakistan and the brutal murders of the worshipers in the synagogue in Istanbul.

I have communicated with the President urging him to take action under legislation which has passed the Congress and which was signed into law by the President on August 27 to move with our allies in the international field and to set up Nuremberg-type criminal prosecutions to deal with the problem of international terrorism. This is a bill which this Senator had introduced, was incorporated into legislation which reached the President and, as I say, was signed into law by the President on August 27.

It is my view that the only way in the long run to deal effectively with the problem of international terrorism is to have joint action by the allies to move in a Nuremberg-type prosecution.

We have the precedent of the Nuremberg trials where the war crimes committed by the Nazis were defined as international crimes against humanity. Those prosecutions were successful. It is this kind of joint and coordinated activity, Mr. President, which I believe would be an effective response to terrorism on the international level.

It strikes this Senator that there may be more than coincidence with the incidents in Pakistan and in Istanbul and there ought to be an investigation to determine if there is any connection between those two incidents.

Mr. President, there is another provision of the legislation which was signed into law on August 27 which I urge be acted on, and that is another aspect of legislation which I have introduced which makes it a violation of U.S. law for an American citizen to be the victim of an attack, maiming, or murder anywhere in the world. I was disturbed that there was no violation of U.S. law when our citizens were brutally murdered last December 27 at the Rome and Vienna airports. And that led to a new press for legislation I had first introduced September 25, 1984, which would make that a violation of U.S. law.

Mr. President, I believe that the Government of the United States ought to act in a very forceful way against terrorism until there is an international mechanism to deal with the problem of terrorists. This is authority under international law to apprehend criminals in the international scene with or without the cooperation of the nation which may harbor criminals.

In the case of Ker v. the United States, a landmark decision by the Supreme Court of the United States, which established authority for this proposition, Ker was under a criminal charge in the State of Illinois and had fled to Peru. Illinois authorities went to Peru, took him into custody—you might call it an abduction—without any international extradition, without any consent by the Peruvian Government, and brought him to Illinois for trial. The case went to the Supreme Court of the United States, which said those procedures were appropriate. Ker was appropriately brought back to Illinois for trial and conviction, and his conviction was upheld.

That principle has been upheld repeatedly in the Federal courts in the United States and one Supreme Court decision written by Justice Hugo Black, a noted libertarian.

We have the President of Israel going to Argentina bringing Eichman back for trial.

Mr. President, it would be my preference that we proceed through extradition wherever that is possible. But I believe that the Government of the United States must keep a close watch on what is done against international terrorism where other nations have the jurisdiction.

I frankly have been encouraged to see the Pakistan officials promise to prosecute the terrorists vigorously, and to seek the death penalty. I believe that the death penalty is appropriate when you deal with horrendous kinds of criminal violent conduct like hijacking, where hundreds of lives are put at risk, or when many lives are taken which was the incident in Pakistan. I believe it is regrettable that the Congress of the United States has not legislated the death penalty for acts of terrorism and for any hijacking where mass murders are involved.

And it is not easy to get legislation through this body, unfortunately, because of the filibuster incidents.

So, we will await the action by the Pakistani Government. But I believe we should keep a close eye on it, and it is good that we have issued protection warrants out of the U.S. courts to see that the terrorists are brought to trial and are brought to justice in an appropriate way.

I recall the incident in Teheran not too long ago where two U.S. officials were murdered, and no action as yet has been taken against those terrorists. I recall, too, the incident of the Achille Lauro where the Egyptian airliner was forced down by United States fighter pilots in our effort to apprehend those individuals with a view to bringing them to the United States for trial, prosecution, conviction, and punishment, and then the Italians gained jurisdiction over Abu Nidal's principal confederate, and four other individuals.

That case was mishandled. Nidal's confederate was let go. And four other terrorists who were brought to trial were not treated as harshly as they ought to have been.

Mr. President, it would be strong action by the United States to apprehend and take into custody terrorists in jurisdictions without proceeding through extradition, but I believe that to be fully warranted by the threat which international terrorism forces pose to the world and the threat which international terrorism poses to the citizens of the United States. Certainly, a surgical action which had a moderate amount of force would be much less interventionist than the action which this country appropriately took against Libya. I believe, Mr. President, that we ought to try first diplomacy, then economic sanctions, and then we ought to try the use of force in the most moderate manner possible to try to identify terrorists, where we have warrants of arrest, where we have indictments, where we have those legal actions supported by competent evidence, and if necessary, to take terrorists by means such as upheld by the Supreme Court of the United States in Ker v. Illinois, and that is what ought to be done.

The difficulty is that the attention span is limited. We see the terrorist attack in Pakistan, and we see a terrorist attack in Istanbul at the synagogue. We are outraged. But then other events come into fore and crowd out those matters. It is going to take a full court press by the U.S. Government taking the lead on the problem of international terrorism. It has become a way of waging war where only the terrorists are at war. And with these incidents freshly before us I have urged the President to act under the provision of law which calls for Nuremberg-type prosecutions. The Secretary of State and the Attorney General have both said on the records in hearings, first Secretary of State Shultz in the Foreign Operations Subcommittee and later Attorney General Meese before the Judiciary Committee, that they approve of the use of moderate force to take terrorists into custody now that those acts are violative of specific legislative enactments of the Congress of the United States—in 1984 the Omnibus Crime Control Act on hijacking and hostagetaking, and now the broader legislation which was signed into law on August 27.

This afternoon this body will be considering a sense-of-the-Senate-resolution. But I wanted to make these comments since we had a little bit of free time here this morning.

I thank the Chair. I yield the floor.

AID TO THE WEEKLIES

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I have been extremely pleased at the response to the Rural Newspaper Preservation Act, S. 2723, which I introduced on behalf of Senators ABNOR, ANDREWS, BURDICK, GRASSLEY, HAWKINS, and MURKOWSKI. Especially helpful was the September 2 editorial in the Anchorage Times strongly supporting our efforts.

The editorial is, of course, gratifying. But, important too is that it is a positive reflection on the Anchorage Times, its publisher, and editorial board. It is an example of why the Anchorage Times is one of the giants of the Alaska press—the legislation they endorse primarily benefits their competitors, the weekly newspapers throughout the State of Alaska.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have the entire text of the September 2 editorial printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AID TO THE WEEKLIES

For most small businesses an increase in postal rates makes little impact on the bottom line of the ledger pages, Not so the many small rural newspapers around the country.

In Alaska, where a weekly newspaper's primary distribution area can cover thousands of square miles, last year's rate increase caused enough concern among publishers to prompt them to appeal to the state's congressional delegation for relief.

In response, Sens. Ted Stevens and Frank Murkowski, along with Rep. Don Young, jointly sponsored and introduced the "Rural Newspaper Preservation Act," which offers relief in the form of reduced postal rates for publications with a circulation of 20,000 or less.

Said Sen. Stevens: "These small newspapers play a crucial role in the rural areas of America, and in many cases they are the sole source of local news and essential information. As such, they are the bedrock upon which our information system rests, and their importance to their communities and the nation is without question."

We concur. And with help from Washington, these voices will continue to be heard.

HARLEY M. DIRKS

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, on August 28, Mr. Harley M. Dirks died.

After nearly 10 years of struggling against cancer, he finally succumbed. That he battled so courageously, for so long, serving others even in the midst of great pain, was and is an inspiration to us all.

As many of my colleagues will recall, Harley Dirks served as a professional staff member of the Committee on Appropriations from January 1965 to December 1976, most notably as the clerk of what was then known as the Labor, Health, Education, and Welfare Subcommittee under the chairmanship of our former colleague, Senator Warren G. Magnuson. Those were the years when the Congress began to place a high priority on the areas of health research and disease prevention and treatment. For the strides we have taken in those areas thus far, and for the seeds of accomplishments yet to come, we can thank men like Harley Dirks.

After he left the committee, Mr. Dirks worked with the American Medical Association for a time, and eventually created his own consulting firm on health issues. Even as he fought his toughest battles with the disease that would eventually kill him, he did not slacken in his contributions to our process.

Mr. President, all of us have our crosses to bear, but few of us bear one so heavy, or with as much courage, as did Harley Dirks.

On behalf of the members and staff of the Appropriations Committee, I want to express my deep gratitude and admiration for the contributions and courage of Harley Dirks, and extend my sympathy to his family .

BUSINESS MUST LEAD THE WAR ON DRUGS

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, today I wish to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a short article recently distributed by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States entitled "Business Must Lead the War on Drugs."

I wanted to call attention to this piece in order to applaud the chamber for urging that business "take the lead in the campaign against drug abuse in our society." The chamber recognizes and points out the tremendous toll which is taken each year in hours of lost productivity, increased absenteeism, rising medical costs, workplace accidents and employee theft. Even more importantly, the tremendous influence wielded by business leaders makes it imperative that they become immersed in the effort to banish drugs from our culture today.

I have written to Richard Lesher, president of the chamber, to congratulate him on the chamber's stance, and to urge him to forge ahead with specific programs on behalf of business leaders. I have suggested that he begin by enlisting the aid of the National Association of Manufacturers and the Business Roundtable. Drug education programs must be instituted as soon as possible, in order that an impact may be felt during the upcoming school year.

I have been working with business leaders in Pennsylvania to plan a program of drug education seminars directed to age groups ranging from elementary school through high school. Our children are becoming exposed to drugs at increasingly earlier ages—estimates are that the age at which a child must take a decisive position on drugs is as young as 11. I hope that plans like I am working to develop for Pennsylvania's youth will be replicated nationwide through the efforts of various business groups.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article by the chamber of commerce be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BUSINESS MUST LEAD THE WAR ON DRUGS

"Oh God, that men should put an enemy in their mouths to steal away their brains."

Shakespeare was referring to alcohol, but his anguished cry could apply even more aptly to heroin, cocaine and other illegal drugs that are running rampant in our society today.

The recent deaths of two prominent young athletes have underscored the hazards of drug abuse, focusing the nation's attention on what can only be described as an epidemic.

This is a grave crisis that will not yield to government action alone. The Reagan administration is doing all it can to stem the flow of drugs into this country; the first lady devotes practically all of her public life to educating young people about drugs; and government agencies at the state and local level are applying herculean efforts to the problem.

All of which seems to have no more effect than spitting on a forest fire. The grim truth is that the war on drugs is being lost and no turnabout is possible until every sector of society—schools, businesses, churches, social groups, charities, all of us—acknowledge the threat and join hands with government to deal with it.

Business in particular must shoulder a major share of the responsibility. By some estimates, the direct cost of drug abuse to business is over $60 billion a year, measured in lost productivity, increased absenteeism, rising medical costs, more workplace accidents, and stealing by employees desperate to support their expensive addictions.

More importantly, business bears an obligation to society that transcends its economic interests. Business people wield significant power and influence in their communities. They are looked to for leadership in setting standards of personal behavior and participation in public affairs.

This is not a role that all business people seek or enjoy, but it is ours whether we want it or not. It is imperative that business people take the lead in the campaign against drug abuse in our society.

We must begin with a concerted effort to eliminate drugs from the workplace. It will not be easy and our efforts are certain to stir up a hornet's nest of controversy. But our nation, and especially our young people, face a great peril that will not yield to cautious measures.

I am certain that when business gets out front on this issue, other groups and organizations will rally to our cause and work with us. I am certain also that government officials at all levels are eager to work with us in every way they can to help rid our country of this pestilence.

We have no alternative but to commit ourselves to this cause and resolve to see it through.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, what is the pending business?

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS, FISCAL YEAR 1987

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 5234) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987, and for other purposes.

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill.

Mr. McCLURE addressed the Chair.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho is recognized.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, the fiscal year 1987 Department of the Interior and Related Agencies Appropriations bill as reported by the Appropriations Committee, and as scored by the Budget Committee, proposes new budget authority totaling $7,732,277,000. This bill represents a decrease in new budget authority of $464.5 million below the House passed level and an increase of $1,059 million above the budget request.

At this level, this bill is just below its allocation in budget authority and outlays as required by Deficit Control Act, which is $600 million below the fiscal year 1986 level. To get to this level, the committee was forced to take action that is very controversial. This bill mandates the sale of the Naval Petroleum Reserves in fiscal year 1987 and requires that the first payment be received before the end of the fiscal year in an amount of at least $200 million.

While the budget resolution assumes sale of the reserves in fiscal year 1988, I question whether such a provision would be approved by the Congress in a free-standing piece of legislation. Quite frankly, it is unlikely that the provisions requiring the sale will be approved by the Conference Committee, but the leeway provided by offsetting appropriations by the amount of receipts from the sale was necessary in order to get the Interior bill to the floor within our allocation.

When the committee voted on allocations, it was made very clear that, to the extent possible, new allocations would be assigned when each subcommittee had a better idea what their funding requirements are. It is my hope that as work continues in the Senate and in conference with the House on appropriations bill, some adjustment in allocations can be made to bring the Senate committee allocations closer to those of the House subcommittees.

Mr. President, Members of the Senate have requested over 400 amendments to the Interior appropriations bill, most of which sought to add money. We have made every effort to fund as many of these as requests as possible within existing budget constraints. I am sure every Senator in this body can think of other projects that are worthy of funding. Since we are right at our allocation, amendments which seek to add funds may require offsetting reductions in other areas.

Mr. President, I would ask that there be included in the RECORD a table detailing the actions of the committee on the Interior appropriations bill.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

1/ FY 1985 enacted amount excludes $459,190,000 appropriated in FY 1984 Supplemental for FY 1985 SPR program.

Mr. McCLURE. I would also like to point out that the agencies and activities funded by this bill will generate nearly $10 billion in receipts to the Federal Government in fiscal year 1987. With the exception of the funds provided to the Internal Revenue Service, this bill raises more revenue than any other appropriations bill.

With those comments, I would turn the floor over to the distinguished ranking minority member for any opening statements he may have.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I thank my distinguished colleague from Idaho and say once again it has been a pleasure to work on this bill with him.

We are partners in this bill, also on the energy and water bill, and we have worked through the years in great harmony. It is truly a great pleasure to work with him.

Mr. President, as our distinguished chairman pointed out, we are right at our 302(b) limits on both budget authority and outlays. The House, moreover, is some $400 million higher than we are. In order to get to those 302(b) allocations we had to do something which is really very silly, and that is propose the sale of the Elk Hills Oil Reserve. The sale of the Elk Hills Oil Reserve is the wrong thing to do at most any time in my view, and clearly the wrong to do today, because oil is never going to be lower, at least we do not think so, than it is today. It is likely to be much higher in future years.

Moreover, if we sold it under the extreme conditions of today, that is, sold it, in effect, in a fire sale where it was required under the budget to be sold as opposed to having time to negotiate it and having the ability to turn down a reasonable offer, then undoubtedly we would get a much better price for the Elk Hills Oil Reserve.

The point of the matter is, Mr. President, both I and the distinguished chairman strongly believe that that which we have proposed in this bill is the wrong thing to do, that is, to sell the Elk Hills Oil Reserve. If that is so, why in the world did we do it?

Well, because we had to, in effect, Mr. President, because our alternative would have been to go to conference with the House, which is already $400 million higher than we are, and this would have made them $600 million higher than we are. In the meantime, if we got our 302(b) allocation increased, as we think it is absolutely essential and necessary that we do, then we would be dealing only with the House projects and not at all with the Senate projects.

So, in effect, Mr. President, what we have done is used a bit of smoke and mirrors by proposing something that we neither believe nor expect to survive, that is, the sale of the Elk Hills Oil Reserve, in order to give us some ability to put in Senate projects, or should I say to bargain over Senate projects, when we go to the conference committee.

I think most of the Members of the Senate would agree with that.

Let me say, Mr. President, in the final analysis we do not expect to maintain that provision of the sale of the Elk Hills Oil Reserve. We expect to drop that in conference because we do oppose that. I say that in advance so that those Members of the Senate who look at that provision in isolation and who agree that it should not be there would, I hope, be constrained to let us keep it in there until we have reached the conference and take it out there.

If we do not get the ability, Mr. President, to increase our 302(b) allocation, and must, in fact, have to cut an additional $200 million from this budget, it is going to be very difficult. It is going to involve things like closing down some national parks—and I do not mean Yosemite or Yellowstone but perhaps some of our less important ones. It may be, for example, and literally this is true, to perhaps close the Washington Monument a couple of days a week. You say, "That is silly."

Well, look at this budget and look at the extent to which it has already been cut and you will realize why I make such a statement.

In effect, this is a plea, Mr. President, in advance to those who set 302(b) allocations, and, indeed, the whole Senate in that process, to let us have the additional $200 million under 302(b). When that happens, we can at least maintain what we have in the bill right now because surely the Elk Hills sale will be dropped in conference.

With that, I yield the floor, Mr. President.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I thank my distinguished colleague from Louisiana. As is usually the case, he stated with great clarity and great force the dilemma which we face and the way in which we have been able to accommodate the real budget requests and demands and still meet the budget restrictions.

It is also absolutely essential to recognize that the bill passed by the other body and action taken in our subcommittee have very, very large differences.

Under the budgetary procedures, to avoid points of order in both bodies, we have to put some maneuvering room into the bill. Otherwise, it would be subject to points of order here and points of order in the House of Representatives and we would end up with a bill that would be nearly half a billion dollars less than the bill before us now.

To the many people who are looking only at the total budget balances and deficit reductions, they would say, "What is bad about that?"

This bill encompasses literally hundreds and hundreds of separate items, and in order to get down to the allocation without something like the naval petroleum reserve sale, to give us room to get to the conference and come out with a reasonable compromise between points of view on individual issues. Otherwise, we would be doing some very irrational things such as the Senator from Louisiana has suggested. Whether it would be that particular one of closing down the operations of the Washington Monument or something else that would be equally dear to someone else's heart, I think it is certainly very, very obvious that we are at the point after several years of budget restraint where this appropriations measure has gotten to the point where we are no longer talking about cutting fat, but we are cutting into the sinew and down to the bone in some areas that the public would simply not tolerate having cut.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendments be considered and agreed to en bloc, except the committee amendment after the colon on line 2, page 12, through line 5, page 13.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the committee amendments, except the committee amendment after the colon on line 2, page 12 through line 5, page 13, are considered and agreed to en bloc.

The excepted committee amendment is as follows:

: Provided further, That for expenses necessary to carry out the mission of the National Park Service for a period of time not to extend beyond fiscal year 1987, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to charge park entrance fees for all units of the National Park System of an amount not to exceed $3.00 for a single visit permit as defined in 36 CFR 71.7(b)(2) and of an amount not to exceed $7.50 for a single visit permit as defined in 36 CFR 71.7(b)(1): Provided further, That the cost of a Golden Eagle Passport as defined in 36 CFR 71.5 is increased to a reasonable fee but not to exceed $25.00 until September 30, 1987: Provided further, That for units of the National Park System where entrance fees are charged the Secretary shall establish an annual admission permit for each individual park unit for a reasonable fee but not to exceed $15.00, and that purchase of such annual admission permit for a unit of the National Park System shall relieve the requirement for payment of single visit permits as defined in 36 CFR 71.7(b): Provided further, That funds derived from increasing National Park Service entrance fees pursuant to this Act shall be credited to the Operation of the National Park System appropriation account and shall be available, without further appropriation, for expenditure as determined by the Director of the National Park Service, first, to defray the cost of collection; second, for maintenance, interpretation, research, and resources management at collecting unit; and third, for maintenance, interpretation, research, and resources management at all units of the National Park System during fiscal year 1987.

Mr. McCLURE. I ask unanimous consent that the bill as thus amended be regarded as original text for the purpose of amendment provided that no points of order shall be considered to have been waived by reason of agreement to this order.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GORTON addressed the Chair.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, having listened to the opening statements of both the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee and the distinguished ranking minority member, I want to express my sincere gratitude to each of them on this difficult time in which so many appropriations for important projects are being cut, for their thoughtfulness and generosity to me and to the junior Senator from Washington in dealing with specific requests which we have made.

□ 1100

Mr. President, I wish to express my strong support for several specific provisions in the 1987 Interior appropriations bill that pertain to the U.S. Forest Service.

I heartily endorse the committee's inclusion of over $13 million for the Mount St. Helens National Volcanic Monument. The bulk of that money, over $8 million, will be used to improve and reconstruct roads 25, 51, and 30 which provide important visitor access to the monument. Already, the Forest Service has experienced a great deal of visitation to the monument from tourists from every State in America, as well as from around the world. The reconstruction will make the roads safer for larger recreational vehicles and make it easier for tourists to visit Mount St. Helens from other attractions in the State such as Mount Rainier. Two million dollars will go toward the operation and maintenance of the monument. This amount will ensure that the Forest Service will be able to operate the new visitor center at Silver Lake when it opens this fall. The remainder of the funds will provide for the construction of a new headquarters facility, and for trails and recreational facilities. All of these projects have been identified in the comprehensive plan for the monument and are critical components of the monument's development as a tourist facility.

In addition, something which we were not able to succeed in doing last year is included in this bill.

I applaud the committee's inclusion of $1.5 million to combat a severe spruce budworm infestation in the Wenatchee National Forest near Yakima, WA. In just 4 years, this infestation has spread from 12,000 acres to over 100,000 acres. There has been particularly severe damage around Rim Rock Lake, a heavily used recreational area. Spruce budworm infestations cause the health of the forest to decline to a stage where a danger develops from secondary infestations of the Douglas-fir bark beetle and the true fir bark beetle. At that point, ususally between the second and fifth year of an infestation, the forest can experience massive defoliation and mortality. It is very important that this money be available to control the insect population in the 2- to 3-week time period in the late spring during which the insect can be sprayed to achieve any success in reducing population levels. An incisive Federal response to this problem is overwhelmingly necessary.

Mr. President, I also strongly support the inclusion of $4.65 million for acquisitions in the Columbia River Gorge. The gorge is an area of outstanding scenic, cultural, historic, and natural resource value. This funding will protect lands that are critically important to preserving and enhancing the scenic and natural resources in these areas. Additionally, I support the committee's inclusion of funds for the Skagit River bald eagle study, spotted owl research, and shake and shingle research, and I support the committee's timber sale program level, which will ensure an adequate timber supply for the timber industries in my State.

I would like to express my strong support for several items in the appropriations for the Department of the Interior in the 1987 Interior appropriations bill. First, I applaud the committee for including $3.3 million for the acquisition of the old growth Western red cedar in the Willapa Bay National Wildlife Refuge by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. These funds will be used to purchase the timber harvesting rights to the remaining portion of the cedar grove, and ensure that these magnificent trees will be forever protected.

This is an important area. There are few like it left anywhere on the Pacific coast, and its acquisition is a great environmental triumph.

This timber was authorized for acquisition as part of a 1983 agreement between the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and the Weyerhaeuser Co., the original owners of the land. Weyerhaeuser conveyed all of its land, 1,621 acres, on the island to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. As the Fish and Wildlife Service did not have sufficient assets for an equitable exchange, it was agreed that the Weyerhaeuser Co. would retain the timber harvesting rights to the cedar grove and the Fish and Wildlife Service would have the option to purchase the cutting rights by 1991.

Last year, funding was included to purchase half of the cedar grove. The $3.3 million included in the 1987 bill will be sufficient to conclude the transaction and purchase the remaining portion of the grove. Although the House of Representatives has included $3.9 million in its appropriations bill, the Weyerhaeuser Co. has agreed that the $3.3 million in the Senate bill will be sufficient to complete the purchase. This will result in a savings of $600,000 for the U.S. Government.

The people of the State of Washington have long recognized, as have the Weyerhaeuser Co. and the Fish and Wildlife Service, the importance of this unique stand of old growth cedar to the wildlife refuge. The trees range in age from 950 to 4,000 years old. The grove is the only remnant of the Pacific Northwest maritime old growth red cedar climax forest. Remarkably, this stand has remained free of catastrophic disturbances, such as fire or windstorms, for centuries. This acquisition will culminate 16 years of negotiations to ensure the protection of the cedar grove.

Mr. President, I heartily commend the members of the Appropriations Committee for also recognizing the importance of this old growth cedar by including the funding needed to complete the acquisition of the grove.

I would also like to express my support for the inclusion of the designation of the University of Washington's Cooperative Fisheries Research Unit as a Combined Cooperative Fish and Wildlife Unit. The fisheries research program at the University of Washington has an outstanding reputation as a research institution, and is second in the Nation in terms of total fisheries research dollars. As a combined unit, the University of Washington will focus its research on marine mammals and shorebirds, a relatively unexplored area of wildlife research. Designation as a combined unit will allow the program to expand its excellent program and to make significant contributions to wildlife research.

Mr. President, the appropriations bill also prohibits the National Park Service from spending any money to study or implement any proposal to close the Pacific Northwest regional office in Seattle. This provision is of particular importance to the people of my State. The proposal to close the regional office has very little merit as it is dubious as to whether any real savings could be achieved. The immediate cost of the proposal for the first few years amounts to $4 to $5 million. This includes $270,000 a year that the Park Service would have to pay in penalties for breaking its recently signed lease for office space into which it has just moved. The real cost of the proposal would be borne by my constituents. The proposal would move the regional office to a distant location, far from the people in the State who care about our magnificent parks. This proposal is not acceptable to the people of Washington, and I support the committee in prohibiting the Park Service from moving forward on the idea.

I know that the chairman of the subcommittee has had great interest in that, as I have. That would be a costly change, which would reduce the value and the immediacy of the services of the National Park Services in the Pacific Northwest.

I also support the committee's inclusion of acquisition funds for the Olympic and the North Cascades National Parks. These funds will purchase properties on a willing seller basis to block up the Park Service's ownership within these parks.

This is very important to a number of people and to the future of the parks.

Part of the funding for the North Cascades National Park will also be used to expand the Field's Point visitor facility on Lake Chelan. This will facilitate the ability of the Park Service to handle the large numbers of tourists who want to explore the North Cascades National Park complex via Lake Chelan.

All in all, Mr. President, the subcommittee, its chairman, and its ranking minority member have been most receptive to our needs in difficult times.

Mr. President, if the manager is ready, I do have a comment to which I would like his answer. One of the subjects of the bill is the budget proposal submitted by the U.S. section of the Pacific Salmon Commission.

I compliment the chairman of the Interior Appropriations Subcommittee for his thoughtful and thorough review of the fiscal year 1987 budget proposal submitted by the U.S. section of the Pacific Salmon Commission. As the chairman knows, the responsibility for completion of specific research programs required by the Salmon Treaty is divided among tribal, State and Federal fishery managers. The programs are integrated and interdependent, and implementation of our international obligations under the treaty requires coordination among tribal, State, and Federal efforts.

It is important that the Senate recommendation of $1.8 million for the Bureau of Indian Affairs' participation in the Pacific Salmon Treaty process be increased in conference to the House level of $2.38 million. This increase reflects the minimum needs of the U.S. section of the Pacific Salmon Commission.

The additional funds will ensure that the Columbia River Inter-Tribal Fish Commission and the Northwest Indian Fisheries Commission carry out their Salmon Treaty obligations. Without the increase in funding important field work vital in determining the productivity of dwindling salmon runs in the Columbia River will be affected. Specifically, studies on the wild summer Chinook salmon runs in Idaho could be severely restricted. Wild salmon stock recovery studies provide information to our salmon resource managers—State, tribal and Federal—regarding the status of our valuable wild runs, and the effectiveness of the conservation efforts implemented under the Salmon Treaty. In addition, the cooperative programs that have been established between the two Indian fishery commissions and the States of Washington, Idaho, and Oregon could potentially be damaged if funding for the Commissions is inadequate.

Furthermore, Mr. President, I would like to urge the chairman to consider increasing funding for the "Boldt Case" hatchery operations and maintenance program. The committee did not include the $347,000 needed to keep all of the Indian salmon and steelhead hatcheries in the Puget Sound area operating at an adequate level. Last year, Congress rejected the administration's attempt to reduce hatchery appropriations by this same amount. This year, the administration's budget request again reflects this funding cut, with the justification that individual hatcheries can absorb the reduction. The tribes in the Pacific Northwest believe that this reduction would be catastrophic. These fishery funds have been clearly identified in the past by Congress and the administration as a defined commitment to meeting trust responsibilities for treaty Indians in Washington State. These funds have been included in the House bill.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I understand the concerns raised by my colleague from Washington. Before responding to the question on the Salmon Treaty funding, let me comment that the recent action the subcommittee took was in part due to the persuasive nature of the Senator's approach to the committee in asking that these funds be included. We did find room for the several items he has mentioned in a very tight budget because the Senator was persuasive in making the case that these funds were needed.

With respect to the Salmon Treaty, let me state that I certainly understand the concerns raised by my colleague from Washington, but I point out that this does not represent any lack of support for the treaty or any lack of appreciation of the importance of the tribal activities in salmon recovery and in the funding and quality of the salmon runs in the Columbia River system. It represents a 30-percent increase of the funding that was provided for this function last year. While an additional amount is certainly useful, I am not convinced that at this time, it would be catastrophic not to grant the full request of the tribal commissions.

I also point out that not only is it a 30-percent increase over last year's request, it is 30 percent over the budget request. Certainly, it will be in conference with the House. If we are able to accommodate this as we look at all of the priorities that we shall have to try to juggle and balance in the conference, we certainly will do so. I am not, however, in a position to be able to tell the Senator from Washington that I know we can do that. It is going to be a very difficult conference. There will be a great deal of contest over the amount of funding, but we will certainly give it every consideration.

Let me also say just for the record, because perhaps I have not been as clearly convinced in the past, that the activity of the several tribes with the professional management of fish runs has been increasingly helpful in recent years. We have moved away from simple emotional reactions, which are valid but not necessarily helpful, toward a more competent scientific evaluation of the tradeoffs involved in maintaining and enhancing salmon runs of the various varieties and various species in the Columbia River.

I think part of what we have been able to achieve in recent years, comes about from a better understanding of the technical nature of the several problems, and the fact that we have been able to fund the biological studies and the necessary competent personnel for the tribes that are involved. So I am sympathetic to the request. There is nothing that I want to do more than to be able to accommodate them. We will do the very best we can.

Mr. GORTON. I thank the distinguished senior Senator from Idaho for his thoughtfulness and his consideration.

Mr. McCLURE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be set aside.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request?

Hearing none, the amendment is set aside.

AMENDMENT NO. 2774

(Purpose: To insure State eligibility for all of its Abandoned Mine Reclamation Fund money)

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. FORD] proposes an amendment numbered 2774.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

By deleting on page 24, line 24, beginning with the word "Provided" and ending on page 25, line 13, ending with the word "agreement".

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I have discussed this amendment with both the majority and minority managers of the bill, and it appears to be agreed upon.

What this amendment does is make a conferenceable item out of an unrestricted amendment. The Department of the Interior can withhold abandoned mine reclamation fund money, based on some other items where it relates to the program, where the tax has been collected, the money is there, it is needed by various and sundry States. This is a stick without a carrot.

The House language authorizes the Secretary to withhold 50 percent of the State's AML grant when the Secretary disagrees with a State's implementation of its approved program.

As a member of the Senate's Energy and Natural Resources Committee, which developed the Surface Mining Act in the mid-1970's, I take strong exception to placing conditions, unrelated to the proper utilization of AML funds, on a State's receipt of AML grants. These funds are collected on each ton of coal mined within a State and are intended to be returned to the State to eliminate public health and safety and environmental hazards which exist as a result of mining activity prior to 1977. Title IV of the Surface Mining Act is intended to provide a nationwide mechanism for reclamation abondoned mine lands. It was not intended to be used as a club over the States to infringe upon their primacy or to coerce them to take actions which are not otherwise prescribed in the act. OSM possesses ample authority under the other provisions of the act to accomplish the purposes intended by these provisions.

I am additionally concerned because these House provisos substantively amend the requirements of the act and the conditions under which a State receives its allocation of abandoned mine land funds collected on coal produced within its borders. These provisions, which effectively amend the act, have not been reviewed by the Senate Energy Committee, and, as such, it is inappropriate for them to be contained in the bill. If we are to open the act in this manner, let us open the entire act.

The provision allowing the Secretary to unilaterally deny 50 percent of a State's AML grants whenever the Secretary determines that a State is failing to adequately administer the enforcement provisions of the approved State program is of particular concern. Section 521(b) of the act provides an explicit mechanism to be followed whenever the Secretary has reason to believe the State is not fulfilling its responsibilities under the act. It incorporates public notice provisions and an opportunity for all interested parties to present their views prior to Secretary action. The House language basically permits the Secretary to blackmail the State into doing whatever he directs and effectively forces the State to follow that direction or risk not receiving 50 percent of its AML funds. As a consequence, I would recommend that the subcommittee, as it did in the 98th Congress, delete these provisos from the House approved bill and work to assure that they are not included in the bill approved by the conference committee.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, there is a problem involved in this area, and I listened very carefully to the persuasive arguments the Senator from Kentucky has made in our private considerations with respect to this particular language. I do not think there is any question that this surface mining reclamation is a contentious and difficult issue. No matter what the Government does at the Federal level, no matter what the State government may do, there are people who are yelling at them from all sides of that issue saying, You are not doing it right."

This language was requested by various groups that succeeded in persuading the chairman of the subcommittee in the House to include the language. It is contentious and I think the amendment of the Senator striking the language, which was House language, leaving it open in conference, is a good amendment and will allow us to thoroughly explore with our House colleagues the reasons for the wisdom or lack of wisdom in this provision.

I support the amendment.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSTON addressed the Chair.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, our distinguished chairman has pointed out that this is a difficult area but that there are problems which this amendment does address by suspending section 521. Under this provision as implemented by regulations and as enforced by the department, it is possible for people to be denied their licenses and money withheld without a public hearing, and so it is a very difficult area, Mr. President. We think it ought to be adjusted, if not by adopting this measure in permanent legislation, at least by bringing this to conference in hopes that we can work it out between here and conference and if not it may be that we will have to adopt this provision as part of the conference report.

So, having said that, Mr. President, we support the adoption of this amendment at this point.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky.

The amendment (No. 2774) was agreed to.

Mr. FORD. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCLURE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I thank my distinguished colleagues, the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Louisiana, for accepting my amendment, and I look forward to working with them to see if something more amenable cannot be agreed to in conference.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I might urge those who are listening, who have amendments and colloquies which require their presence on the floor, to come to the floor and we will take care of that business.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I would like to ask the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, Senator McCLURE, if he would be willing to engage in a colloquy with myself, the distinguished Senator from Alabama, Senator DENTON, and my friend and colleague from Pennsylvania, Senator SPECTER, regarding fossil energy research and development.

Mr. McCLURE. I am happy to discuss the matter with my friends.

Mr. DENTON. Mr. President, I am grateful to my friend from Idaho for his long interest in the research program which is underway in coal liquefaction. Our Nation remains all too dependent upon liquid fuels for our energy needs, from transportation to electric power generation. The future need for liquid fuels is all too apparent, and the production of the domestic supply of such fuels continues to decline. In the lower 48 States, production of crude oil has already declined by 27 percent from the peak year of 1970. I would like to add that this statistic is a 1985 figure, and does not reflect the tremendous decline in domestic production which has taken place this year. Our demand for petroleum, however, is not declining. We must examine all options to become less dependent upon foreign sources of petroleum.

One option we have is to build up a capacity to liquify our tremendous coal resources. I know the Senator from Idaho is thoroughly familiar with the work in direct liquefaction now in progress at Wilsonville, AL. Wilsonville is the last remaining large-scale direct liquefaction facility in the country. Several processes at Wilsonville are at the point where they could be scaled up. The House of Representatives put $7 million in the Interior and Related Agencies appropriation to retain the Wilsonville pilot project on a cost-shared basis. I am very concerned to note that Wilsonville is not funded in the Senate's version of the bill. I fully understand the constraints which the Senator from Idaho faces, and I applaud him for his continuing work to reduce our Federal deficit.

My question to him is, given the important work being done at Wilsonville and the fact that it can be retained on a cost-shared basis, would he be willing to give the Senator from Alabama some assurance that the project could be retained in the final conference agreement on the Interior and Related Agencies appropriation?

Mr. McCLURE. Let me say to the Senator from Alabama that he has pointed out a serious problem for our energy future. I have stated to him previously the constraints under which this appropriation must operate, and I would certainly like to accommodate his concern. As my colleagues know, the fiscal year 1987 allocation for this bill is $600 million below the fiscal year enacted level. Since the Interior bill is a relatively small appropriations bill there will be many worthwhile projects that simply cannot be funded at this lower level.

I do agree with the need for continued research in the coal liquefaction area. If we receive an increased allocation this is one area I would support adjusting upward in conference.

Mr. DENTON. I thank my friend from Idaho for his statement and I look forward to continuing to work with him on this matter.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I would just like to commend both Senators for their work on coal liquefaction. The United States, thanks to the work of the Senator from Idaho, is developing a sound knowledge base in the clean and efficient use of coal as a primary energy source. Coal liquids make a lot of sense in light of our rising dependence on foreign oil. This is a technology we need to improve, as we are all painfully aware of the limits on our domestic sources of liquid fuels. I am very grateful to the Senator from Idaho for his willingness to help Senator DENTON and myself in conference with this matter. I believe that it is vital for Wilsonville to receive the House level of funding.

Also in coal liquefaction there is the matter of direct liquefaction coprocessing. This is a technology, like Wilsonville's pilot project, which is ready for scaleup, and I hope the chairman would be able to accept the House level of funding, $2 million, for this program.

Mr. President, I would like to ask the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee if I might continue our colloquy for a moment on some small but related items in the appropriation?

Mr. McCLURE. Please proceed.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, we are all very concerned about the effect of acid rain on the environment and on public health. In the Lewis-Davis report on acid rain, the result of negotiations between Canada and the United States, our Nation is committed to increasing its research effort in acid rain. The Department of Energy's fossil energy research and development activities are critical to the success of our efforts to stem acid rain, while continuing to utilize coal as a primary energy source, and protecting critical jobs in coal-producing States. Senator McCLURE has once again provided important funding to many critical programs such as flue gas cleanup—which includes some very important work on advanced NO_x control—and advanced industrial combustion concepts. I want the chairman to know that I am very grateful for his support in these areas. I believe this kind of research will lead to a cleaner environment. The Senator from Idaho has ordered his priorities in an equitable fashion, and I do not wish to alter those priorities.

I am concerned, however, that coal preparation received $1 million in the House appropriation for ancillary operations including grinding and dewatering that is not in the Senate appropriation. In addition, the House provided $2 million to continue some very important work on industrial, commercial, and residential alternative fuels systems using highly beneficiated coals. Cleaning coal before their use as an energy source, and improved methods for burning coal, are extremely important to our environment and I would like to ask the chairman if he would be able to assist these very worthwhile programs in conference?

Mr. McCLURE. Again, emphasizing to the Senator from Pennsylvania that this is an appropriation which is very lean, I am aware of his concern and will be happy to try and accommodate him if there were to be an increase in the allocation for this subcommittee.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, my colleagues from Alabama and Pennsylvania have raised important points here. As a member of the Appropriations Committee, I know something of the difficult choices the Senator from Idaho faced, and I want to add my voice to those who support what the Senator has done. We have some specific concerns about small programs in liquefaction, advanced combustion, coal preparation, and also oil heat research and development. In the energy conservation activity, the House allowed $650,000 for advanced oil systems. This is a small but important Federal program aimed at conserving energy through more efficient use of oil as a heating source. The energy saved enhances our national independence. It is my hope that the House numbers can be kept in conference for this small program.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I would just echo my colleague's concern here. Increased energy efficiency is an intelligent long-term investment in our future.

Mr. SPECTER. There is one other matter my colleague from Pennsylvania and I would like to discuss with the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, and that has to do with mining technology under the jurisdiction of the U.S. Bureau of Mines. The House has provided $1.5 million for proof-of-concept validation to complete surface and underground evaluations of previously developed prototype mining equipment. The House also provided $500,000 for acid mine drainage research to work on the adaptation of the in line system to more difficult water conditions, and $500,000 for mine subsidence. Reductions in these and related program activities would have a severe impact on effect on the Bureau's research centers, and I strongly urge the chairman to recede to the House in these small but important matters.

Mr. HEINZ. I want to associate myself with my colleague's remarks and note that the distinguished Senator from Idaho very generously cited the fine work of the Bureau in the committee report, and I want to express my own appreciation to him for that recognition. I believe that the programs Senator SPECTER has outlined are a part of the Bureau's excellent work and I hope the House levels can be maintained here.

Mr. McCLURE. I appreciate both Senators' interest in the Bureau's work; their concerns will be addressed.

Mr. SPECTER. I very much appreciate the chairman's comments, and would like to add one additional concern for the cleanup systems development and testing at the Waltz Mills gasifier. These activities are part of the surface coal gasification programs. The House has supported such work, and my colleague Senator HEINZ and I both hope that funding can be retained for this important activity.

Mr. HEINZ. The Senator from Idaho has been extremely patient and cooperative with us and I very much appreciate his courtesy.

Mr. SPECTER. I would agree with Senator HEINZ and mention my own strong appreciation for Senator MCCLURE's efforts on behalf of our energy future.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I note with interest that the bill before us, H.R. 5234, directs the Secretary of Energy to sell the Elk Hills Naval Petroleum Reserve in California. Of special interest to me is the language that is included on page 63 of the bill that addresses the question of California's claim of entitlement to "school lands."

The school lands at issue are two sections of land in the Elk Hills NPR that should have been granted to the State of California upon its admittance into the Union under the Act of March 3, 1853. These lands grants were intended to be made for the purpose of providing property for the establishment of schools and other public services. The fact that these particular sections were mineralized and later became part of the Elk Hills NPR has complicated their title status. Consequently, California has never benefited from the oil-producing character of these lands and all producing revenues have accrued to the United States at the expense of California.

Now that we are proposing to sell the Elk Hills NPR, I think it highly appropriate that California's legitimate claim finally be addressed. It is my understanding that the language in the bill before us authorizes and directs the Secretary of Energy to settle California's claim and thereby lay this issue to rest.

I would like to confirm with the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Subcommittee on the Interior that my understanding of the committee's intent on the subject of the settlement of California's claims is in fact the correct understanding.

Mr. MCCLURE. I thank my friend from California and would gladly confirm for the record that his understanding of the committee's intent on this matter is correctly stated.

Mr. WILSON. I thank the distinguished chairman and would ask his indulgence on one other point. In the event that the forthcoming House/Senate conference committee on this bill decided to delete the provision of H.R. 5234 that directs the sale of the Elk Hills NPR, would the chairman be agreeable to retaining—at the minimum—the language of the bill that authorizes and directs the Secretary to settle California's Elk Hill school lands claim?

Mr. MCCLURE. Let me assure my colleague from California that I will make every effort to retain the California school lands settlement language in the forthcoming House/Senate conference on H.R. 5234.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, the fiscal year 1987 Interior appropriations bill, as marked up by the Senate Appropriations Committee, would increase funding for research and development of contaminants that affect wintering waterfowl. Specifically, the committee has recommended an increase of $1 million to address community level problems and $500,000 to develop new methods and techniques for detecting and identifying new generation contaminants that act either as individual or group toxicants in lethal or sublethal doses. The report that accompanies the bill directs the Department to distribute these funds on an appropriate geographical basis, including adequate attention to important habitat on the gulf coast.

Mr. President, I understand that the Department of the Interior has indicated that it will use approximately one-third of this increased funding on contaminant problems along the gulf coast. Given the large number of waterfowl that winter along the gulf, I want to stress the importance of this decision and I want to urge the Department to direct, if possible, even more money to the gulf coast problems.

Mr. President, I believe that the gulf coast deserves its fair share of this money for the following reasons:

First. Habitat loss in recent years is geometrically increasing along the gulf coast. For example, in Louisiana, the habitat loss rate is greater than 50 square miles per year. Loss rates are also high along the Texas, Alabama, and Florida coasts;

Second. Louisiana coastal marshes provide habitat for more than two-thirds of the Mississippi Flyway waterfowl populations. This population consists of 4 to 6 million ducks that winter there, and 450,000 geese;

Third. Ninety percent of Mississippi Flyway pin tails and lesser scaup winter along the Mississippi coast;

Fourth. Eighty percent of the North American redhead population utilizes the Gulf of Mexico from Florida to the Yucatan Peninsula where they prefer shoalgrass beds in sheltered bays and lagoons. These submerged grass beds are changing rapidly, particularly along the Texas coast and the distribution of these birds is changing as well. Midwinter population declines probably indicate a large movement of birds to Mexico;

Fifth. The gulf coast is the habitat for the mottled duck, and like the black duck along the Atlantic coast, it has severely depressed populations;

Sixth. Large shifts in wintering waterfowl distributions have been noted. Refuge managers suspect more waterfowl are migrating across the Gulf of Mexico;

Seventh. Law enforcement agents report larger concentrations of birds are utilizing the dwindling suitable habitat, and the hunting pressure on birds using these lands is increasing; and Eighth. Research conducted on the breeding grounds at the Northern Prairie Wildlife Research Center confirms that breeding success is directly linked to the nutritional reserve of waterfowl arriving from the wintering grounds. Birds with low reserves of fats and proteins had significantly lower breeding success.

Mr. President, given the large number of wintering waterfowl that utilizes the gulf coast and the changes that have already been noted in the behavior, I cannot overemphasize the need to assure that a substantial portion of these funds are dedicated to the contaminent problems that exist along the gulf coast. I would like to ask the distinguished chairman of the Interior Subcommittee whether he agrees with my assessment of the gulf coast situation and whether the subcommittee intends that the Department dedicate sufficient funds to meet this problem.

Mr. MCCLURE. The Senator from Louisiana has accurately described the importance of addressing contaminant problems along the gulf coast and it is the intent of the committee to assure that the Department of the Interior adequately address these problems with the funds appropriated for habitat contaminant problems. At this time, I do not know if one-third or one-half, or more, of the funds provided will go to the gulf coast problem. Staff is currently working with the service to discuss the distribution of the fiscal year 1987 contaminant funding and we will see to it that the Department does provide appropriate attention to the gulf coast.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. Chairman, the Coal Research Center at Southern Illinois University at Carbondale, IL, has a strong history of research in clean coal technology and coal chemistry. The House has acted to include $1.25 million, over a period of 10 months, in their fiscal year 1987 Interior and Related Agencies appropriation for continued work at the center. The Senate bill, as reported by the committee, does not specify that support.

In a similar situation in the fiscal year 1986 appropriation, the Senate accepted the house position on this matter in conference. I would ask the subcommittee chairman, the Senator from Idaho, if he would again give full consideration to the House position on this matter when this bill goes to conference.

Mr. MCCLURE. As the Senator from Illinois knows, the allocation for this bill is $600 million below the fiscal year 1986 enacted level. With a reduction that large, many good projects could not be funded.

If the subcommittee receives a larger allocation, or an acceptable offset can be found, I will give the Southern Illinois University project every consideration.

Mr. SIMON. I thank the chairman for his cooperation.

Mr. SPECTER. When Congress passed the Surface Mining Conservation and Reclamation Act, it recognized the need to solve the Nation's serious abandoned mine problem. The Abandoned Mine Reclamation Fund was established and is supported by a special tax on coal production, so it places no demands on the general revenues of the U.S. Treasury. The unappropriated balance in this fund has grown to nearly $400 million. And, yet, many States, like my own State of Pennsylvania, have large inventories of serious, top-priority abandoned mine hazards that need these funds to be made safe.

The fiscal year 1987 appropriation for the title IV grants-to-States appropriation is $150.6 million in the Senate bill versus the House number of $186.1 million. The Senate number results in my State getting far less than the program they are prepared to carry out and, in fact, had been urged to undertake by administration officials.

Fiscal year 1985 funding had been at $257.7 million while fiscal year 1986 funding was at the $149.4 million level. The fluctuations in funding cause serious difficulties in planning and managing an efficient program.

I am aware that the argument used against increasing the title IV grants to States has been the presence of a large unobligated balance of funds from previous years. However, unobligated funds are not uncommitted funds. Nearly all of the previous years' moneys are committed to projects in design or under construction. Slowing the rate of appropriations will slow the pace of new project starts for projects that are desperately needed.

As the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee knows, these abandoned mines present real dangers to public health and safety. Every year, there are numerous fatalities and injuries in the Nation due to abandoned mine hazards.

I am aware that the chairman has serious problems with available budget authority and outlays for his entire bill. However, the funds expended here come from a dedicated source, the mining industry, and should be expended for the purposes for which they were intended as quickly as practical. Since these funds are from a dedicated source, their use places no demands on the general revenues of the U.S. Treasury.

I request that the distinguished Senator do everything in his power to reach the $186.1 million House figure in conference without obtaining offsets from projects, important to Pennsylvania, that are appropriated in the fiscal year 1987 Interior appropriations bills. The States could use more, but, given his constraints, that figure would be acceptable. The Senator and I have discussed this matter in detail in prior meetings and I appreciate his attention to this issue and his sympathy for the problem.

Mr. McCLURE. What the Senator from Pennsylvania states is a clear definition of the needs of this program, which I support. I greatly appreciate his dedication to this important health and safety issue and will make moving toward and trying to reach the $186.1 million figure a priority in conference if the subcommittee receives an increased allocation or if acceptable offsets in other programs can be found by the conferees since this bill is at its budget authority outlay ceiling.

Mr. SPECTER. I do understand that and am confident that the distinguished chairman will do all that he can to reach the higher number. I thank the Senator.

Mr. HEINZ. I would like to associate myself with the comments of the Senator from Pennsylvania and also urge that Senator McCLURE attempt to reach the House figure in conference. I thank the chairman for his attention to this matter.

Mr. BROYHILL. Mr. President, I rise to engage the chairman in a colloquy for the purpose of clarifying various items of interest and concern.

Mr. McCLURE. I am pleased to oblige the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. BROYHILL. I appreciate the chairman's indulgence and the opportunity to highlight areas of concern contained in the bill before us. Let me first commend the distinguished chairman and members of the committee on their diligence in delivering this bill in good order.

Mr. McCLURE. I thank the Senator for his kind remarks.

Mr. BROYHILL. Mr. Chairman, I intended to offer an amendment today to restore funding levels for many Federal programs and activities of national importance and of interest to the State of North Carolina. Because funding for many of these items is included in the other body's measure, I have withdrawn my amendment. I will refrain from offering any amendments if the chairman can give me an assurance that the Senate conferees will give serious consideration to acceding to the other body's funding levels for the items I am about to discuss. Is the chairman prepared to offer such an assurance?

Mr. McCLURE. As chairman, I assure the Senator that appropriate consideration will be accorded these items to the extent that budgetary restraints permit and agreement can be reached.

Mr. BROYHILL. Included in the other body's allowance is an appropriation of $55,000 for studies related to the Little Kinnakeet lifesaving station at Cape Hatteras National Seashore. Of that amount, $30,000 would be used to fund a historic furnishing study and $25,000 for a historic grounds study. Among the other body's recommendations, not included in the Senate's bill, is a reprogramming of existing funds totalling $650,000 for the acquisition of an additional 6,000 acre tract at Alligator River National Wildlife Refuge. As such, this would require no new budget authority. This tract would be developed and maintained as a nature conservancy for the protection of the Nation's prime and most extensive remaining stands of mature Atlantic white cedar. The other body's bill also recommended use of Alligator River National Wildlife Refuge as a preferred site for the reintroduction of the Red Wolf and provided an increase of $135,000 to facilitate the recovery of this endangered species. Contained in the other body's report accompanying its bill is language urging the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to make available management and technical support to the State of North Carolina and the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency as required to complete the comprehensive research plan for the Albemarle/Pamlico estuary which is of national significance. It is my fervent hope that the Senate conferees will be able to agree to and accept funding levels provided in the other version of the bill when they meet with Members of the other body.

Mr. McCLURE. I will be mindful of these items when the Senate confers with the other body.

Mr. BROYHILL. I thank the chairman. I would also like to express appreciation to the chairman and members of the committee for providing funds necessary to restore the lighthouse district at Cape Hatteras National Seashore Park. In addition, I am grateful to the chairman for the provision of funds necessary to enlarge the Great Dismal Swamp and for recommending funding levels for various items identical to those contained in the other body's bill.

Mr. McCLURE. I thank the Senator. We will endeavor to accommodate the requests he has made.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, Minnesota Valley National Wildlife Refuge, situated in the Minneapolis-St. Paul metropolitan area, offers local citizens a wide range of educational and recreational opportunities while providing sanctuary to a large number of migratory waterfowl, fish and other wildlife.

Last year Congress provided $600,000 in planning funds for design of the visitor's center. Preliminary work on utilities, access roads, major landscaping and interstate highway directional signing is completed. In short the site is ready for construction to begin.

Mr. Chairman, now that the planning is nearly completed, it is vital that construction funds be forthcoming. The House included $3.32 million to begin phase I of the construction. I would appreciate it very much if you would agree to the House language in conference on the fiscal year 1967 Interior appropriations bill.

Mr. McCLURE. I am familiar with this project and appreciate the time the good Senator from Minnesota has devoted to establishing this unique urban wildlife refuge. The educational opportunities the refuge will offer to the citizens of the Twin Cities are outstanding and you can be sure I will give your request every consideration when conferencing with the House.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, currently there are 29 States with fish and wildlife or combined cooperative research units. Minnesota, despite their vast fish and wildlife resources, does not have such a unit. While the University of Minnesota and the Minnesota Department of Natural Resources have a solid record of achievement in wildlife research, education or management, the scope of Minnesota's resources makes it difficult to accomplish all that needs to be done.

The University of Minnesota and the Minnesota Department of Natural Resources have put together a program direction statement for a cooperative fish and wildlife research unit in Minnesota. I will ask unanimous consent later that this statement be included in the RECORD.

Mr. Chairman, earlier this year I asked the Subcommittee on Interior Appropriations to review this proposal, and if it had merit to direct the Secretary to fund it out of available funds in fiscal year 1987. Has the Senator had a chance to review this proposal?

Mr. McCLURE. I appreciate the Senator from Minnesota bringing this to my attention. I have reviewed the program direction statement for a cooperative unit in Minnesota and agree to direct the Secretary of Interior to fund the project out of available funds in fiscal year 1987.

Mr. DURENBERGER. I thank the Senator

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the program direction statement be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PROGRAM DIRECTION STATEMENT—MINNESOTA COOPERATIVE FISH AND WILDLIFE RESEARCH UNIT

The Cooperative Fishery and Wildlife Units Program was established to facilitate cooperation between the Service, universities, State fish and wildlife agencies and private organizations, and to conduct programs of research and education related to fish and wildlife resource management. The objectives of the Units are to: 1) conduct research directed toward the solution of problems of mutual concern related to fish, wildlife and their habitats; 2) provide academic training toward advanced degrees in the fish and wildlife field; 3) provide technical assistance to federal, state, and other conservation agencies related to fish and wildlife management; 4) provide conservation education through publication, lecture and demonstration. The operations of the Unit are governed by a formal Cooperative Agreement signed by the Service, university, state fish and wildlife agency, and the Wildlife Management Institute.

The Minnesota Unit will emphasize research regarding impacts of human activities on aquatic and terrestrial ecosystems which are of state, regional and national significance. The research program will address not only the biological, but also social and economic aspects of both game and nongame fisheries and wildlife management; hence, the Unit will be in the most advantageous position to provide information for strategic and long-range planning by the Minnesota Department of Natural Resources and U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

Minnesota has a vast fishery and wildlife resource and occupies a geographic area that contains aquatic and terrestrial habitats associated with some of the most important regional and national fishery and wildlife research needs. The state is biogeographically unique, with boreal forest, northern coniferous forest, transition zone and prairie, all of which are, in one way or another, under increasing or changing pressures from human activities. Minnesota is an ideal model for research on effects of these activities on fish and wildlife because the vastness of the resource and variation in habitats within regions provide an unusually large selection of research sites for comparative studies.

Biological studies will involve a wide range of applied and basic research projects designed to mitigate or enhance fish and wildlife in habitats with the potential for severe degradation, heavy use, or offering considerable possibilities for enhancement. These habitats include but are not limited to urban fisheries, agricultural lands, peatlands, and the agriculture-forest transition zone where land-use changes are accelerating with human expansion in the area. All of these problem areas in Minnesota are representative of similar concerns regionally and nationally.

The great surge in public interest in nongame species in recent years across the nation consitutes both a challenge and opportunity for resource management agencies and teaching and research institutions. The public now expects agencies to carry out programs specifically for nongame species. As a result, it is opportune and appropriate to have the Unit involved in nongame research.

There is a growing need to incorporate sociological and economic information into fish and wildlife management programs. Public user attitudes, expectations and needs are becoming increasingly important in the formulation of management programs and priorities. Likewise, reliable information on the economic importance of fish and wildlife is becoming an essential ingredient for enlightened planning to help insure that the value of these resources is adequately considered in the formulation of public policy. This is particularly relevant to circumstances in Minnesota where a significant part of the tourist and recreation industry is fish and wildlife oriented. Because public acceptance of fisheries and wildlife management programs is frequently an obstacle to successful implementation, a primary focus of the research will be to examine the economic and social ramifications of proposed management programs and to compare alternatives. This integration of ecological, social and economic research is crucial for decision making regarding fisheries and wildlife policy and planning and yet there are few researchers addressing this issue. The Unit is expected to become a "Center for Excellence" for this integrated research and thereby serve the state and nation as a source of information for public agencies in their development and implementation of fisheries and wildlife management plans.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be temporarily set aside.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 2775

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will report the amendment

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. McCURE] proposes an amendment numbered 2775.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 14, lines 7-9, begin linetype with the comma after the word "Fund" and continue the linetype through "290" on line 9.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, the amendment I am proposing will bring the bill into compliance with the committee report adopting H.R. 5234. This language was inadvertently omitted from the bill and would provide a limitation on the amount of purchaser credits that will be available in fiscal year 1987 for timber purchases.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, we concur with the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HECHT). The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2775) was agreed to.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, it is an appropriate occasion at this particular time to note that the distinguished occupant of the Chair, the junior Senator from the State of Nevada, Senator CHIC HECHT, as of 3:30 p.m. on Saturday, August 9, had presided over the Senate for 100 hours. Senator HECHT will join three colleagues, Senators PRESSLER, GORTON, and EVANS, in receiving the golden gavel award for the time he has given the Senate by presiding over the Senate during the 99th Congress. I am very pleased to make this notation for the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thanks the Senator very much.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further proceedings under the quorum call be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

□ 1120

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, there is a pending committee amendment which deals with Park Service fees, and it was excepted from those that were adopted by unanimous consent.

There is one major amendment and one minor amendment of which I am aware, and there are a variety of colloquies which Members have indicated they wish to undertake with the chairman of the subcommittee. Other than that, we are ready to go to third reading of the bill.

I urge that those who have an interest in these matters or others which they have not yet brought to our attention—I hope there are not such others—will get to the floor and take care of those matters.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I join the distinguished Senator from Idaho in urging Senators to come to the floor at this point and bring up their amendments or their colloquies.

I think we have been contacted personally by only one Senator asking for protection. We have been made aware of others who are interested in amendments, and we will try to protect them.

I know that the distinguished Senator from Idaho is anxious to get the bill over with. So I urge Senators who have amendments to come to the floor right away, because we are ready to deal with them, and we should soon be ready for final passage of the bill. That will not take place until after the caucuses. But I hope that shortly after the caucuses, at 2 o'clock, we will be ready to move to final passage.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, even though the vote may not occur before that time, if we get to third reading of the bill and have only the vote left, we will do that before we recess for the party caucuses.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I hope all Senators will take heed of what the distinguished chairman has said, and that is that in the next 40 minutes we want to get this bill wrapped up.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I would like to compliment the Appropriations Committee for its expeditious action in bringing the Interior appropriations bill to the floor. This bill is always of critical importance to California and consequently one that I have a vital interest in.

Generally, I support the efforts of the committee to curb spending increases. However, it has long been my position that if funds are to be made available for certain kinds of programs—programs like land acquisition funding for our national parks and forests—California should receive its fair share of funds.

With this in mind, I would like to compliment the committee on its decision to include $5 million for land acquisition in the Channel Islands National Park, $7 million for Forest Service acquisitions at Lake Tahoe, and $1.1 million for the Sequoia-Kings Canyon National Park.

The Sequoia-Kings Canyon acquisition is of special significance because moneys we are appropriating here are to be matched by a private organization, the Save the Redwoods League. This matching fund will be used to purchase Giant Sequoia Redwoods. I strongly believe that the Federal Government should take the lead in supporting cost-sharing programs of this nature whenever practicable.

Although I appreciate the committee's attention to these important acquisitions, I am compelled to note that the committee's recommendation falls short of funding several needed California land acquisition projects. Specifically, I think it highly appropriate that moneys should be made available for land acquisition in the Santa Monica Mountains National Recreation Area, and in the Golden Gate National Recreation Area.

We have embarked on a program of acquiring inholdings in these very popular parks and to renege on our commitment now does an injustice not only to the affected landowners who are effectively precluded from selling and developing their property, but also to the literally millions of visitors who use these parks every year.

The House approved appropriations of $8 million for land acquisition priorities in the Santa Monica Mountains National Recreation Area, and it is my sincere hope that this level will prevail in the forthcoming conference committee.

With regard to the Golden Gate National Recreation Area, there is a particularly urgent need for additional parkland acquisition of a ranch known as the Martinelli property. This property has recently been optioned by a developer and development permits appear to be forthcoming. Once developed, this beautiful ranch will be lost forever to the park. Funds that are presently available to the park have been committed elsewhere and new funding is required to acquire this and other important ranchland property. Therefore, I strongly support conference report language to include the House-passed $3.1 million in appropriations to allow the full acquisition process to continue at GGNRA.

I am also disappointed with the committee's failure to include funding for a U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service acquisition in the Sacramento River National Wildlife Refuge. The House has already approved appropriations of $2.2 million for acquisition of a particularly important 217-acre parcel in this refuge known as the Ward property.

This acquisition is especially important in light of the problem of agricultural drain off which has rendered some of the wetlands in the central valley unsuitable for use as refuge for wildlife. The most glaring example of such contamination is in the Kesterson Wildlife Refuge. This 5,900-acre refuge has been closed down because of selenium contamination. Acquisition of the Ward property would help compensate for the loss of Kesterson.

In this same vein, I would like to register my strong support for the committee's recommendation to appropriate $4.5 million to the Fish and Wildlife Service to study and begin cleanup of contaminated refuges wherever they may be.

Turning to the Forest Service appropriations, I would like to compliment the committee on its endorsement of a National Forest Service Timber Sale Program allowing sales of 11.4 billion board feet for fiscal year 1987. This program is a valuable tool in maintaining a viable domestic timber industry, and is a sound investment that produces increased revenues to the U.S. Treasury. Additionally, I support the committee's recommendations for Forest Service road building appropriations as being highly appropriate in light of the timber sale program envisioned by this committee.

Finally, Mr. President, the committee is well aware of my emphatic endorsement of the House Interior appropriations bill language on the California OCS leasing program. I would once again like to register my support for this compromise language hammered out over a period of many months and would express my fervent hope and expectation that the House language will be adopted in conference.

Mr. President, I thank the Appropriations Committee for its fine efforts and am hopeful that the deficiencies that I have outlined will be rectified in the conference committee.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I have an inquiry with respect to the Appropriations Committee recommendations for the enhanced oil recovery activities of the Department of Energy. Senator NICKLES and I are concerned that a balanced distribution of funding among the various enhanced oil recovery activities is achieved. As you will recall, during the full Appropriations Committee markup of the fiscal year 1987 Interior appropriations bill, I raised the issue of the distribution of funding among the heavy oil, light oil, and tar sands activities. I suggested that an appropriate distribution of the $10 million recommended by the Senate for these enhanced oil recovery activities would be $1.9 million for heavy oil, $7 million for light oil, and $1.1 million for tar sands. I offered an amendment to this effect, and the committee agreed to that distribution.

My concern, Mr. President, is that page 75 of the report accompany H.R. 5234, the fiscal year 1987 Interior appropriations bill, does not reflect the distribution I have just outlined. My distribution is more in line with last year's funding distribution and is proportionate to the budget request and the estimated benefit received in each category of enhanced oil recovery activity. Can the chairman explain his understanding as to the distribution of enhanced oil recovery funding agreed upon during the Appropriations Committee markup?

Mr. McCLURE. I would be happy to respond to the question of my good friend, the Senator from New Mexico. As he correctly states, there was an amendment adopted during the full committee markup on the distribution of the $10 million recommended for enhanced oil recovery activities along the lines he has suggested, and that distribution should have been reflected in the committee report. I assure my distinguished colleague from New Mexico that the Appropriations Committee accepted the funding distribution he has outlined within the enhanced oil recovery account, and is correctly displayed in the detail table I have inserted in the RECORD. I will do everything I can in conference to see that these recommendations are included in the final version of this bill.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank my good friend and the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Subcommittee for this clarification and his assurance that he will work for this outcome in conference with the House. I also give my sincere thanks to Senator NICKLES for his assistance on this matter.

RECESS UNTIL 2 P.M.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In accordance with the previous order, the Senate will now stand in recess until 2 p.m.

Therefore, at 12 noon, the Senate recessed until 2 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. HATFIELD).

SENATE RESOLUTION 486—RELATING TO THE ARREST OF U.S. CORRESPONDENT NICHOLAS DANILOFF

SENATE RESOLUTION 487—RELATING TO THE CONDEMNATION OF RECENT ACTS OF TERRORISM IN PAKISTAN AND TURKEY

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, there will now be 30 minutes' debate equally divided and controlled by the majority and minority leaders or their designees on Senate Resolution 486 and Senate Resolution 487.

The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 486) relating to the arrest of U.S. correspondent Nicholas Daniloff.

A resolution (S. Res. 487) relating to the condemnation of recent acts of terrorism in Pakistan and Turkey.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, in his capacity as a Senator from Oregon, suggests the absence of a quorum. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, let me indicate to my colleagues that the time between now and 2:30 is to be equally divided for debate on the Daniloff resolution and the resolution on terrorism. It is my understanding we may wish to amend the terrorist resolution in view of the events in Beirut since we submitted it yesterday. Each side has 12½ minutes. I understand the distinguished Senator from New York is prepared to use some of the time on that side.

Mr. MOYNIHAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I ask that I may be permitted to use several moments of the minority leader's time. He is not on the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, on the day following the arrest of Nicholas Daniloff, I made a statement, as have other Members of this body, and I spoke as a former Ambassador and as a member for 8 years of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence.

I made two observations: First, that this is a clumsy effort by the Soviet secret police, the KGB, to provide a counterpart to an arrest by United States authorities of a true agent, Mr. Zakharov, a member of the Secretariat of the United Nations.

I said, second, that it is an absolute and unwavering policy of the U.S. Government not to employ journalists as intelligence agents for any reason whatsoever.

I then went out of my way to say that the Politburo in Moscow had to get control of its secret police and put an end to this.

It did not occur to me then, that this arrest could have happened without the concurrence of the Politburo. However, it seemed appropriate to provide the Soviet authorities with some way of saying, "Well, a mistake has been made. A lower authority has done something clumsy and wrong and it will be rectified."

That is exactly what did not happen. Far from recognizing the gravity of having arrested an American journalist, a completely innocent man carrying out professional work, in response to the arrest of a Soviet spy; far from withdrawing in the face of a letter from the President of the United States, statements by the Secretary of State, statements by Senators; the Soviets chose instead to escalate, to move to the point of announcing that Mr. Daniloff would be prosecuted; and after that, announcing that the prosecution would involve charges more extensive than the immediate investigation of Lenin Hills.

This is inexplicable and under the circumstances, Mr. President, ominous. The Soviets have to understand that they cannot do this and expect our relations to prosper in any way.

They cannot expect a summit meeting.

□ 1410

They cannot expect an arms control agreement.

They cannot expect subsidized wheat and they cannot expect expanded trade.

They cannot expect accommodation of the sort which we do hope for if they persist in this foul, detestable, and contemptible act of a police state in view of all the world.

And they cannot expect that we will trade one of their spies for Nicholas Daniloff. We do not equate such activities, and we would not in any circumstance submit to the Soviet interpretation which would follow such an exchange: that we had implicitly agreed to Daniloff's guilt. He is guilty of nothing, while the Soviet Union stands at minimum guilty of a profound misunderstanding of the free world and a reckless disregard for the bases of accommodation and peaceful coexistence.

If anything can reach them now, if Mr. Dobrynin is listening, he must surely know that when the Senate unanimously acts, as it will do in 20 minutes' time, the leaders of the Soviet Union are deeply advised to pay attention; and, at what now can only be some cost to themselves, even so reverse their action lest it lead to greater and graver costs by far.

I thank the Chair. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. PELL. I ask for 3 minutes, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Rhode Island is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. PELL. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, today I join with the distinguished majority and minority leaders of the Senate, and with the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, in cosponsoring Senate Resolution 487 condemning the latest tragic incidents in what has become a terrorist assault on civilized values and institutions. The hijacking of Pan Am flight 073, and the killing of 18 of its passengers and the wounding of dozens more, underscores yet again the urgent need for improved airport security measures in all of the major international airports. It also serves to remind us of the constant need for vigilance and cooperation at the international level in the fight against the shadowy, cowardly individuals we call terrorists.

The tragic journey of Pan Am 073 reminds us of the vulnerability of innocents to the monsters of international terrorism. The images of flight 073 are haunting—the tiny blooded shoes scattered on the tarmac, the interviews of victims from their hospital beds, the shrouded corpses—and a stark reminder of man's inhumanity to his fellow man.

As if the ordeal of Pan Am flight 073 were not sufficient reminder to us of the ever present threat posed by terrorism, last Saturday an unknown number of unknown gunmen seized the largest synagogue in Istanbul, Turkey, while worshipers were at prayer and opended fire on them, killing 21 men. The utter repugnance one feels at such a moment, the utter contempt one feels for the base cowards who make innocent civilians, at prayer, the targets of their wrath, or vengeance, or elusive political agenda is inexpressible. The deep felt sadness, and sympathy we all feel for the friends and families who mourn their loss is profound. The anger our citizens feel, and the seeming helplessness they experience in the face of this burgeoning threat, is growing.

Terrorism is a hate that does not respect national boundaries. The murderers on Pan Am 073 were Palestinian; they took control of the plane in Pakistan; the aircraft was American; the victims included two Americans but were mostly Indians. In Istanbul the victims were Jewish-Turkish citizens; the nationality of the killer is not known. In Lebanon, another American has been kidnapped.

Because of terrorism's global reach, combatting this evil will require effective international cooperation. Passing resolutions in the U.S. Congress is an important expression of our country's outrage but it is not sufficient.

We must tighten, once again, airport security, including perimeter security. Airports not meeting vigorous international security standards should be blacklisted and international carriers ought not to risk passenger lives by flying there. We need negotiators skilled in the art of handling hostage situations. We need commando forces with the specialized training and skill to free hostages as the situation warrants.

Most important the cowards who plan and implement terrorist acts must be brought to the bar of justice and if convicted severely punished. We owe it to the lastest innocent victims of terrorism—the dead and wounded from Pan Am 073 and the Istanbul synagogue—to take effective measures to stop the repetition of such acts.

As the world community responds to terrorism, we must be sure to target only the terrorists. As civilized people we have the highest obligation to safeguard all innocent human life. If we let our anger get the better of us and strike back at the wrong people then the terrorists will have won. This we must never allow.

Mr. President, the history of the postwar shows that superpower summits can serve two useful purposes. They can contribute to a promising atmosphere in relations, and they can serve to finalize and commemorate agreements on which the preponderance of work has already been accomplished.

Sadly, neither of these conditions now exists. The Soviet seizure of an innocent American journalist threatens to erode all possibility of amicability in United States-Soviet relations. And by all accounts, the two sides are still far apart on the urgent questions of nuclear arms control.

Secretary Gorbachev has spoken repeatedly and at length about his desire for arms control, and has leveled heavy criticism at the Reagan administration's policies in that area. Tragically, his own Government has now moved the spotlight away from arms control and onto its own outrageous action in framing, incarcerating, and threatening to bring to trial a distinguished American journalist.

Only the opponents of arms control can take comfort in the current situation. If Secretary Gorbachev and his Government are truly interested in progress in United States-Soviet relations, they will act to free Mr. Daniloff immediately. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may have 3 minutes of our time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? If not, the Senator from Illinois is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. SIMON. I simply join my colleagues in expressing their astonishment and displeasure at Nick Daniloff's seizure. I know Nick Daniloff slightly. I had a chance to meet with him briefly when I was in the Soviet Union. One of the things I have learned is that in the Soviet Union they may know great details about some things—for instance, the Philadelphia police bombings. They knew incredible detail about that. Then there are massive misunderstandings. They simply cannot equate a reporter for Izvestia or Pravda, who is an agent of the state, with a reporter from our country who is a free citizen. This small incident—and it is a small incident—is the kind of thing that could do massive harm to relations between our two countries. Never in all of history has it been so important that two nations understand each other and get along.

For the Soviets to let this happen and stand between our nations is just as shortsighted as it could possibly be. I hope the Soviet leaders get the message that we are serious about this. There are things they can do. They can make speeches. They can have editorials in Pravda and so forth. But seizing a free reporter goes beyond anything we have seen since the days of Josef Stalin. This is going to cause great harm if it is not quickly corrected.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Will the Senator from Illinois yield for a question?

Mr. SIMON. I am pleased to yield to my colleague.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. My friend observed that what has happened in Moscow during the last 2 weeks goes beyond anything we have seen since the days of Josef Stalin. Would he be aware, as I am sure he is, that the arrest and continued detention of Mr. Daniloff has a close parallel in the Stalin era? I refer to the case of William N. Oatis, a reporter for Associated Press in Prague, who was arrested and imprisoned on trumped-up charges of espionage in 1951 after Stalin's forces seized power there. Mr. Daniloff testified before our Select Committee on Intelligence in 1978 that during the early 1960's, he was frequently arrested by Soviet citizens and authorities who saw him photographing hospitals and engaging in other innocuous professional activities. But the severity of the current charges now leveled against Mr. Daniloff, and his continuing imprisonment, hearken back to the Stalin era.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's 3 minutes have expired.

Mr. SIMON. I ask unanimous consent for 1 more minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SIMON. The Senator from New York is absolutely correct. This is the first time that you have had people detained overnight. There have been arrests and you had in the case of one Los Angeles Times reporter someone who was taken but he was permitted to go home evenings and that sort of thing. This kind of overnight detention of a free reporter——

Mr. MOYNIHAN. And charging of such a reporter with espionage——

Mr. SIMON. That is correct—is unparalleled since the times of Josepf Stalin. We do not want to return to those days. The Soviets do not. We do not. We do not want to return to those relations between our two countries.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I rise to add my voice to the growing call for the immediate and unconditional release of Nicholas Daniloff. It goes without saying that any nation has the right to expel or otherwise deal appropriately with foreign spies, as the United States has done with respect to Mr. Zakharov, a Soviet U.N. official. However, to detain a distinguished journalist on trumped-up charges of espionage and cynically suggest that he be exchanged for the Soviet agent caught in this country is simply and completely beyond the pale of tolerable behavoir, even from the Soviets. I applaud the administration's announcement that there will be no trade, and admire the courage and integrity of Nick Daniloff in refusing to be a party to any such deal.

I deeply regret that this incident could threaten the thaw in United States-Soviet relations that was so long in coming in this administration. But if that is the fallout from this incident, the Soviets have no one but themselves to blame. I believe the Soviets made a serious miscalculation in grabbing Nick Daniloff. We Americans are devoted to the principle of freedom of the press and absolutely reject the use of innocent hostages as pawns in an international power play. We will not play the Soviet's despicable game, and will settle for nothing less than freedom for Nick Daniloff. The American people, the administration and the Congress are united in this resolve and the Soviets would do well to reconsider their continued pursuit of this ill-advised attempt at blackmail.

I have every confidence that the Senate will send the Soviet Union a strong and clear message by adopting this resolution unanimously.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I rise in support of resolution 486 condemning the Soviet Union's unjustified arrest and indictment of American journalist Nicholas Daniloff and demanding his immediate release.

On August 30, Nicholas Daniloff was handed a packet of materials from a Soviet acquaintance. Immediately after, he was arrested, the packet opened, and inside were found several documents marked secret.

Based on what we know, Nicholas Daniloff is not a spy. His arrest is outrageous and his indictment incendiary. Daniloff is a serious professional with a broad reputation as a careful, knowledgeable, and dedicated newsman. His face is widely recognized in both Soviet and American circles and his profound interest in Russian culture is matched only by his passion for professional reporting.

President Reagan has properly expressed his outrage over this incident, and today this Congress joins with him in that expression. I only lament that in international diplomacy, unlike in gradeschool tomfoolery where this sort of maneuver would be more common, there is no "joke's over"—style ending where the exposed can walk away and normalcy is restored with a sembalance of dignity.

The Soviets have led us and themselves into a difficult morass. Not only is it disturbing that the Soviet leadership, whom most experts credit with at least approving, if not ordering, this scam, would abandon the high standards of international behavior with a blatant disregard for civil liberties and a disturbing contempt for international law.

More than that, it is alarming that they would endanger—and there be no misunderstanding, serious harm has already come to the level of trust between our two nations—the chances for an anticipated summit meeting of our leaders planned for later this year. Progress in identifying mutual interests and a common ground for the start of these talks has been slow without the complications of this affair. The creation of another intractable problem is the last thing the Soviet-American relationship needs.

A great deal is at stake in bringing a successful conclusion to this matter, and the Soviet leadership is mistaken if it believes that the American people, their Congress, and their President will strike a dubious bargain in a situation fabricated through skullduggery and chicanery. This behavior cannot be rewarded; normal relations can only be maintained if there is a commitment to honesty and integrity.

It is unfortunate that the Soviets have engaged in a scheme the undoing of which will produce considerable embarassment for them. But they have brought it upon themselves. I urge that my colleagues approve this resolution and demand the immediate release of Nicholas Daniloff. The future of United States-Soviet relations may well hang in the balance.

● Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I rise to condemn the actions of the Soviet Government in the arrest, detention, and indictment of Nicholas Daniloff. He should be released immediately and without preconditions of any sort.

Mr. Daniloff is a respected journalist and has never been employed in any espionage activities by any part of the U.S. intelligence community. The charge that Daniloff was engaged in espionage is completely without foundation. Over 8 years ago Mr. Daniloff testified before the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence and stated his unequivocal view that journalists should not be involved in any type of intelligence activity. The Soviet frame-up of Nicholas Daniloff is especially objectionable given his long-standing opposition to journalistic involvement in intelligence activities.

The Daniloff case raises profound questions about the sincerity of General Secretary Gorbachev's professed desire for improved relations with the United States. Arbitrary arrest and imprisonment of United States journalists carrying out their duties is not the type of action one would expect if the Soviet Union is truly interested in constructive relations with the United States.

The much heralded openness of the Gorbachev regime is belied by the Stalinist behavior of his KGB. The Daniloff episode underscores the importance of separating style and substance in Soviet policy.

The carefully cultivated appearance of a new, more modern, Soviet leader should not mislead the West. Beneath a veneer of aggressive public relations and propaganda, the kidnaping of Nicholas Daniloff illustrates that Gorbachev practices business as usual Soviet-style. While Gorbachev proclaims his desire for better relations with the United States, his response to President Reagan's personal appeal for Daniloff's release was to indict Daniloff before a military tribunal.

The harsh reality of an American citizen unjustly held in Lefortovo Prison speaks volumes about the true nature of Gorbachev's Soviet Union. If General Secretary Gorbachev expects to be taken seriously by the United States as a national leader and as a statesman, he must release Nicholas Daniloff without delay.

I urge the rapid and unanimous adoption of Senate Resolution 486.●

● Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, as a cosponsor of the two resolutions upon which we are about to vote, I rise to speak in favor of these two measures. I commend the leadership for moving quickly and forcefully to bring these measures before the Senate so that the views of the Senate will be known on these issues.

Mr. President, the recent Soviet actions in arresting and charging American journalist Nicholas Daniloff only reminds us of the Soviet Government's willingness to violate human and civil rights in the pursuit of the interests of the Soviet state. There is not a shred of credible evidence that Mr. Daniloff is guilty of the espionage charge leveled by the Soviet Government. His arrest represents a Soviet attempt to use an individual American as a pawn in order to gain leverage against the United States in its attempt to obtain the release of a Soviet spy arrested here in the United States. There is no connection between these two cases and Mr. Daniloff's release should not be conditional to any Soviet request for special treatment in the United States. Mr. Daniloff is innocent and his release should be swift and unconditional.

I hope the Soviets will come to their senses and realize that they are doing more to damage Soviet-American relations and their interest in a constructive dialog with the United States by the arrest and charging of Mr. Daniloff than they can ever hope to gain by his continued detention. This resolution will help make it clear to the Soviet Union that the continued holding of Mr. Daniloff is a losing proposition. I urge my colleagues to support this resolution unanimously.

Mr. President, following the vote on the Daniloff resolution there will be a vote on the resolution condemning the recent terrorist incidents in Pakistan and Turkey, of which I am also a cosponsor. I urge my colleagues to support this resolution, as well. The incidents in Pakistan and Turkey, as well as today's report of another kidnapping in Lebanon, indicate that we still have a long way to go in the battle against the scourge of terrorism. The resolution before us urges the President to take strong steps to stop acts of international terrorism, including putting the matter on the table in any future summit with the Soviet Union. If there is one area where civilized nations ought to be able to agree it is in this fight against terrorism.

Terrorism ultimately undermines the security of all nations. The nations of the world ought to work together to make sure that the terrorist has no sanctuary, no base of operations, and no expression of support for his activities. As a friend of Pakistan, I would like to express my hope that the Government of Pakistan, as it has pledged, will bring the terrorists who hijacked the Pan Am jet to justice. I commend the resolution before us to condemn the incidents in Pakistan and Turkey and recommend a program for fighting terrorism and urge my colleagues to support this measure.●

● Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, an innocent American journalist, Mr. Nicholas Daniloff, has been seized by the Soviet Government. The Politburo evidently has decided upon this callous, arbitrary action in an effort to secure the release of Mr. Gennadi Zakharov. According to the Federal Bureau of Investigation, Mr. Zakharov is a spy, a professional KGB operative who has been working to steal vital defense secrets from the United States.

Mr. President, the Soviet action is both crude and transparent. The KGB has always sought to maintain the morale of its operatives by assuring them that, in the event of their capture, Moscow will secure their repatriation at any cost. When the British Government arrested the man and wife Kroger spy team in 1961, the Soviet Government quickly responded by arresting a British schoolteacher, Gerald Brooke, who was on a visit to Moscow. Brooke, a supposed "master spy" was then offered to the British Government in trade for the convicted Kroger spy team.

The parallel between the Brooke-Kroger case and our current situation is all too clear. The Soviet Government will stop at nothing to maintain the effectiveness of its ongoing espionage campaign in the United States, Japan, and Western Europe. Clearly, Moscow is willing, if necessary, to endanger a pending summit meeting, a potential arms control agreement, diplomatic relations, and its perception by the Western media in order to obtain the repatriation of Mr. Zakharov. This should tell us something most revealing about the Soviet sense of priorities.

In the event, the British Government, after 8 years, felt obliged to give way to the Soviets, and an innocent schoolteacher was traded for the convicted KGB spies. I would gravely caution this administration and our media against emulating the British action. To give way to Soviet demands would, in effect, constitute declaring open season on American journalists in the Soviet Union. If the KGB can use its seizure of Mr. Daniloff to secure its desired ends, we should expect to see an American journalist arrested and imprisoned every time we arrest a KGB operative. The Soviet espionage campaign in this country is massive and we have only recently begun to come to grips with it. The arrest of Mr. Daniloff represents the first Soviet effort to frighten us away from a viable counterespionage strategy.

Needless to say, the U.S. Government and, I might add, the governments of its European allies, are morally obliged to make every effort to secure the release of Mr. Daniloff. His arrest is a cause of anguish to his family, his friends, and his country. It also constitutes a gross affront to the integrity of the international press. We can deal with that affront only by standing together in a firm and resolute fashion. Backing down to Soviet demands will lead only to a repetition of this deplorable incident.●

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, the American people are watching with shock and a growing sense of anger as an unseemly drama is being played out in Moscow. There, American journalist Nicholas Daniloff—respected Moscow correspondent for U.S. News & World Report—is being held in a KGB prison on obviously fabricated spy charges.

His arrest, the result of a KGB setup, again showed the world that the Soviets will stoop to any tactic—no matter how transparent or vicious—to accomplish their aims. In this case, their objective is clear: Mr. Daniloff is being held in an effort to secure the release of Gennadi Zakharov, a Soviet emissary stationed at the United Nations, who was arrested on legitimate charges of espionage.

However, the two cases are grossly dissimilar. Daniloff is a respected journalist, a seasoned correspondent who has covered the Kremlin and the Soviet people for some time. The Soviet being held in this country is a spy, caught redhanded by Federal authorities. Despite the claims of the Soviet Government, Nicholas Daniloff is simply a reporter doing his job, who was targeted by the KGB for a setup.

President Reagan has called upon Soviet leader Gorbachev to release Mr. Daniloff and has repeatedly warned that his continued detention threatens progress on virtually all fronts of Soviet-American relations.

I rise today to join President Reagan in calling for the immediate release of Nicholas Daniloff and to express my anger and dismay at this blatant act of intimidation. Toward that end, I am pleased to join my colleagues in cosponsoring the Senate resolution condemning this act and calling for Mr. Daniloff's immediate release from prison.

This resolution should say to the Soviet Government that the world is watching this scenario and that decent people everwhere are appalled and disgusted by what they are seeing.

Mr. DOLE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, at 2:30 under the agreement reached yesterday, we will vote on both the Daniloff and the terrorism resolutions. I would expect that both these resolutions would pass by unanimous or near unanimous vote. I have asked that a number of Senators be added as cosponsors. I have not made the request for Senators THURMOND, D'AMATO, HAWKINS, ABDNOR, SPECTER, SYMMS, MATTINGLY, and MCCONNELL. I would ask unanimous consent that they be listed as cosponsors on both amendments. There may be similar requests on the other side.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Might the Senator from New York be listed?

Mr. DOLE. And the Senator from New York, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SIMON], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. PRYOR], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. MCCLURE], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. DENTON], the Senator from New York [Mr. MOYNIHAN], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DURENBERGER], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. ROTH], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIXON], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SASSER], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. RUDMAN], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HECHT], the Senator from Texas [Mr. GRAMM], and the Senator from California [Mr. WILSON]. We will continue to add names. I would hope that everyone would cosponsor both resolutions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

NEW TERRORIST ATTACKS UNDERSCORE IMPORTANCE OF RESOLUTION

Mr. DOLE. In the case of the terrorism resolution, the events of the past 24 hours underscore again that Americans, as well as other innocent people, are under attack around the world, and that our fight against terrorism is still far from won. Yet another American civilian, Frank Herbert Reed, has apparently been kidnaped in Beirut. And there has been another wave of terrorist bombings in Europe, especially the bloody attack on the Paris City Hall.

Yesterday, we agreed that the terrorism resolution would not be open to amendment, but in light of these events I would ask unanimous consent that one amendment dealing with the Beirut kidnaping be in order. And I will offer that amendment following the vote on the Daniloff resolution when Senator BYRD is present. But I think it has been cleared on both sides and that amendment will be offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. I hope that the message is loud and clear. With reference to the Daniloff resolution, I think it does contain a much needed message. I think it is aimed pointblank at the Kremlin leadership. The message can be summed up in one simple word: Enough. Enough of this reckless gamesmanship, which is seriously undermining our bilateral relations at a critical time and threatening the summit; enough playing around with an innocent person's life.

□ 1420

I am certain there are some "Russian Rambos" who think we are bluffing, who tell each other that the Americans are not going to risk the summit or trade or sales of wheat or abiding by the SALT agreement, or whatever it may be, over one American's freedom, but they are mistaken.

So Mr. Gorbachev and his cronies should understand that neither this Senator nor, I think, any other Senator is going to urge the President of the United States to sit down with Mr. Gorbachev while an innocent American is languishing in some Soviet jail.

Mr. President, it seems to me that we have reached the point, and the message is clear—it is bipartisan, and I assume it is nearly unanimous—that we do not take the false imprisonment of one American lightly. If we should, we would set a precedent that would never be overturned.

So I again commend the distinguished minority leader for his assistance, as well as Members on both sides of the aisle. This is a nonpartisan, bipartisan—call it what you will—effort to indicate, in a clear and convincing way, that this does threaten what we hope could be an improving relationship in the coming months and the coming years.

Mr. President, I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECTER. I thank the distinguished majority leader.

Mr. President, I join in support of this resolution condemning the action of the Soviet Union in the arrest of Mr. Daniloff. The action by the Soviet Union is a direct violation of the Helsinki accords, which provide, in relevant part:

> The participating States reaffirm that the legitimate pursuit of their professional activity will neither render journalists liable to expulsion nor otherwise penalize them.

We talk in the United States about the chilling effect of governmental action on journalists. What the Soviet Union does is to freeze the activities of journalists, and that will be the consequence if the arrest and detention of Mr. Daniloff is permitted to stand.

The journalists of the world perform a very vital function in exposing wrongdoing and bringing to the attention of the public the activities of government. That, of course, is a valued right in the United States, where Jefferson expressed it best of all when he said:

> If I had to choose between newspapers without government or government without newspapers, I would unhesitatingly choose newspapers without government.

We enjoy unparalleled rights in this country, under the first amendment. Journalists like Mr. Nicholas Daniloff, who travel to the Soviet Union, perform a great function for the world. Unless the journalists are to be permitted to gather the news and to report it, we will have no idea as to what goes on in the Soviet Union. That is why it is so important that every ounce of moral suasion be brought to bear on the Soviet Union to release Nicholas Daniloff, and I hope they will hear these very strong words from the United States Senate today.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I yield the remainder of my time to the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. MCCLURE].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho is recognized.

Mr. MCCLURE. I thank the majority leader for yielding this time to me, Mr. President, because I think it is important for us to affirm once again what has been said before—that this is a nonpartisan or bipartisan reaction on the part of the Senate of the United States in both of these resolutions.

Take the issue of Mr. Daniloff, as an example: It is simply an illustration of what many of us know to be true of the Soviet regime, that human life has much less value in their system than in ours. The freedom of a single individual is to be bartered away in tactical gain for themselves, as they view it.

Under our system, individual liberty and individual rights are absolutely protected by the Constitution of the United States; but, beyond that, they are enshrined in the very essence of or society. Individuals have individual rights given to us by our Creator, which again the Soviet Union denies, both in its creation and in the possession of individual rights. There is a total contrast in systems and in values.

With respect to the issue of terrorism, I think that, once again, the terrorism we have seen in the last few days illustrates what is a fact in our world today—a very unpleasant world at times—totally unacceptable means to gain ends which are to them desirable, and to use human life, both its freedom, in the case of the abduction and kidnaping of individuals, and in the extinguishment of life, in the terrorist attacks upon individuals or groups around the world.

Again, there is a contrast in systems, in which we find ourselves in international conflict and in international tensions which are used by other people in ways that are totally unacceptable to the American people. We must find ways in which to contrast their actions with our own ideals.

It may require us at times to learn to play some of the game by some of their rules in order to deny to them the opportunities to gain advantage, or appear to gain advantage, as a result of the use of terrorism or kidnapping.

I think both of these resolutions are appropriate and absolutely necessary. But I submit, Mr. President, that we still have to learn to take appropriate action—not just talk, but appropriate action—in dealing with international terrorism.

The other question of dealing with the Soviet Union on the imprisonment of a journalist is a much more straightforward issue in the relationship between two nations than is the issue of terrorism, which is an instrument of ideology. It demands a response from the United States, more than simply the passage of a resolution, as much as I support this resolution, as much as I support the necessity of adopting such a resolution.

Mr. President, the United States is being forced to the adoption of affirmative action to deal with the issues of terrorism. We see it cropping up in our own country, as I noticed the attack by tear gas bomb in New York City. If it is acceptable in international terms, then why is not some kind of an attack upon a group of people acceptable in the United States? That inevitably intrudes itself into our civil discourse as well as our international discourse. It is equally unacceptable whether it happens in Istanbul or in New York City. It is equally unacceptable whether it is the taking of human life or the destruction of civil liberties within our own country.

We are going to have to respond to it internationally. We cannot respond to it simply by the passage of resolutions or by dealing with civil disorder in our own country.

Mr. President, I think we have not been challenged with a more difficult task in recent history than the task of knowing how to live up to our own ideals and confronting terrorist tactics.

Mr. President, I urge the adoption of both amendments, and I reserve the remainder of my time.

□ 1430

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator yield me time?

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I am happy to yield such time as is remaining to my distinguished leader.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The minority leader is recognized for 1 minute and 21 seconds.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, this is an opportunity for the U.S. Senate to send a message not only to the Soviet Union but to the world that we do not stand for, we do not believe in, and we protest most strongly this incarceration of Nicholas Daniloff.

It could have been any other citizen. It could have been a businessman. It could have been any other of many thousands of Americans who from time to time go to the Soviet Union on business or to tour the country—or what parts of the country the Soviets are willing to let them see.

Mr. President, I am ready to go further if need be and support sanctions or whatever. It seems a little bit awkward that we subsidize grain sales to the Soviet Union at the time of the incarceration of Nicholas Daniloff. So we could do something other than offer this resolution.

I would hope that the Senate would unanimously on both sides of the aisle today support this resolution.

I thank the distinguished majority leader for his leadership in offering this resolution and allowing me to be a cosponsor.

I yield whatever time I have remaining to the Senator from California.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I rise to commend all of the speakers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2:30 having arrived——

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator may have 1 minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. WILSON. I thank the Chair.

I particularly commend the minority leader for the published remarks attributed to him. I think that they and the statements that we have heard on the floor today do not begin really to express the outrage of those speakers and others.

I do not know how we can hope to free innocent millions around the world from the fear of nuclear holocaust if we cannot send individual journalists, or businessmen, or tourists to the Soviet Union without their fearing being framed and becoming innocent pawns in the Soviet game of the big lie. We must not trade an innocent U.S. citizen for a Soviet spy. To do so would be to give credence to that big lie.

We must instead, Mr. President, support the President of the United States, as these speakers on both sides of the aisle have done, refuting that lie and demanding the unconditional release of Nick Daniloff.

Unless and until he is unconditionally released, let all the world be on notice that the much celebrated new openness of the Gorbachev regime is as old and dishonest and seemingly as brutally violative of human rights as the much condemned excesses of the Stalin regime.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Under the previous order, the hour of 2:30 now having arrived, the Senate will vote on Senate Resolution 486.

The question is on agreeing to the resolution. On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DANFORTH], the Senator from Utah [Mr. GARN], the Senator from Kansas [Mrs. KASSEBAUM], the Senator from Alaska [Mr. MURKOWSKI], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. RUDMAN] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SYMMS], are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Alaska [Mr. MURKOWSKI], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. RUDMAN] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SYMMS] would each vote "Yea."

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BUMPERS], is necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BUMPERS], would vote "Yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

So the resolution (S. Res. 486) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution (S. Res. 486), with its preamble, reads as follows:

S. RES. 486

(Relating to the arrest of U.S. correspondent Nicholas Daniloff)

I. Whereas the arrest and indictment on trumped up charges by the government of the Soviet Union of Nicholas Daniloff, American correspondent for U.S. News & World Report, is in clear contravention of accepted standards of international law and civil liberties;

II. Whereas the treatment of Mr. Daniloff is an inexcusable denial or the rights of a journalist to engage in the legitimate pursuit of his profession and a violation of Soviet obligations as a signatory of the Final Act of the Helsinki Accords guiding relations between participating states, specifically Basket III, Section 2, Article (c), Principles for the Improvement of Working Conditions for Journalists, which state that ". . . the participating states reaffirm that the legitimate pursuit of their professional activity will neither render journalists liable to expulsion nor otherwise penalize them."

III. Whereas the actions of the Soviet government further violate the spirit and letter of the provisions adopted at the review of the Helsinki accords held in Madrid in March, 1983, specifically Basket III, Cooperation in Humanitarian and other Fields, which affirms that the participating states ". . . will also consider ways and means to assist journalists from other participating states and thus enable them to resolve practical problems they may encounter . . ." and ". . . further increase the possibilities and, when necessary, improve the conditions for journalists from other participating States to establish and maintain personal contacts and communication with their sources;

Now therefore be it resolved by the Senate of the United States that the Senate—

1. condemns the Soviet Union for the unjustifiable arrest and indictment of Nicholas Daniloff and demands his immediate and unconditional release from custody by the Soviet Union.

2. expresses its deep concern that the failure of the Soviet Union to immediately and justly resolve this matter threatens to undermine constructive relations between the United States and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and jeopardizes the hopes for Summit Meeting between President Reagan and General Secretary Gorbachev, and

3. urges that all responsible news gathering and news accrediting organizations that provide support, membership or other privileges to Soviet news organizations should consider appropriate actions to underscore the demand for Daniloff's release.

SENATE RESOLUTION 487—RELATING TO THE CONDEMNATION OF RECENT ACTS OF TERRORISM IN PAKISTAN AND TURKEY

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now vote on Senate Resolution 487.

□ 1450

The Senator from Kansas is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, may we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators will please take their seats. Will Senators vacate the well and take their seats?

The Senator from Kansas.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Will the Senate please be in order? Senators are not in order. The majority leader is seeking recognition. Will Senators please take their seats? Will staff please also take their seats and refrain from discussing matters on the floor?

The majority leader is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 2776

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I have gotten unanimous consent to make an amendment in order, and I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be made in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objections?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, there is no objection to this amendment. It has been cleared on this side. I support it also as the chief sponsor of the resolution. It is an amendment to both the title and the body of the resolution.

I have no objection.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, let me simply indicate that this incorporates the latest kidnaping in Beirut. It adds the name of Frank Herbert Reed to the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The legislation clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. DOLE], for himself and Mr. BYRD, proposes an amendment numbered 2776.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

In the first paragraph of the preamble, after the words "and Istanbul, Turkey," insert the following: "and the kidnapping of an American civilian, Frank Herbert Reed, in Beirut, Lebanon,";

In the second paragraph of the preamble, after the words "in an Istanbul Synagogue," insert the following: "and the kidnapping of Frank Herbert Reed, placing the life and well-being of this innocent American civilian in jeopardy,";

In the first paragraph of the resolution, after the words "and Istanbul, Turkey," insert the following: "and the kidnapping of Frank Herbert Reed in Beirut,"; and

At the conclusion of the resolution add the following: "(F) Continue to make the immediate, unconditional and safe release of Frank Herbert Reed and all other Americans held hostage in Lebanon a high priority national goal."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment (No. 2776) was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table is agreed to.

Mr. DENTON. Mr. President, I rise in support of the resolution. Clearly, the terrorist incidents to which it refers must be condemned in the strongest possible terms. The actions of the perpetrators are an affront to the values of the civilized world. We recoil in horror at the terrorists' savage disregard for the value and dignity of human life, which we hold so dear.

But even as we condemn these abominations, let our condemnation not be a mere reactionary "lashing out" at the depravity of the episodes. Rather, let us see through our anguish and recognize the lessons to be learned from these terrorist incidents, so that our resolve to deal more effectively with international terrorism may be strengthened.

As painful as they are, there are lessons in these incidents; and, although the facts are still being sorted out, certain familiar patterns are clear.

With respect to the hijacking of Pan American flight 073 in Karachi, we have seen once again an American airliner targeted in a foreign land by elements of a well-financed, international terrorist conspiracy. Although people representing 13 different nationalities were aboard the aircraft, the Americans were the first to be threatened by the extortionists, and an American was, indeed, the first person to be singled out and killed.

The Istanbul synagogue massacre bears the marks of the Abu Nidal faction. While probably most Americans recognize that faction as the principal perpetrator of the Rome and Vienna airport massacres in December of 1985, the Abu Nidal group is, in fact, notorious for past vicious attacks on European synagogues, most notably in Brussels, Vienna and Rome. Also, the methods and weapons used—granades and machinegun fire into a group of innocent targets, killing 21 persons—are part of the modus operandi of Abu Nidal's terrorist faction. As we have seen in the past, Abu Nidal's activities and movements from country to country have been well-financed and facilitated by certain radical nation-states, most notably by Libya.

In hearings held over the past 5 years by the Judiciary Subcommittee on Security and Terrorism, which I chair, volumes of evidence have been amassed documenting the existence of an international terrorist network supported by certain radical nation-States, including Syria, Libya, Iran, Cuba, and North Korea. These terrorists have, with the ultimate support of the Soviet Union and its client States, attempted to coordinate a worldwide strategy designed to expel U.S. presence from key areas of the world. The United States is targeted because of its leadership position in the Western World, the values of which are considered by the terrorists to be inimical to the Marxist and Muslim values which so many of the terrorists and their sponsor States hold dear. The State of Israel and Jews around the world are also consistently targeted by Muslim and Palestinian terrorists.

The Karachi hijacking clearly illustrates several key dimensions of the strategy of this terrorist network. First, the incident was far removed, geographically, from Europe and the Middle East, where the most highly publicized terrorist incidents have occurred in recent years. This demonstrates the terrorists' strategy of attempting to coordinate terrorist incidents in as many different parts of the world as they can in order to stretch thin U.S. and Western ability to respond effectively to them. Clearly, our vigilance must be worldwide and constant.

Furthermore, although the incident directly affected a U.S. airline rather than the Government, the event was designed, at least in part, to cause Americans to question the costliness of maintaining a business or other presence in far-flung regions of the world.

Also, the incident was perpetrated in an Islamic-oriented country, Pakistan, which has been establishing a friendlier relationship with the United States. One key aspect of the strategy of the international terrorist network has been to intimidate and discourage Third World countries from moving to maintain close ties with the United States.

Ultimately, this radical expulsion strategy in all its aspects enures to the benefit of the Soviet Union in its continuing efforts to impede U.S. and Western access to vital world trade, including, most conspicuously, Mideastern oil and southern African minerals. We in the United States must recognize and understand the strategy and the goals of the terrorist movement if we are to develop effective policies for combating it.

While the incidents in Karachi and Istanbul can be seen as yet additional manifestations of the anti-United States and anti-Israel strategy of international terrorism, they also graphically demonstrate that no one in any country of the world is safe as long as these barbaric acts continue. The victims in Istanbul were Turkish, and among the victims of the hijacking were people from 13 different countries, many of whom were brutally killed or wounded. These were attacks on civilization, not just the Western World or Jewish religion. They have shown that terrorism victimizes all nationalities, races, and religions, alike.

If there can be any positive side to these incidents, let it be that all nations, East and West, will join in the fight against international terrorism. The resolution adopted by the United States and its allies at the Tokyo Economic Summit was a start; let that spirit of cooperation now expand to include all the nations of the civilized world.

Finally, we must also resolve to determine exactly who were sponsors of these terrorist incidents, and just how they facilitated the acts. The sponsors must not only be punished for these specific incidents, but the information we obtain may enable us to prevent such acts in the future.

Let us truly learn from these awful experiences and hasten the development of a U.S. policy which will effectively strike at the sources of international terrorism.

Thank you, Mr. President.

● Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I rise to deplore the reprehensible terrorist attacks in Istanbul, Turkey, Beirut, Lebanon, and Karachi, Pakistan. These savage acts illustrate once again the unrelenting danger that terrorism poses for the civilized world. I condemn the Istanbul and Karachi massacres in the strongest terms and extend my heartfelt condolences to the victims.

The latest terrorist atrocities unfortunately remind the world that terrorism is a form of warfare that continues to plague international politics. There is no lack of groups or individuals willing to engage in wanton violence in pursuit of political ends. The carnage of the past few days emphasizes the need for strong action in the battle against terrorism.

Terrorism is a phenomenon that spans national boundries; terrorist targets include the territory and citizens of dozens of countries. Due to the transnational nature of terrorism, any lasting solution must necessarily involve multilateral action by those States affected. The United States cannot win the war on terrorism by itself but must work vigorously with its friends and allies around the globe to errect a common front against the ravages of the terrorists and their supporters.

I strongly endorse Senate Resolution 487 and urge its immediate and unanimous passage.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I am pleased today to cosponsor the Senate resolution condemning the recent acts of terrorism in Karachi, Pakistan and Istanbul, Turkey.

With each new incident of terrorism the sensibilities of peace-loving people around the world are shaken anew. The events in Karachi and Istanbul stand as only the latest tragic reminders of terrorism's countless cost in human lives and misery.

The hijacking of the Pan American World Airways flight, an act which claimed the lives of 19 people—including two American citizens—is an act that deserves the outrage and condemnation of the world. Such is also the case in Istanbul, where 22 synagogue worshipers, including 7 rabbis, were killed when terrorists opened fire on the congregation.

However, the solution to terrorism is a painful one. It does not rest with appeasement of terrorists or bowing to their demands. Instead, the only true solution is to adopt a policy, like that of the Reagan administration, of refusing to accede to the demands of these lunatics, and to punish the Nations and individuals who carry out or sponsor these cruel and insane acts.

Mr. President, terrorism carried out against this Nation and its citizens should be regarded as an act of war—perpetrated by enemies of the United States. Our response must be firm and measured, but it must be firm at all times.

Ours must be a clear and indisputable message to those who practice these acts—a message of absolute intolerance of terrorism coupled with an unshakeable resolve to fight back when attacked.

This Nation's response to Libyan sponsored terrorism has been proven effective. It has shown that terrorism can be combatted effectively, and that as a Nation, our citizens are firmly united behind a policy that provides for the use of force when it is necessary to strike back against international terrorists.

I am pleased to join my colleagues today in cosponsoring this resolution.

So the resolution (S. Res. 487) as amended, was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

So the resolution (S. Res. 487), as amended, with its preamble, reads as follows:

S. RES. 487

Whereas, the recent terrorist attacks in Karachi, Pakistan, and Istanbul, Turkey, and the kidnapping of an American civilian, Frank Herbert Reed, in Beirut, Lebanon, demonstrate that international terrorism remains a principal threat to human life and democratic values;

Whereas the hijacking of Pan American Flight 73, which ended in the loss of many lives at Karachi International Airport, and the murder of 22 Turkish Jews as they worshiped in an Instanbul Synagogue, and the kidnapping of Frank Herbert Reed, placing the life and well-being of this innocent American civilian in jeopardy, underscore the continuing need for action against international terrorism and for all civilized nations to redouble their efforts to eradicate this scourge; and

Whereas, the United States should seize the initiative to expand international cooperation and coordination in the campaign against terrorism, and should be supported in that effort by its allies, and by all other responsible nations: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved That, the Senate—

(1) condemns vigorously the most recent terrorist acts in Karachi, Pakistan, and Istanbul, Turkey and the kidnapping of Frank Herbert Reed in Beirut, and offers its deepest sympathies and condolences to the victims of those attacks, and to their families;

(2) declares that international terrorism is a scourge which effects, ultimately, all nations, and that all civilized and responsible nations of the world should expand their efforts to combat this scourge;

(3) urges close international cooperation in the swift prosecution and punishment of those responsible for these crimes; and

(4) urges the President to take the following actions—

(A) place the subject of terrorism and the urgent need for international cooperation, including cooperation between the United States and the Soviet Union, in combatting this scourge on the agenda of any future United States-Soviet summit meeting;

(B) make increased antiterrorism cooperation a high priority subject at every appropriate opportunity he has with the leaders of the allies and friends of the United States;

(C) Redouble efforts to establish an international antiterrorism committee as called for in recently enacted legislation (Public Law 99-399) so that civilized countries may better cooperate in responding to these barbarous acts;

(D) Actively utilize existing rewards-for-information authorities to assist in apprehending and bringing to justice all those responsible for these reprehensible crimes;

(E) Consider taking appropriate constitutional measures against the individual responsible for these heinous crimes;

(F) Continue to make the immediate, unconditional and safe release of Frank Herbert Reed and all other Americans held hostage in Lebanon a high priority national goal.

Mr. DOLE. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. QUAYLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

THE DEATH OF DONALD R. FORTIER

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, during the Labor Day recess there was some bad news from the White House. It was the untimely death of a fine young man whom many of my colleagues had the opportunity to know and to respect. Donald R. Fortier, of the National Security Council, passed away after a courageous battle with cancer. Don worked with the Congress on many issues. He was known particularly for his quiet efficiency, good humor and overall brilliance. Don was a loyal and tireless worker for his country and his President, and will remain a role model for all staffers to follow.

Mr. Fortier was appointed deputy assistant to the President for national security affairs in December 1983. Prior to assuming that position, he served successively at the National Security Council as Director of Western European and NATO Affairs, and special assistant to the President for political-military affairs. Mr. Fortier joined the administration in 1981 as Deputy Director for policy planning at the Department of State.

A memorial service for Don will be held today at 11 a.m., at the Chevy Chase Presbyterian Church.

I know I speak for every Member when I say to his wife, Alison, and his son, Graham: Don will be missed; we will always remember him with fondness and admiration.

GOV. ALF LANDON TURNS NINETY-NINE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, today I join my fellow Kansans in wishing one of our greatest Kansans a happy 99th birthday. Today, Alf Landon, the father of our colleague NANCY KASSEBAUM, celebrates another milestone on a long and productive life that continues to be an inspiration to me and countless thousands in our State and throughout America.

He served two terms as Governor of Kansas from 1933 to 1937, and was the Republican nominee for President in 1936.

Governor Landon's political story is well known. He won the Republican nomination in 1936, but ran head-on into a juggernaut named "FDR." However, his influence upon our Republican Party and Government institutions continued. As far as this Senator is concerned, Governor Landon is still a "refreshing voice of common sense" from the heartland of America.

Alf Landon is recognized still as a man who stood fast against Government spending when the revenues did not balance the books. I have no doubt that today he is even questioning who will pay for his birthday cake.

During the Great Depression, while the Federal Government was spending heavily, and piling up huge debts, Governor Landon initiated a "no-frills budget" in Kansas and balanced it. His actions put him ahead of his time, where he remains today.

It was that kind of leadership that not only helped Kansas weather the depression but also endeared Governor Landon and his philosophy to responsible members of both political parties. It is that kind of wisdom and action, frankly, that we could use more of here in Washington.

Next year, I am certain Governor Landon will come to Washington aboard "Air Force One" for his 100th birthday party—taking up an offer made by President Reagan 4 years ago. Perhaps then he would stop by the Capitol, where some of his wisdom could rub off on all of us.

Mr. President, I know the Senate joins Kansas and me in saying "Happy Birthday, Governor" and sending our best wishes to his wonderful wife, Mrs. Theo Landon.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Parlimentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. DOMENICI. What is the Senate's business at this point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending business is H.R. 5234.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to speak for 3 minutes as if in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE DEATH OF FOUR JEMEZ PUEBLO FIREFIGHTERS

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, New Mexicans have many things of which we are rightfully proud, yet there is nothing we are more proud of then the devotion and selflessness of our people. I grieve, then, to report on the tragic deaths of four brave Jemez Pueblo firefighters while on assignment in Idaho.

These men, Andrew V. Waquie, Benjamin P. Waquie, Allen M. Baca, Jr., and Anthony Pecos, were doing what so many dedicated men and women call a day's work—what most of us would consider a perilous adventure. To our great sorrow, four members of a Jemez Pueblo crew died and five others were hospitalized when their troop carrier over-turned on their way back from the front lines.

These courageous men were killed while in service to their fellowman. Yet, their service is an example of the bravery that has been handed down from generation to generation in their families. Grandfathers, fathers, and sons have shared the fearless dedication of the firefighter tradition at Jemez Pueblo.

The shock from this terrible accident permeates the entire Jemez community, for they are a very tightly knit group. Even though Jemez Pueblo has been sending volunteers to fight fires for more than 80 years, there was no way to be prepared for a loss of such proportions. The Jemez Eagles are well known for their courageous representatives that travel the Western United States helping to control fires and save lives. I believe that these firefighters are among the bravest and best-trained in the country. Their expertise has played a vital role in fighting fires all over the United States as well as in New Mexico.

In the midst of this tragic report, I am glad to be able to relate to my colleagues that the last two of the injured firefighters will be flown home to the Jemez home. I wish them a speedy full recovery and a glad welcome home.

Finally, I invite my colleagues in the Senate, as well as all citizens of the United States, to join me and all New Mexico as we remember these brave men and the courage and fortitude they displayed in the face of constant danger.

□ 1520

Mr. President, I also indicate that one of the deceased was the brother of the current Governor of the Pueblo Indians called the Jemez Indians. We have talked with him. Clearly, this is one of those situations that is shocking to the entire community, not only the Jemez Indians, but all the Indians of New Mexico and, I dare say, the Indians of the United States.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I appreciate the opportunity to add my comments to those of the distinguished senior Senator from New Mexico.

This accident occurred during the recess, while I was home. As a matter of fact, I had been visiting the Boise Interagency Fire Center a few days before this accident, and they were expressing their own pride and their joy in being able to conduct these operations with no injuries, no serious injuries, and certainly no fatalities.

Then, just a few days later, at the Garden Valley fire on Anderson Creek, a portion of a temporary access road, which had been widened to make it possible to get to the fire and out again, failed when this truck was passing. As a result, the truck turned over, and their safety record was tarnished by these unfortunate deaths.

I can attest to the fact that this group of firefighters to whom the Senator refers, from the Pueblo in New Mexico, had enjoyed the reputation, and still do, of being among the best firefighting cadres in the United States. There is a westernwide mobilization for firefighting efforts from Alaska to California, from Maine to California, and there is no group that has a better reputation for skill and professionalism than this group. It is perhaps doubly unfortunate that such a professional group, such a highly trained and competent group, should be the one to suffer this kind of accident.

I assure the Senator from New Mexico that the people of Idaho are very grateful for the effort that was expended in keeping the damage in that forest fire in at least some measure of control at the time these men were there.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the senior Senator from Idaho.

It is a coincidence that the Senator from Idaho is on the floor at this time, managing a bill. When I send the Governor a copy of the transcript of this record, I will include Senator McCLURE's remarks.

I am sure they will be pleased to know that the State of Idaho, through you, is fully aware not only of the marvelous efforts of these men, but also, that you extend the sympathies of your State to their families and to the members of the Jemez Indian Pueblo tribe in New Mexico.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS, FISCAL YEAR 1987

The Senate continued with the consideration of H.R. 5234.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, it is my understanding that the pending business is the House bill referred to earlier and the remaining committee amendment thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. McCLURE. That committee amendment deals with the imposition of fees for the entrance to the national park system, and it was excluded from the unanimous-consent agreement earlier today because of the interest of Senator BRADLEY and perhaps Senator DURENBERGER with reference to that subject matter.

I am happy to yield at this time to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, this amendment came up first a few months ago in the supplemental appropriations bill. At that time, the rationale was given that we needed to increase entrance fees to certain national parks in order to take care of the summer rush. I objected to the amendment being considered at that time because I felt that we needed to have a more thorough evaluation of the need for the entrance fee and how the moneys would be used.

Subsequent to my objection, I had a lengthy meeting with Secretary Hodel and found that on a number of points on which I was concerned, there was a meeting of the minds.

The amendment that is now offered by the distinguished Senator from Idaho, it is my understanding, embodies much of the discussion I had with Secretary Hodel. I should like to ask the Senator specifically a few questions, just to confirm my understanding of the amendment and the intent of the author of the amendment and how it will be interpreted.

The first question I pose to the distinguished chairman is this: Will these entrance fees apply to multiaccess parks or to urban parks?

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, it is our intention or expectation that they would apply to multiaccess parks and urban parks of that nature.

The administration had earlier proposed legislation dealing with increases in park entrance fees. In connection with that legislation, we filed with the authorizing committee an application of key development criteria as appendix B to their testimony, and they included with that a list of park units that would be exempted or excluded from entrance fee lists and the reason for that exemption. I make reference to that because it indicates that it would not be their expectation that entrance fees would be attached to such units.

I ask unanimous consent to have that material printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

APPENDIX B

APPLICATION OF THE FEE DEVELOPMENT CRITERIA

The entry fee criteria are based upon the six legislative criteria stated in the Land and Water Conservation Fund, Public Law 88-578. And also articulated in the GAO Report To The Congress entitled "Increasing Entrance Fees—National Park Service". These criteria and their accompanying point-scoring values as determined by the study team's entrance fee rating model are as follows:

1. The direct and indirect cost to the government criterion is based upon the projected FY86 operations budget for the parks.

POINTS AND DETERMINING FACTORS

3—Annual operational budget in excess of $1 million.
2—Annual operational budget between $.5 and $1 million.
1—Annual operational budget less than $.5 million.

Based on fiscal year 1986 budget figures.

2. The visitor benefits criterion is based upon two marketing principles:

a. Depth of experience provided: (1) A single focus park indicates that the park has one major theme or activity use, and is typically used by the visitor for a half day or less. (2) A multi-focus park indicates that the park has a variety of different activities available to the visitor. Visitors typically spend the entire day involved in either a variety of activities or a single type of activity that is so broad or far-reaching in scope that it takes a full day or more to experience.

1—Primarily a single focus park.
2—Multi focus park.

b. Cost per visit is the cost to the government to provide the service on a per-person basis.

POINTS AND DETERMINING FACTORS

−1—Cost per visit less than $2.
0—Cost per visit between $2 and $5.
0—Cost per visit not known.
1—Cost per visit between $5 and $10.
2—Cost per visit over $10.

Based on fiscal year 1986 and fiscal year 1984 visitation figures.

3. The comparable fees charged by nonfederal public agencies criterion is based upon the projected cost of what a vehicle with 3.2 persons (standard number of visitors per vehicle) would expend for a similar experience in the surrounding/representative geographic area. This criterion is similar to the current requirements used in determining campground and park housing fees. For historic sites and recreational areas, in most cases, comparable costs are quite easily derived from surrounding similar state and private sites. For natural areas, the uniqueness of the site was the determining factor in the context of the geographical area. For those areas which have been recognized on an international basis—such as World Heritage Sites and Biosphere Reserves, and areas whose uniqueness draws large numbers of international visitors—the geographical area was determined to be the world. For these parks, comparable costs were determined from commensurate costs for similar experiences on a worldwide basis. Areas of lesser significance were rated accordingly:

POINTS AND DETERMINING FACTORS

−2—Comparables less than $2.
0—Comparables between $2 and $5.
0—No comparability possible.
1—Comparables between $5 and $10.
2—Comparables over $10.

4. The public policy or interest served criterion was the most subjective, philosophically complex, and politically sensitive of all the criteria. It should be, and was applied with the widest possible input of various public officials. In the 103 current or proposed entrance fee parks, this criterion was deemed non-appropriate to use. Examples of where highest level management may wish to exercise this criterion are:

a. Negative points: Symbolically sensitive areas such as: The Statue of Liberty; the White House; and, the Lincoln Memorial.

b. Negative points: Urban recreation areas located in and heavily utilized by very low income visitors.

c. Positive points: Areas where the low cost of operation and high use rate results in a total score, and resultant per visit cost which is less than that currently being charged.

d. Positive points: An area where projected revenue would be five or six times the cost to the government to operate the park.

POINTS AND DETERMINING FACTORS

0 to −7—Based upon estalished norms for the relationship of the park to its place in the National cultural and natural heritage of the Nation.

5. The other pertinent factors criterion is another criterion that should be, and was, used in only extremely unique situations. As opposed to the issues of national policy (criterion 4), this criterion is to be used to offset a total score that has been obviously distorted because of very unusual circumstances. Two examples would be:

a. A park where visitation was extremely low (resulting in a high cost per visit ratio) because of being closed for an extended period due to hurricane or fire damage.

b. A new park unit whose operational budget is high and visitation is low because of the costs of extra staff for land acquisition or historical research.

POINTS AND DETERMINING FACTORS

+2 to −2—Extremely unique situations administratively determined to effectively render the overall criteria as invalid and in need of adjustment.

6. The economic and administrative feasibility of fee collection criterion was utilized in a very straight-forward manner: Either it is feasible to collect entrance fees or it is not. Although the criterion is straightforward, its application may not be. Part of the reason for this confusion is that its application in many cases is based upon the traditional concept that entrance fees can only be collected at an entrance gate. This study categorically rejects this motion. There are literally hundreds of examples of non-federal areas where it is common practice to charge entrance fees and to require patrons to come to a visitor center or other central location to purchase their entrance tickets. Some of these examples are ski areas, several Canadian parks, and numerous historic sites. Other non-entrance fee examples which follow this same philosophy are out-of-state daily fishing permits, our own backcountry camping permits, and lock-box parking areas.

POINTS AND DETERMINING FACTORS

x1—Fee collection economically and administratively feasible.
x0—Fee collection not economically or administratively feasible.

The sub-total of the first five criteria are multiplied by 1 if fee collection is feasible or by 0 if fee collection is not feasible.

Mr. BRADLEY. It is my understanding that included in those units are Gateway Recreation Area and Delaware Water Gap.

Mr. McCLURE. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BRADLEY. The second question I pose is whether the revenue from the entrance fees is in addition to the appropriated baseline level.

Mr. McCLURE. The Senator is correct.

While the appropriated account is down slightly this year because of budgetary pressure, it is the expectation of the committee that the fees are in addition to the appropriated accounts and that the increased revenue will be used for the management of these park units. In addition, this is funded by direct appropriation.

Mr. BRADLEY. So that is a slightly different interpretation from that which has been offered by OMB?

□ 1530

Mr. McCLURE. If the Senator will yield, OMB in spread sheets will indicate a decrease in the appropriation as a result of the increase in fees collected. That is not the committee's approach because the committee intends that these fee collections after the costs of administration are deducted are additionally available. They are available in addition to that which is appropriated.

Mr. BRADLEY. One last question. As I understand the entrance fee revenues, they are to be used to argument the services in the park in which the revenues themselves are obtained. However, not all of the entrance fee revenues will be used in the individual park in which they are collected. My concern here is obviously that there are some parks in my own State of New Jersey—for example, Thomas Edison's Home Laboratory is visited by thousands and thousands of students and as to that fee, while it is only 50 cents, most of the people who come there do not pay any fee. I would like to think that some of the revenue that will be derived from the entrance fee will go into the general Park Service account, recognizing that not all of it will, but some of it will.

Mr. McCLURE. If the Senator will yield, it is correct to say that not all of the money generated goes back to the specific park unit in which it is generated. The direction in the language in the bill before us is that the costs of collection are first paid. Then it is applied to the park in which it is collected and the remainder then goes systemwide for those purposes. It does not go into the Park Service funds in the general account, but it does go systemwide so those revenues where they are in excess of the specific park unit would be available for the same kind of services in other park units.

Mr. BRADLEY. It is the understanding from the Senator that there will be excesses from some parks.

Mr. McCLURE. Yes, it is expected that some parks will generate revenues in excess of their needs and it will then be used by the Park Service in other units of the national park system.

Mr. BRADLEY. I thank the Senator, and it is good news for the school students who visit the Thomas Edison Laboratories.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLURE. I am happy to yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I would simply like to point out to underline what we said earlier this morning about how bad the condition of this budget is, that even after we add some $50 million which is $59 million plus the cost of collecting the fees, that the operations budget of the National Park Service is down from fiscal year 1986 of $610 million to $579 million this year with the fees added. So in effect what we have done is add $50 million of fees and end up with 29 million or 31 million fewer dollars than we had last year. That is not the design of the committee. That is the design of the administration and indeed of the Appropriations Committee in assigning us the 302(b) allocations.

So, I mean it is not anything we are doing in the committee. We need more money for this budget. Indeed, if we do not get additional 302(b) allocation, we are going to do worse things than this to the national parks. We may even have to close some of the national parks literally because we are having to cut so deeply.

Nevertheless, I think it is proper to say that the Park Service, after these fees, is going to have less money than it did last year.

Mr. BRADLEY. If the Senator will yield on that point, this would be further evidence to this fear that indeed without some change in policy there could be closures in some national parks. In Gateway National Recreation Area, which the distinguished chairman and ranking minority member knows is one of the most frequently visited parks in the country, it is in New Jersey and in New York, several times this year had to turn away thousands and thousands of visitors because there was inadequate space, inadequate parking areas.

I would have to say that it would be my hope that the facilities that are needed to accommodate the visitors who want to attend in growing numbers in northeastern part of the United States would be able to be accommodated through recognition that we are part of the Park Service as well.

I know the chairman and the ranking minority member both have the sensitivity, and I thank them very much for their consideration.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to make a correction?

Mr. McCLURE. Yes; I am happy to yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, the figures I just gave of $610 million being the BA enacted figures for fiscal year 1986 are correct and the figure of $579 million being the fiscal year 1987 Senate figures are correct. However, the $579 million is after the $50 million has been backed out. So if you add the $50 million back, in, you will get $629 million, which would be some $19 million more than last year.

So I would like to correct the RECORD to that extent, Mr. President.

It is still very bad news, but it is not as bad as we thought.

Mr. McCLURE. The Senator is correct. The only offset of that statement is it is a net increase; there may be some increased cost of fee collection. That is pretty hard to estimate because if all that is done is an increase in the amount of the fee, it does not necessarily increase the cost of collection of that fee.

So my guess would be that it is nearly all net and therefore the Senator's figures are correct.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I would say to the distinguished chairman and ranking minority member under these circumstances I have no objection to the amendment and I appreciate the clarification.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the committee amendment.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, there may be an amendment offered to the committee amendment. I am not certain. For that reason I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be temporarily laid aside so the Senator from Wisconsin may offer his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Wisconsin.

AMENDMENT NO. 2777

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE] for himself and Mr. HUMPHREY proposes an amendment numbered 2777.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so odered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 50 line 22, delete "$276,130,000," and insert in lieu thereof; "$186,130,000," on page 50, line 25, delete "$260,654,000," and insert in lieu thereof; "$170,654,000."

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, this is an amendment to the Interior appropriation bill that cuts $90 million from the Forest Service roadbuilding program. The reduction comes from two sources.

First, this amendment deletes $66.7 million of the $75 million provided for forest roads above the President's fiscal year 1987 budget. The balance of these funds, which we would not delete that will stay in the bill, goes for specific work at Mount St. Helen's, Monongalia, WV, and Hells Canyon, which would not be cut.

Second, the amendment cuts a further $23.3 million in forest roads below the President's budget level and represents about one-half the cut made by the House in its bill. Together, these cuts total $90 million and while it is a reduction it is still $22 million above the House level.

Why cut this account now? The answer is simple. This program is way, way over the President's level and so is the entire Interior bill. We've got to make cuts, and big ones, to bring this bill into line. While the Interior bill is notably stingy with parklands, wildlife preservation and other environmentally desirable items, it is positively overflowing with generosity toward the forest roads program even though many timber sales are big losers and timber market is soft.

Forest roads represent a very large percentage of the entire Forest Service budget. Each year the agency spends hundreds of millions of dollars to build new logging roads through the national forests, adding to and reconstructing its expansive and expensive system which already totals over 340,000 miles. I repeat that—340,000 miles of forest roads we have now. What does that mean? That is 14 times the circumference of the Earth. In fact, during the last 5 fiscal years the agency built 2,654 more miles of appropriated roads than its own projections said were necessary to support its timber harvesting program.

For example, in 1981 the Forest Service exceeded its road building target by 96 percent; in 1982 by 65 percent; in 1983 by 23 percent. It went down, and then wait. In 1984 it exceeded its goal by 40 percent.

As if this were not enough, in the next 10 years the agency would like to build about 40,000 more new miles of permanent roads, about the same mileage as in the entire Interstate Highway System.

I wonder how many people realize that? They are proposing to build over the next 10 years and, of course, this appropriation is part of it, about the same amount of miles as the entire Interstate Highway System.

□ 1540

Even worse, road building is cumulative. As the Forest Service continues exceeding its own road projections, each year it widens the gap between planned and excess roads.

Could this program be cut? You bet. According to House figures, even their considerably larger cut, properly targeted need not have a big impact on employment in the forest products industry. They suggest specific cuts in planning and management, preconstruction engineering, construction and reconstruction, all but one of which actually received increases from the administration for fiscal year 1987 over their originally proposed fiscal year 1986 levels.

Keep that in mind, an increase, an increase now. This is supposed to be a time when we are holding the spending down, reducing the spending. We are trying to reduce the spending without a tax increase. There is only one way you can do that, and that is to cut spending.

As I say, in most of these areas, spending would be increased, not cut, would be increased over the 1986 levels.

The forest roads program financed through direct appropriations is just one of a series of programs building roads which increase industry access to timber. This is not the only way we have access to timber. This is just one of several. According to the Congressional Research Service the Forest Service could reduce the impacts on timber sales and forest products employment by resorting to these other programs.

The Congressional Research Service suggests three options which might be used to reduce employment effects. The agency could concentrate its efforts on purchaser credit construction, where roads are built by the timber industry at their own expense, and paid for in kind by national forest timber. The agency could concentrate on reselling roaded timber from contracts bought back by the Forest Service under the Timber Buyout Act. Finally, the agency could concentrate its new sales on already roaded areas.

While these are all short-term solutions, they detail alternatives which could mitigate employment losses due to road construction cutbacks. Yet the Forest Service declines to follow this sensible path, choosing instead to make cuts in support for purchaser credit roads instead of in their own forest roads program. What is worse, purchaser roads are usually much cheaper for the U.S. Government than Forest Service efforts.

Now, Mr. President, the reason this is opposed by virtually every environmental group in the country that has taken any position at all is because roadbuilding is also environmentally damaging. According to the Congressional Research Service, road construction is the most environmentally damaging aspect of the timber program. In general, roads and road construction cause more erosion and sedimentation than logging or forest fires.

Roads can destroy fish and wildlife habitat, disturb migration routes and degrade water quality while yielding little of the multiple-use benefits claimed by the Forest Service. For example, while 94 percent of roads are constructed for timber access just 1 percent are for recreation purposes according to the agency's own explanatory budget notes.

Mr. President, for this reason my amendment is supported by 10 major environmental groups. Consider who they are: The Defenders of Wildlife, the Environmental Policy Institute, the National Audubon Society, the National Wildlife Federation, the Sierra Club, the Environmental Defense Fund, the Izaak Walton League, the National Parks and Conservation Association, the National Resources Defense Council, and the Wilderness Society.

Finally, Mr. President, the timber sales served by these roads are often big, big, money losers for the taxpayers. A substantial volume of U.S. timber is sold below cost without recovering the expenses of growing and providing access to the trees offered for sale. The Office of Management and Budget reported in its 1987 budget summary that "Forest Service costs for timber and mineral activities exceeded the Federal share of receipts by $621 million in 1985." In other words, the cost of this program is far more than the income. To anybody who says this is a program that brings in money, the answer, of course, is given by the Office of Management and Budget when they said it cost $621 million more. According to the OMB, almost all of the loss was attributable to logging activities.

Does it make sense for the Congress to lavish excessive sums on forest roads which provide access to money-losing sales? Our largess may be driving us deeper and deeper into the hole.

Mr. President, earlier today, my good friend, that outstanding Senator from Louisiana, Senator JOHNSTON, states that without the credit for sale of the Elk Hills Naval Petroleum Reserve this bill would be over budget. Yet the distinguished Senator also stated that the Elk Hills provision would not survive conference. In other words, without budgetary flim-flam, this bill is over the 302(b) allocation and needs cutting. Where better than in an account so munificent, so grand, so over-stuffed that the Forest Service used it to build 2,500 more roads than they said they needed.

According to the committee report by the House Interior Subcommittee, "The Forest Service continues to exceed its planned and funded goals for road construction and reconstruction, despite funding reductions, as it has in each of the past 5 years." If the Forest Service does so well with what we give them, let us give them less. They will make do and handsomely.

Imagine if the Department of Defense ordered twice as many tanks each year as it said it needed. Pretty soon we would be overrun with tanks. I hope someone would notice this overabundance, scale back tank production and save some money. Roads do not disappear each year. They accumulate.

And we have more roads than projected need. So let us scale back this program the same way, save money, and use the roads we have.

After all, my amendment will not affect the amount budgeted under the Forest Road Program in support of the Purchaser Construction Program nor will it affect the fiscal year 1987 Timber Sales Program. It will also allow such ongoing activities as management of existing contracts, forest land planning, provision of rights-of-way, and reconstruction of multipurpose and recreation roads to continue at the budgeted level.

And roadbuilding cuts should not fall unequally on some areas of the country! In past years, the Forest Service used scare tactics to discourage cuts in its roadbuilding budget. Instead of applying cuts across the board, or in areas without road needs, the Forest Service has continually presented a "worst case" scenario claiming irreparable harm from roadbuilding decreases in areas such as the Pacific Northwest, our most profitable timber region. It is highly ironic that the Forest Service can make precise and catastrophic predictions of impacts of budget decreases while steadfastly maintaining that it cannot provide U.S. Senators with a list of the roads it hopes to construct with its hundreds of millions of taxpayer dollars.

That is right, Mr. President, any Member of the Senate could ask the Chief of the Forest Service where his agency will build the 808 miles of new hard-money roads that the President's budget says are necessary to support the Timber Program. The answer would be that: "No such list exists." Or, sorry, that information is "not available."

For 2 years, Mr. President, Representative, SIDNEY YATES, chairman of the House Interior Appropriations Subcommittee, has made that simple request: "Where are you going to build the roads?" And, the answer, Mr. President, is always: "We can't tell you."

Come on, Mr. President, how can the Forest Service determine the number of miles of roads it needs without knowing where the roads are and how much timber the roads access? But the Forest Service, incredibly, maintains that such information does not exist. Under thse circumstances, it is imperative that we view any Forest Service claims of drastic effects in regional timber production stemming from road money reductions with great skepticism. If we can't know what we are buying, how can we know the effect of buying less? The answer is simply, Mr. President, the Forest Service numbers are soft—the agency can simply make up any horror story it deems necessary and there is no standard to judge its claims. The difficulty is complicated by the fact that the agency is very willing to engage in such tactics.

Road construction cutbacks will not have an adverse regional impact. In fact, indications are that excess road construction during the "Age of Excess"—1981 to 1985—occurred throughout the National Forest System. That is, more roads were constructed or reconstructed in excess of planned and funded goals in all regions.

This is right, Mr. President, every region enjoyed part of the surplus in road construction. So, Forest Service claims of undue burdens on any region are gross exaggerations. We designed this amendment to distribute the spending reductions proportionately. We do not intend to single out any region and our amendment will not do so. Rather, we intend to be fair. Our amendment protects the purchaser credit road portion of the Forest Road Program, sparing its productive and more cost-effective elements.

Mr. President, I cannot overstate the importance of one aspect of the Forest Road Program. Just as roads accumulate every year, the transformation of the landscape of our national forests is a cumulative process. Development dominates more and more areas through road construction paid for with taxpayer dollars. Meanwhile, the Forest Service cuts back wildlife programs and closes campgrounds, and the silent shift in personnel within the agency begins to favor still more road construction and less conservation. Over the years, the Forest Service lost more and more wildlife biologists and recreation specialists, but it maintained high personnel levels of engineers and foresters. Mr. President, this cumulative impact has changed the makeup of the Forest Service and contributed materially to its devotion to roadbuilding.

Mr. President, the choice is clear. I hope the Senate will support the Proxmire-Humphrey amendment and fight Government waste, protect the environment, and restore honest budgeting.

I ask unanimous consent that the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire, Senator HUMPHREY, be added as a cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, while I see the distinguished Senator from Florida on the floor I would like to call his attention to editorials with which he may be familiar in two distinguished Florida papers. One is by the St. Petersburg Times of August 2, and let me read it. The headline of the editorial in the St. Petersburg Times is "Freeloading in the Federal Forests."

During the past five and a half years, the Reagan administration has spent more than a billion dollars on a road-building binge in our pristine national forests—so that private companies can haul out the timber at cut-rate costs. It's a bargain for the lumber industry, an assault on the environment and a ripoff of U.S. taxpayers.

Now the Tampa Tribune, May 7, of last year. The title of the editorial is "Roads and Green Mansions." And the first sentence reads:

Congress can do taxpayers and the environment a favor by putting a stop sign in front of the U.S. Forest Service's road builders.

I ask unanimous consent that these two editorials be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the St. Petersburg Times, Aug. 2, 1986]

FREELOADING IN THE FEDERAL FORESTS

During the past five and a half years, the Reagan administration has spent more than a billion dollars on a road-building binge in our pristine national forests—so that private companies can haul out the timber at cut-rate costs. It's a bargain for the lumber industry, an assault on the environment and a ripoff of U.S. taxpayers.

The network of logging roads in the national forests already totals 342,000 miles—eight times more than the entire Interstate Highway System. But that has not deterred the administration's program of turning over the public resources on federal lands to private industry's exploitation.

The taxpayers' burden—indeed, subsidy to the timber industry—is that the Forest Service spends more to grow trees and sell them than it gets back in timber receipts. Mr. Reagan's Office of Management and Budget estimates that the Forest Service's discount timber program lost about $600 million for this fiscal year.

The biggest dollar cost in the timber sales program is building the logging roads. The higher and inestimable cost is that slashing roads through the silent forests causes extensive and avoidable environmental damage—disrupting whole ecosystems, driving out wildlife, causing erosion and degrading water quality.

Yet the Reagan administration's mismanagement of the Forest Service continues with a requested $348 million for forest road construction in fiscal year 1987. All that, despite burgeoning deficits and a Forest Service report to Congress that its roadbuilding is ahead of schedule and no new primary access roads will be needed in fiscal 1987.

The Congress' recent budget resolution calls for cuts in the forest roads budget during the next three fiscal years and aims for a $240 million deficit reduction.

On Tuesday, the Senate Appropriations subcommittee on the Interior Department is scheduled to vote on the appropriations bill which contains funds for the Forest Service. Unnecessary forest roadbuilding ought to get the ax by at least the $67.6 million reduction urged by the Wilderness Society, which is calling for a one-year moratorium on new permanent roads in the national forests.

The cutback would not affect maintenance of existing roads or reduce the timber harvest next year because the roads into areas to be logged already have been built.

We hope the subcommittee will cut the road program and give some better balance to the Forest Service budget. While asking the huge sum for roads to serve private industry, the Reagan administration seeks only $13.3 million for recreational trail construction and maintenance in the majestic forests. A bare $10.4 million is sought for programs to improve fish and wildlife habitat.

That illustrates the administration's lopsided philosophy—enrich industry, soak the taxpayers, bloat the deficit and sacrifice the forests.

Sen. Lawton Chiles, D-Fla., is a member of the Appropriations Committee. When the Forest Service budget reaches the committee and the Senate floors, Chiles should join other responsible members in voting to cut the roads program, protect the forests and reduce the Reagan deficit.

[From the Tampa Tribune, May 7, 1985]

ROADS AND GREEN MANSIONS

Congress can do taxpayers and the environment a favor by putting up a stop sign in front of the U.S. Forest Service's road builders.

Road construction in the nation's 155 national forests is important. Obviously, trees can't be harvested without roads on which to transport them. But it appears roads are becoming a Forest Service obsession. In the past 10 years, the agency has built 91,000 miles of thoroughfares. By comparison, during that same period only 41,000 miles of the Interstate Highway System were constructed.

And many of the national forest roads are not economically justified. Frequently it cost the service more to build roads and oversee timber sales than it cost the timber company to conduct its operations. A Wilderness Society study found that the sale of the nation's trees over the past five years has cost taxpayers nearly $2.5 billion. Forest officials contest those figures, but it is obvious that during a period when the housing industry was volatile and timber demand in decline, the Forest Service push for roads was financially unsound.

Yet that has not diminished the agency's zeal. It is requesting a total of $450 million for roads from this year's Congress, almost a quarter of the Forest Service's proposed budget.

Such a request not only brings into question the Forest Service's economics, but also makes its environmental commitment suspect—and the service is charged with overseeing wildlife and recreational concerns, as well as timbering needs.

Conservationists say that thousands of miles of unneeded roads have been built to disqualify undeveloped woodlands from inclusion in the National Wilderness Preservation System, which permanently bans development in virgin forests. The argument gives a compelling explanation for the service's willingness to undertake road construction costs that will not be offset by timber sales.

It also gives a troubling explanation for the Reagan administration insistence that difficulty of access, rather than wealth of flora and fauna, be used as a restriction for areas to be proposed for the wilderness designation, which must be approved by Congress.

Such a strategy begins to make more sense when one recognizes that eliminating a forest's chances for the wilderness system not only benefits timber companies, but also mining interests.

The Forest Service chief, R. Max Peterson, has estimated that in the next 10 years between 35,000 and 45,000 miles of roads will be built in undeveloped national forests.

That's far too many. The Forest Service's responsibility is not solely to serve timber and mining interests, but also taxpayers, who want a fair return for their dollar and who, polls consistently show, have a high regard for conservation measures.

It would be irresponsible to use the wilderness designation as a ruse to prevent all mining and logging operations. But it is equally irresponsible to bulldoze roadways through virgin timber stands so that the merits of the wilderness designation can never be considered.

Congress should give the Forest Service a forceful jolt of public responsibility by cutting road construction funding to the barest minimum.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I would like to read from three other editorials briefly. One is from the Milwaukee Journal of April 16 of last year which is labeled "A Forest is More than Timber" and the last sentence in that says:

So what's the rush? The federal foresters should keep the bulldozers at bay and pay more attention to preserving the unique beauty of one of Wisconsin's born-again treasures. The value of national forests should not be measured in board feet alone.

The Minneapolis Star and Tribune, in an editorial on July 2, said the following:

Congress should refuse appropriations for roadbuilding in areas that now are roadless. It should stipulate that timber-program funds cannot be used for below-cost timber sales unless the Forest Service can justify the sale on other grounds, such as enhancing an area's recreational potential. And it should press the Forest Service to develop data that allow comparison of timber-program receipts and expenditures. In the national forests, sound free-market economics and sound environmental policies coincide. Congress can embrace both by acting to restrain the administration's timber-cutting zeal.

Mr. President, I have another editorial here from the Harrisburg (PA) Patriot. That editorial reads, August 1 of this year:

Roadbuilding is expensive and, in one way or another, the entire cost is borne by the Forest Service. Consequently, the timber-sales program actually costs the government money and is expected to lose $600 million this fiscal year alone. The administration seems oblivious to this rupture of red ink while haranguing Congress for not doing enough to reduce the federal deficit.

I am almost through. But I would like to read briefly from letters from several conservation organizations. The League of Conservation Voters, one of the most respected environmental organizations in this country, said in a letter dated September 9, and I will read it:

Many of the roads constructed by the Forest Service with taxpayer dollars are built in remote, environmentally fragile areas, where the government's costs of accessing and harvesting the trees are not recovered. Depending on how one interprets the Administration's accounting figures, the Forest Service timber program resulted in a net loss to the Federal Treasury of between $250 and $600 million in 1985 alone.

Now, from the National Wildlife Federation. The letter is dated September 9, which is just today. The letter reads as follows:

The National Wildlife Federation believes that it is high time we rein in this expensive, needless, and environmentally destructive program. Our National Forests already contain over 340,000 miles of roads—more than one mile of road for every square mile of forest.

Think of that. More than one mile of road for every square mile of forest.

Given the Forest Service's current surplus of roads, we simply do not need to continue this wasteful program at the level approved by the Senate Appropriations Committee.

And from the Sierra Club, in a letter also dated today:

Above and beyond the overfunding of Forest Service roadbuilding, the Committee bill also contains non-germane legislative language waiving all federal laws which might conflict with old, outdated national forest plans. (Title II, page 50, lines 12-18). This means that in national forests where new plans are not in place, old plans—which predate the National Forest Management Act, NEPA or RARE II—are immune from compliance with those laws or the Clean Water Act, the Endangered Species Act, even recently passed wilderness laws. This language could actually encourage development interests to attempt to delay or block new plans which may be more sensitive to multiple use values than the outdated plans.

The overfunding of the Forest Service roadbuilding program coupled with the federal laws which would mitigate the environmental damage represent a radical departure from even the current development-oriented policies of the Forest Service.

Mr. President, just one more letter which I would like to read from a group of environmental organizations. I will read one paragraph and then give you the organizations.

When this issue is debated on the Senate floor in September, we hope you will support the timber road budget reduction as passed by the House. Doing so will reduce the budget deficit and reduce environmental damage without adversely affecting planned timber activities.

That is signed by the president of the Defenders of Wildlife, the executive director of the Environmental Defense Fund, the president of the Environmental Policy Institute, the executive director of the Izaak Walton League of America, the president of the National Audubon Society, the president of the National Parks and Conservation Association, the executive vice president of the National Wildlife Federation, the executive director of the Natural Resources Defense Council, the executive director of the Sierra Club, and the president of the Wilderness Society.

Mr. President, I see my distinguished colleague, who is also sponsoring that amendment, with me on the floor.

I yield the floor.

Mr. HUMPHREY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I am a supporter of the amendment by the Senator from Wisconsin as usual on matters of spending, particularly wasteful spending. The Senator from Wisconsin is right on target. I heard over the intercom that he cited figures of some 343,000 miles of roads within our national forests. I would embellish that only pointing out that the length of mileage is sufficient to encircle the Earth some 14 times. We have enough roads in our national forests such that their total length could circle the circumference of the Earth 14 times.

Every now and then you run into an agency that has its thing. The thing in the U.S. Forest Service is building roads. They love building roads. It is their thing. They go far beyond the legitimate needs when they build excessive lengths of roads through the national forests.

Mr. President, it constitutes a subsidy of the lumber industry. The Senator from Wisconsin has correctly cited, and it is further well known that these lumbering operations are a net loss to the taxpayer.

□ 1600

Therefore, they constitute a subsidy of the lumbering industry, and that is wrong.

It is wrong to build more roads than we need in the sense that it damages the environment unnecessarily.

It is wrong to waste the money of the taxpayers, particularly at a time when there is such a dire need for us to cut spending.

Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin comprise a reasonable compromise between the environmental quality, fiscal responsibility and legitimate needs of forest users. Therefore, Mr. President, I encourage my colleagues to support this very wise and prudent amendment.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCCONNELL). Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. MCCLURE. Mr. President, I rise in very strong opposition to the pending amendment. I will try to summarize the arguments without going into detail because it is a complex issue which demands an understanding that the proponents of the amendment have not arrived at with respect to the tradeoffs and balances in public land management.

Some of the statements that have been made are partially true. Some of the statements are correct. And some of the statements are, frankly, incorrect, both in technical detail and in substance.

I think some points need to be made in rebuttal of the arguments that have been presented in support of the amendment. That is that the Forest Service is overbuilding.

The Forest Service actual road construction levels as compared to their plan after the enactment of appropriations bills does not show the matter that has been suggested here in the debate on the floor.

As a matter of fact, if you look at the planned or actual construction of forest roads as compared to the total of roads constructed, you will see a consistency of pattern of road construction.

The Department has been asked to make an analysis of the charge that the Forest Service is on a roadbuilding binge. They have been asked to respond to the rather broad and general statement that somehow these roads were costing the taxpayers rather than yielding revenues to the taxpayers.

Just in rather general terms, let me say to my friends and sponsors of this amendment that they say this is wasteful of money to spend on road construction. But road construction yields timber harvest and timber harvest yields revenue, and the net on balance is positive to the taxpayers and the budget.

If this amendment is adopted and we maintain a stable management policy over several years at the reduced levels of sales preparation, engineering appropriated roadbuilding and purchaser creditbuilding, preparation of sales of timber harvest from national forestlands, and we spread that into a program that does not distort it 1 year but has an even flow of timber from those lands over the next several years, this would actually cost the Treasury money because the $90 million would translate into outlays next year of $50 million, which would generate revenues of $85 million next year.

So if you adopt this amendment, on balance you lose $35 million.

I can detail exactly why that is so. I indicated it is a relatively technical question, and I do not want to get into too much of that because you have to understand that forest highway construction is partly the result of direct appropriations of moneys to build roads and, second, the authorization for the construction of roads to be built by the purchaser of timber. Either way, the total dollar account is the same. It does not determine whether it is an appropriated account up front or whether it is a reduction of revenues or an offset against sales at the end. But the aggregate expense is precisely the same, one way or the other.

It was stated a moment ago, erroneously, that purchaser credit roads cost less than appropriated account roads. That is simply not true unless all you are doing is dividing total roads by total dollars, recognizing that some of the more expensive roads are built by appropriated account because they are multipurpose roads, they are arterial, they are more important ones, they are more integral to the overall system than are purchaser credit roads, though not all of the purchaser credit roads. You might get a little less.

A purchaser credit road is built to precisely the same standards as required for an appropriated account role. They are engineered by the Forest Service in both instances. They are built to the same standards. They are contracted out and they cost the same per mile of equivalent road. There is no difference.

I might respond to the question of whether or not the Forest Service is actually overbuilding, on a binge of roadbuilding. Let me refer to last year's report that responded to the same charge.

I refer to page 69 of last year's report:

According to the House Appropriations Committee survey and investigative staff report of April 1985, a review of miles of new roads constructed in the past 6 years from 1979 to 1984 and to be constructed in the next decade, 1986 to 1995, including the number of miles to be constructed into roadless areas, did not support the allegations made. On the contrary, the data from the 1979-84 period show a rather constant level of new road construction. With the average annual miles of roads constructed for 1979-84, which is 3,981 miles, compared to the average annual number of miles planned for the next decade, 3,960, the difference is a decrease of 21 miles per year. The decrease in mileage does not support the allegations of a roadbuilding binge.

The same observation can be made for the new roads planned for roadless areas in the next decade. About 20 percent of the 3,960 average miles of new roads planned for each of the years in the next decade would be built into these areas. These roads would be built into roadless areas released by the Congress for development or recommended for development but for which Congress failed to enact legislation. Considering the opportunities for public participation and input into Forest Service activities, the public nature of the forest plans and RPA documents and congressional oversight, it is difficult to support the implication that the Forest Service has a secret plan to increase road construction into roadless areas. The total miles of roads constructed and reconstructed by the Forest Service has decreased steadily since 1980. In 1980, a total of 10,485 miles of roads were built or rebuilt. In 1986, the Forest Service plans to build or rebuild 7,682 miles of roads, a decrease of 2,803 miles, or 27 percent less than in 1980.

The budgetary data also do not support the allegation that the Forest Service is on a roadbuilding binge.

□ 1610

Again, that is reporting the House staff results rather than anything of our own.

Second, there was a charge made that somehow these roads were costing far too much, and they looked at a rather broad and general statement. Some of the criticism derives from an OBM account that says in effect that "the Forest Service cost for timber and mineral activities exceeded the Federal share of receipts by $621 million in 1985, and some sales did not cover costs."

Mr. President, we have an analysis of that particular question. I ask unanimous consent that that analysis be placed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the analysis was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AN ANALYSIS OF REVENUES AND COSTS

A great deal of public attention has been focused on the profitability of the Forest Service timber sales program. In 1984, several cash-flow analyses were released which indicated that a significant portion of the timber sales sold by the National Forests cost more to prepare and administer than they returned to the Treasury. Estimated annual losses from these studies for the 1982 timber sales program ranged from $92 to $900 million. While the validity of the processes and conclusions of each study has been questioned, one thing became abundantly clear—there is no agreed-upon method for accounting for the benefits and costs of the timber sales program. To this end, this Subcommittee appropriated $400,000 to the Forest Service in FY 1985 to develop a better timber sales accounting system.

THE ADMINISTRATION IS CONFUSED ABOUT THE COSTS OF THE TIMBER SALES PROGRAM

That a standardized timber sale accounting system is needed can be seen in the President's Budget for FY 1987. Timber sales costs and revenues are discussed in three places: (1) the Forest Service explanatory notes; (2) the Department of Agriculture Budget Summary; and (3) the President's major policy initiatives. There is wide disagreement about timber sale costs and revenues in these three sources.

A. The Forest Service view

The Forest Service's explanatory notes provide the most detailed breakdown of timber sales costs and revenues. Table 1 uses data from the explanatory notes to compare the costs of the timber sales program (page 150), with timber sales receipts.

TABLE 1.—COSTS AND REVENUES OF THE TIMBER SALES PROGRAM: FOREST SERVICE FISCAL YEAR 1987 BUDGET EXPLANATORY NOTES

[In thousands of dollars]

	1985	1986 estimate	1987 budget
Timber sales receipts:
Timber sales	498,547	802,548	715,700
K–V deposits	186,107	150,000	160,000
Brush disposal deposits	53,734	64,000	64,000
Salvage sales	15,232	25,000	27,000
Co-op deposits	39,878	38,991	42,600
Total, timber sales receipts	793,498	1,080,539	1,009,300
Total receipts	1,024,789	1,321,553	1,284,964

[In thousands of dollars]

	1985	1986 estimate	1987 budget
Timber sales costs:
Timber sales program	184,494	174,988	161,634
Timber sales support	53,784	49,224	39,793
Road construction	234,818	184,096	159,251
Brush disposal	41,822	48,026	47,835
Salvage fund	16,055	24,000	20,713
Other	47,049	47,818	42,254
Total, timber sales costs	578,022	528,152	471,480

This simplistic comparison, of course, incorporates some of the problems found in any cash-flow analysis. For example, joint costs are not allocated between timber and other resources. In addition, some costs, most notably General Administration, are not included. The magnitude of the difference between costs and revenues, however, is evidence that the overall program provides a net positive return to the Treasury and tends to confirm the Forest Service's statements that the timber sales program has returned a net of $1.4 billion to the Treasury over the last six years.

B. The Department of Agriculture view

The Department of Agriculture has a different view concerning the costs and receipts of the timber sale program. Table 2 comes from page 25 of the Department of Agriculture Budget Summary.

Comparing Tables 1 and 2 shows that the Forest Service and the Department paint quite a different picture of the costs of the Forest Service timber program. The Forest Service figures are for timber sales, whereas the Department's figures include costs for other parts of the timber management program. (It is interesting to note that the Department's figures for total receipts are about 10% below the Forest Service figures). The Department does not separate out timber sales receipts from total receipts. If the Forest Service timber sales receipt data are compared to the Department's timber related costs, however, the timber program still looks profitable, although less so than under the Forest Service view.

TABLE 2.—COSTS AND REVENUES USDA FISCAL YEAR 1987 BUDGET SUMMARY

C. The OMB view

The FY 1987 budget includes a proposal to change the formula for calculating payments to states and counties from gross receipts to net receipts. In support of this proposal, OMB claims "Forest Service costs for timber and mineral activities exceeded the Federal share of receipts by $621 million in 1985, and some timber sales did not cover costs."

OMB's calculations are detailed in Appendix A. OMB makes four critical errors in its calculation of net returns:

(1) Some timber receipts were ignored.

(2) All of the payments to counties and states were subtracted from timber and minerals receipts. Only 25% of timber and mineral receipts should have been subtracted for OMB purposes.

(3) Joint costs were allocated entirely to timber. The fact that past management, fire management, and other management activities are designed to benefit other resources is ignored.

(4) General Administration costs were allocated against the timber account. By definition, these costs cannot be allocated against any programs.

OMB's calculations incorporate the same kind of misconceptions and accounting errors that environmental community critics of the Forest Service timber sales program have made. The Forest Service has often spoken out against this same kind of misconstrued cash-flow accounting. Attached is a more detailed analysis outlining the shortcomings of OMB's approach.

The environmental community's criticisms of the economics of the National Forest timber sale program are clouded by its wilderness agenda. The motivation behind OMB's use of the same kind of erroneous accounting techniques is clearly to make a case for changing the county receipt formula.

Despite specious claims to the contrary, we believe that the cash-flow for the Forest Service timber sales program has been positive for most years. Generating a precise estimate at this time would require the use of accounting techniques which are not yet available. The magnitude of the difference between timber sales costs and revenues in Table 1, however, suggests that the program has a positive net income.

RECENT CONTRACT MODIFICATIONS WILL IMPROVE CASH-FLOW

In 1982, the Forest Service began to implement an aggressive program of new contractual conditions that were designed to ". . . encourage a regular flow into the marketplace of products manufactured from national forest timber, to provide a corresponding flow of timber sale receipts to the United States and local governments, to help insure financial responsibility of bidders, to encourage purchasers of Forest Service timber sales to harvest timber early in the contract term, and to reduce the need for extensions of future timber sale contracts."

The new conditions addressed cash downpayments, mid-point payments for sales over three years in length, bonding requirements, discounts for early harvest, stumpage rate adjustment, and stringent liabilities for defaulting contracts. While most of these provisions are designed to improve cash-flow to the Treasury, the cash downpayment and mid-point payment policies are the most effective in achieving that end. Since the policy was put into effect in 1982, both of these elements have been modified to bring about an even greater flow of early receipts to the Treasury. The cash downpayment rule, for example, has been increased from 5% of total bid price to 10% of total bid price. In addition, the cash deposit can be used to pay for timber only after 25% of the sale volume has been cut, removed, and paid for. Thus, the government has the use of the downpayment for as much as one year before the purchaser can apply it to his stumpage payments.

In Fiscal Year 1985, the average stumpage price for all national forest timber was $51.59 per MBF. The total harvest for that year was 10.9 billion board feet. Thus, the cash downpayment received by the government was over $56 million—twice the amount that would have been received prior to the implementation of the new contract procedures.

The mid-point payment policy has recently been modified to be included in all sales over one year in length. Furthermore, the Forest Service is now developing a periodic payment rule for all contracts. This rule would likely require that payments for timber be made to the government at periodic intervals regardless of whether timber has been harvested.

In addition to these contractual provisions, the average contract length has been reduced. This change results in a faster return of receipts to the Treasury. For example, on the Westside of Region 6 (Oregon and Washington) the average sale length went from 56 months in 1976 to 36 months in 1985. This change, when coupled with the cash downpayment and periodic payment requirements described above has a marked effect on the cash-flow to the government from national forest timber sales.

CONCLUSION

Despite claims to the contrary, we think that the overall forest timber sales program is a profit-making venture for the government. We agree that the Federal deficit must be reduced. Gus Kuehne spoke about the impacts of the deficit on our industry—those impacts are repeated throughout the economy. The Congress has only two tools for reducing the deficit: (1) cutting spending; and (2) increasing revenues. When someone says increase revenues, we often think of increasing taxes. There are some government programs, however, which generate revenues other than through taxes. The Forest Service timber sales program is such a revenue generating program. We urge you to strengthen and build programs such as the timber sales program. Such action will help meet the Forest Service's land management objectives and bring about positive returns to the Treasury.

APPENDIX A: OMB'S CALCULATION OF THE NET REVENUE FOR THE TIMBER SALES PROGRAM

Among the policy initiatives contained in the President's Budget for 1987 is a proposal to change the formula for payments to counties. Under current law, each county receives 25% of gross receipts generated on National Forests within its boundaries. The Administration proposes to change the basis for calculation from gross receipts to net receipts. In support of this proposal, the document states that:

"Forest Service costs for timber and mineral activities exceeded the Federal share of receipts by $621 million in 1985, and some timber sales did not cover costs."

Our understanding of the figures employed by OMB is as follows:

1985 receipts:	Thousands
Timber	$498,546
Minerals	77,522
Land uses	2,869
Other	439
Total receipts	579,376
Payments to counties	236,000
Net receipts	343,376
1985 costs:
Timber sales	194,702
Tongas	49,970
Salvage	15,232
BD	53,734
Road construction	206,023
Purchaser elect	33,898
Purchaser credit	107,949
Reforestation and TSI	104,664
KV	90,090
Minerals	26,572
Real estate	20,836
Fire	156,591
Pest management	20,079
General administration	181,191
Total	1,261,531
Purchaser credit receipts	−107,949
KV receipts	−186,107
Net costs	967,475
Net return to the Treasury	[1] −624,099

[1] Apparently, OMB came up with −$621,000,000 due to rounding off.

This analysis of the costs and revenues of the timber sale program incorporates all of the problems of the previous cash-flow analyses, as well as some unique and novel inconsistencies and inaccuracies.

A. THE OMB ANALYSIS DOES NOT AVOID THE MISTAKES OF PREVIOUS CASH FLOW ANALYSES

Since early 1984, several groups have undertaken cash-flow analyses of the Forest Service timber sale program. Unfortunately, each of these studies have encountered the problem that, under the Forest Service Multiple-Use Mandate, the timber sale program provides multiple benefits and the costs of the program are influenced by non-timber costs. As a result, cash-flow studies overestimate the timber sale costs and underestimate the benefits. A proper analysis would account for:

(1) Joint costs: Many timber sale activities provide non-timber resource benefits. Allocating all of the joint costs to timber overestimates the true costs.

(2) Mitigation costs: Costs for mitigating the impacts of timber harvest can be properly allocated to either the resource protected or the resource produced. Allocating all the costs to timber paints a picture of certainty where none exists.

(3) Revenues foregone: National Forest timber sales are designed to enhance or protect non-timber benefits, often at a cost to the purchaser. These provisions result in bid rates which are lower than they would have been without the provisions. These foregone revenues should be, but have not been, incorporated into an accounting of the timber sale program.

(4) Road costs: These costs represent investment in a capital improvement. These should be, but usually are not, depreciated over time and shared with adjacent and future harvests.

The OMB analysis did not solve these problems any better than the previous studies. The costs of the timber sales program, therefore, are overestimated.

B. THE OMB ANALYSIS MAKES UNIQUE ACCOUNTING ERRORS

In addition to the more general problems above, the OMB analysis made significant original errors in deciding which costs and revenues to use:

(1) The analysis ignored the following receipts from the timber and mineral programs, while including the corresponding costs:

	Receipts
Brush disposal	$53,734,000
Salvage	15,232,000
Mineral receipts from public domain	82,421,000
O&C receipts	16,056,000
Total	167,443,000

Salvage sale and brush disposal are not receipts associated with the 25% payment, but they are offsetting receipts, nevertheless.

Since costs for minerals on public domain lands and timber from O&C lands managed by the Forest Service were counted, those receipts should have been included as well.

(2) Seventy percent of the National Forest System General Administration costs was allocated to the timber and minerals program. By definition, however, General Administration cannot be assigned to any program.

(3) The entire reforestation program costs were included. While most of the reforestation funds are expended after timber harvest, some expenditures are designed to protect watersheds and other resources.

(4) Forest pest management and fire protection expenditures are often made to protect or provide for non-timber resources. The timber account should not bear the full burden of these costs.

(5) The Forest Service makes payments to counties on almost all of the receipts collected. In 1985, the Forest Service collected a total of $1,024 million and paid approximately $236 million to states and counties. OMB's calculations, however, counted the $236 million in payments against only the timber and mineral receipts. The net effect is a 60% overstatement of payments to counties charged against the timber and minerals accounts.

(6) Even if the correct payment to states figure had been used, we believe that these are transfer payments from the federal to local governments. They are not costs for activities associated with growing or selling timber.

OMB's calculation of the profitability of the timber sales program does not support the notion that the timber sales program loses money. The analysis is clouded by the desire to support a proposal to change the formula for making transfer payments.

Mr. McCLURE. To summarize it, what they had done in arriving at that conclusion was include the costs of such matters as brush disposal, salvage, mineral receipts from public domain, O & C receipts. They had included those as costs but they had not included the receipts as offsets. And when you take the joint costs, mitigation costs, revenues forgone, road costs, and apply that to the statement that was made, it becomes obvious that the OMB statement is not supported by analysis of the figures. OMB had made that statement because they wished to support an argument that the timber receipts should not be divided with the counties as provided by law, 25 percent of the gross revenues. They wished to change it to 25 percent of the net revenues, and they were trying to make the point that indeed there were no net revenues to share and therefore the Government was losing money when they complied with the current provisions of law. It was in that context that the statement was made, and it is not supported by the facts. Any thoughtful student of the issue will, after analyzing the figures, have to conclude that indeed OMB misstated—not overstated but misstated—their case.

Historic levels of road construction costs are not rising in spite of the rhetoric. If you look at the historic levels of road construction costs, from 1982 through 1986, there is a very consistent pattern that is slightly less than $200 million per year in timber roads if you exclude the other road categories. And the Senator from Wisconsin made reference to a couple of them. For example, you certainly cannot charge the recreation and viewing access to the Mount St. Helens disaster as a timber cost. There is no timber to be harvested. People are going there to look at the holocaust that leveled the forest for miles around as Mount St. Helens exploded. It is quite a sight to behold and thousands of visitors wish to go view that landscape. It is not because of the timber. The road construction and the viewpoints have absolutely nothing to do with the Timber Harvest Program.

It seems to me, Mr. President, if you look at all of the facts that are involved, it is not appropriate to indicate this amendment would save money, and I wish to end where I started. The amendment would cost the Treasury money because the expenditure of money will yield more in gross and net revenues than it will cost. And if you are going to have consistent timber management on the public lands that are set aside for timber harvest among other multiple uses, you must have roads to the appropriate lands upon which timber grows and should be harvested. Without those roads, you cannot maintain a stable housing industry at reasonable costs of lumber for a longer period of time. You cannot maintain stable economic conditions in the counties in which forest timber harvest is so important, and you cannot appropriately manage the multiple uses of the Forest Service lands without appropriate harvest of timber upon areas that are designated for timber harvest.

For those and a multitude of other reasons I will not take the time to belabor tonight, this amendment ought to be defeated. We ought to return to the stable program that this committee has funded over the last several years that yields net revenues, not costing the Government anything.

Mr. PROXMIRE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. PROXMIRE. In response to my good friend from Idaho—and I have great admiration for his ability and his knowledge, particularly in this area where he is really an expert—the Senator challenged the figures I used. He said part of what I said was incorrect. He did not say exactly what part. He was very kind about it. But, Mr. President, where do my figures come from? The come from the report of the Forest Service. They did not come out of my head. The overbuilding figures came directly from the earlier reports of the Forest Service. The Forest Service planning process in 1980 estimated the number of roads to support timber harvest and necessary road mileage was based on that number. The roads built above that level are largely our fault. We gave the agency money above the budget request.

Now, what the distinguished Senator from Idaho, who is a real magician, would suggest we can do by spending $70 million more than the administration requested is to save money. We are going to save money. Now, that is unusual. He disagrees with OMB. He disagrees with the administration. He seems to feel that the way to save money is to go far beyond what they request.

Mr. McCLURE. Will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. PROXMIRE. Yes.

Mr. McCLURE. Because I do not want to mislead anyone. I want the Senator to understand exactly what I said. First of all, the Senator is comparing this appropriation for road building with the budget request of the administration, not with what the Congress has done. In the Senator's second sentence, he agreed that that was the case, because we have consistently added more money to the annual timber harvest than the administration has requested.

We have done that because it is good management in the first place. And second, it also harvests timber and places it upon the market in order to keep lumber prices at reasonable levels for home builders across the country. And third, it is not a question of saving money in order to spend money. You invest the money in a timber sales program that yields revenues. And if the investment of that money yields revenues greater than the cost of that money, it seems to me that is not a savings of money; it is making money.

Mr. PROXMIRE. I think the Senator would have a very, very good case, if we had been sparing and Scrooge-like in providing roads in the past. When we build roads, as I said before, that would circumnavigate the Earth 14 times, when we build roads that in the next 10 years are going to be far bigger than the entire Federal Interstate Highway System, obviously you can overdo anything and we are overdoing it here.

Mr. President, let me point out that the Congressional Research Service, certainly not a biased organization, in a report that they made on June 25 rebutted much of what my good friend said, and I am going to read briefly from what they provided.

The Forest Service impact statement implies that the reduction would be applied directly to the direct construction program representing a 70 percent reduction in direct construction.

Now, here is what they say could be done instead:

It might be possible to substitute purchaser credit for funding many of the roads which would have been built with direct appropriations. Typically, appropriations are used for the more heavily traveled roads (most arterial and some collector roads), while purchaser credits are used for the more localized roads (some collector and most local roads). The Forest Service has been reluctant to require purchasers to build arterial roads, and the 1964 National Forest Roads and Trails Act states that timber purchasers shall not be required to bear the additional costs necessary to meet higher road standards. However, it could be possible for the Forest Service to use purchaser credits, augmented with appropriations, to build many of the roads which would have been built directly with appropriations. It is, however, questionable whether the appropriations are sufficient to augment purchaser credits for the arterial roads. For the longer term, Congress may wish to consider the cost effectiveness and the impact on other resources if purchaser credits, augmented with appropriations, were to replace to direct road construction appropriations.

That is one alternative. The second alternative:

Concentrate on Reselling Returned Contracts: Another possibility for minimizing the impact of short-term reduction in road construction would be to hasten the resale of timber contracts returned under the timber contract buyout programs. The roads built with appropriations for these sales have generally been completed, and thus the returned contracts could probably be resold without road direct construction appropriations. In fact, the volume of returned contracts, estimated by the Forest Service at 10–12 BBF, would nearly offset the 3.8 BBF to be resold in FY86 and the estimated 8 BBF reduction in FY87 and FY88. Concentrating on reselling the returned contracts is also consistent with the act that authorized the buyout program; section 2(a)(5)(A) of the Federal Timber Contract Payment Modification Act states that "Timber from returned or defaulted contracts shall be given preference in the Forest Service timber sales programs."

It also says:

Concentrating on reselling returned contracts is not free from potential problems. The greatest difficulties likely to be encountered are the impacts on Forest Service employees.

The final point:

Concentrate Sales in Roaded Areas: A third possibility is to concentrate timber sales in areas where most of the roads have already been built. This possibility may be limited by the 4-5 years generally required to prepare timber sales, although this time restriction could be compressed on some sales. In addition, the Forest Service has concentrated timber sales in roaded areas for several years, pending congressional resolution of RARE II and the wilderness controversy. Continued concentration of timber sales in roaded areas could harm the other resources and uses of these roaded areas.

Mr. President, finally, I want to quote from a House report which was made on this bill.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield on that point, before he refers to the House report?

Mr. PROXMIRE. I yield.

Mr. McCLURE. I want to make a response on the CRS report, because they make two or three very good points.

One is that you shall have the opportunity to make a choice between purchaser credit and appropriated accounts. I referred to that earlier.

The net effect at the end of all of this, whether you appropriate the money up front or subtract it from the receipts from the sale of timber, is the same on the Treasury and over a period of time. You could change it between fiscal years, but you do not change it over time. It is precisely the same.

Mr. PROXMIRE. We are worried about the fiscal year.

Mr. McCLURE. I am worried about 1988, and I am sure the Senator from Wisconsin is, also. We look at what is going to happen in 1987, and that is done.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Another way would be to say we would take it from the enormous amount of overbuilding since 1981, which broke all records.

Mr. McCLURE. That is not correct, because, as I pointed out, there has been a consistent record of road building over a long period of time, and it is projected to remain. There is no big bulge occurring.

The second point the Senator made was that CRS had said that you could save some money in the short term by taking the timber contracts returned under that controversial legislation passed by Congress earlier, and the Senator is correct—CRS is correct. You can do that, and it has largely been done already.

That is not a two-time savings; it is a one-time savings. It is a temporary expedient which, in the main, has already been applied and is not available to us anymore, and that particular suggestion is no longer an appropriate alternative.

The third point was with respect to the sale of roadless areas. The Senator is correct, and CRS is correct, if you do not enter the roadless areas that are now identified for multiple-use management. The wilderness issue has been settled in all States except mine and Montana, and by legislation which I supported and which has been passed by the Congress of the United States and signed into law. But if you cannot enter the areas that were previously roadless, then you must, in order to keep the timber harvest up, overharvest on the areas that are currently roaded and have been harvested intensively for the last 10 years while going through RARE I, II, III, or whatever that number may be.

Mr. PROXMIRE. When you have this enormous number of miles, enough to circumnavigate the Earth 14 times, you have plenty of area where you could forest without depleting the forest excessively.

Finally, Mr. President, I refer to one sentence in the House report which says:

> The committee notes that the Forest Service continues to exceed its planned and funded goals for road construction and reconstruction, despite the funding reductions, as it has in each of the past five years.

I yield the floor.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I will not take long. I was here for a while, or I would not impose.

Mr. MELCHER. I yield.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I have a table that compares the Interior appropriations bill with the subcommittee's 302(b) allocation of budget authority and outlays as submitted by the Budget Committee and adopted by the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. President, I support the Department of the Interior and related agencies appropriations bill as reported by the Appropriations Committee.

I commend the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, the Senator from Idaho, and the distinguished chairman of the full committee, the Senator from Oregon, for bringing this bill to the floor in accordance with the budget resolution for both budget authority and outlays.

Mr. President, H.R. 5234 as reported provides $7.9 billion in budget authority and $5.5 billion in outlays for fiscal year 1987 for the Department of the Interior, the Forest Service, selected Department of Energy programs, and other miscellaneous programs.

Taking into account outlays from prior-year budget authority and other adjustments, the bill is $0.1 billion in budget authority and less than $50 million in outlays under the subcommittee's section 302(b) allocation under the fiscal year 1987 budget resolution. The bill's credit activity, comprising a total of less than $50 million in direct loans and loan guarantees, is also consistent with the subcommittee's 302(b) allocation.

Mr. President, I note that this bill mandates the sale of the naval petroleum reserve [NPR]. Let me indicate that the bill assumes receipts of about $200 million from this sale in fiscal year 1987, which would suggest further receipts of possibly $2.0 billion in fiscal year 1988. I want it to be clear that while I do not object to this provision, I do believe that we may have to revisit the matter of this sale as the month proceeds, and we are looking for ways to avoid the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings sequester on October 1.

I urge the adoption of the bill as reported, and I urge my colleagues to oppose any amendments that will significantly increase the outlays associated with this bill.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that tables showing the relationship of the reported bill to the section 302(b) allocation, the House-passed bill, and the President's budget request, and a summary of total appropriations action to date, be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1).

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, this bill is within the allocated amounts—technically called the crosswalk. I admit that they have difficulty getting there, and they provided for some of this allocation through $200 million received from the sale of the naval petroleum reserve.

Mr. President, if there is any indication on the floor that this particular bill and the allocation of that portion of the Federal budget to this subcommittee is one that is fat—somebody used that kind of language—that it is a budget buster, that is nonsense. As a matter of fact, this particular group of appropriated accounts of our National Government has the second largest cut of any of the appropriated accounts that we will consider on the floor (see exhibit 2).

If you would like to know the ones that go up, it is pretty interesting. The 302(b) allocation for the Congress of the United States—is up. As a matter of fact, it is up on the real plus side. It is even over current services level, a level that equals last year's appropriation plus inflation. As you look across many of the appropriated accounts of our country and the bills they are producing in the appropriations process, many programs are funded at the current services level, and a few are over current services. This bill, even in these difficult times, is essentially a freeze.

It is pretty hard to maintain the activities of the Bureau of Land Management, the U.S. Bureau of Mines, and all the Indian programs of our Nation at a freeze level. If there ever were programs where we have a need for more money, where the people are suffering immensely, it is the programs of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, trying to take care of our Indian people under our trust relationship.

These and many more programs are all in this bill, and we gave them the target of essentially living this year just about the way they lived last year. Everybody ought to know that the last year that I am referring to is the year when we had an across-the-board sequester.

So I commend the Subcommittee on Appropriations and the full committee for living within their totals; they are about $50 million under in outlays, and I think they have done a good job.

Having said that, I really cannot believe that the U.S. House of Representatives in their appropriations bill intends that we live within their number for forest road construction. I believe that it is so low that clearly they intended the U.S. Senate to take care of the forest road problem for the United States.

In 1982 we were spending $200 million on this overall roadway system that we are talking about here today so that we can get into the forests, take care of the timberlands, and harvest them so we can indeed use that resource for the American people, for businessmen and women, and in some way compete with the enormous Canadian competition in terms of trade.

It was $200 million in 1982. It went down to $159 million in 1986, and the House comes along and appropriates $100 million. I really do not think that is serious. I think they clearly intend the good Senator from Idaho and the good Senator from Louisiana to go to conference with them and take care of the minimal forest road needs.

I hope someone will answer the continued use by the distinguished Senator from Wisconisn of the many miles of forest roads. It might be interesting to know how many miles of roads exist in each of the sovereign States. You might pick out 30 or 40 of them and you might be surprised there are more roads in each of those States than his statement about the forest system roads that would circle the world 10 times, roads that are needed for the kind of things we are doing everyday. I do not think it is a terribly relevant number.

Basically, I believe we ought to support the appropriators on this. They have to go to conference on this issue.

In addition, in just plain budget talk, if you take the $90 million out in the manner that they suggest, truly you do not save any money because the receipts to the Federal Government are less than what you saved in outlays. If you want to do it, because maybe someone here on the floor or maybe some groups who do not like what we are doing know how to manage the forest roads, then we ought to manage it right here, and vote for it on that score. But if we are talking about its impact on the budget, to take money out will actually reduce the amount of receipts that will come in, and the net effect will be more of a deficit rather than less.

The Senator from New Mexico is not saying this amendment will not reduce expenditures. Obviously, if you start literally getting rid of the Forest Service Road Program and do not expect us to do anything by way of timber cutting, especially by way of roadways that we have to build with taxpayer dollars, then obviously you can reduce expenditures. However, you will also lose receipts to the Federal Government from timber sales.

For those Senators who are wondering whether the Proxmire-Humphrey amendment contributes to deficit reduction, or whether it adds to the deficit, I am here to tell you that it adds to the deficit, because the receipts will be that much restrained over the amount which will be forthcoming if you go along with the appropriators in their estimate of need.

I ask unanimous consent that a table which I have prepared comparing the various allocations to the subcommittees to the baseline assumptions be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 2.)

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, this table furnishes evidence that this particular bill has been held down by the Budget Committee and by the Appropriations Committee in their allocation by far more than anything else except foreign aid and perhaps one other bill. I believe they have done a reasonably good job under those circumstances.

They do not have programs that have great appeal. Who cares about the Bureau of Mines, other than those who know it is the premier organization in the world that furnishes a great service to all of those who are concerned with mining and minerals? Who cares much about the Bureau of Indian Affairs unless you are out there where we need hospitals and roads for the Indian people and Indian education. Those are not the kind of issues that compete with the National Institutes of Health, or some of those other programs that are in the other appropriations bills which have been permitted to grow in real terms rather than be anything close to the freeze we have imposed on this bill.

I yield the floor.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield to the distinguished Democratic leader for such time as he needs without losing my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Montana [Mr. MELCHER] for his kindness and his characteristic courtesy.

I have indicated to the distinguished Senator from Louisiana [Mr. JOHNSTON] and to the distinguished chairman, Mr. MCCLURE, that I was going to ask consent that I might proceed as in morning business for the introduction of a bill. So, I have taken the floor for that purpose.

I make that unanimous-consent request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMPREHENSIVE NARCOTICS CONTROL ACT OF 1986

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, as I have also indicated to both Mr. MCCLURE and Mr. JOHNSTON that I would seek to trigger rule XIV, which I can do at any time during morning business.

Mr. President, I introduce this bill on behalf of Mr. CHILES, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Mr. DODD, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. SASSER, Mr. CRANSTON, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. NUNN, and myself.

This measure has been drawn by a task force of Democratic Senators whom I recently appointed for the purpose of developing legislation to deal with the drug problem in this country.

The task force has worked very diligently and long and hard over the past several weeks in developing this bill. It is the Comprehensive Narcotics Control Act of 1986. I applaud the members of the task force, under the leadership of Senator CHILES and Senator BIDEN, for the work that has been done. I thank them. I thank the various staffs of these Senators.

The task force brought the matter before the Democratic conference this afternoon. It was unanimously supported there by all 41 Democratic Senators who were present.

I also welcome the support, as I am sure the other task force members will, of our friends on the other side of the aisle. This is a bipartisan problem. It requires a bipartisan solution.

The President and Mrs. Reagan have been very interested, very active, very concerned about the matter, and the House of Representatives has already been working on the measure for some time.

I understand that the House will have its measure up for floor action perhaps tomorrow, and the task force on this side, the Democratic side, in the Senate has to a considerable extent tracked the House bill, but each member of the task force has made a distinct contribution to this bill.

There are provisions on education, rehabilitation, eradication, interdiction, law enforcement—among others—and each member contributed some part to the bill. Several of these provisions have been introduced heretofore, but they have not been able to get much committee attention, but coming together as the task force did, it has been able to weld and merge these various proposals, and has, I think, brought forth a very comprehensive bill to deal in a comprehensive, coordinated way at the Federal level with this terrible problem that afflicts this whole country.

The American people expect the drug pushers who wheel and deal in drugs that bring death to our young people and sorrow to all people who partake to any extent to be arrested, convicted and punished. There are those who may have a question about the costs. I say what will it cost if effective action is not taken quickly? What will then be the costs? We already see the costs in billions of dollars and in ruined lives—lives of our young people snatched away.

Mr. President, I compliment the task force and welcome the support of all Senators on both sides of the aisle and hope that the administration will also be supportive of this legislation. It is a common problem affecting our country and, much like a cancer, must be eradicated.

Mr. President, I introduce the bill and ask for its first reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the bill by title.

The assistant legislative clerk reads as follows:

A bill (S. 2798) to establish and implement a comprehensive policy to combat drug abuse in the United States.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask for the second reading of the bill. In order that it might, through the process of rule 14, be placed on the calendar, a Member is required to object to the second reading. I can object to my own request if no other Senator wishes to object.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Will it be convenient for the leader if I objected?

Mr. BYRD. I yield the floor for any objection from any Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the second reading?

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Chair and the senior Senator from Wisconsin and the manager of the bill and ranking manager, and all members of the task force and I again thank the Senator from Montana for yielding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read the second time on the second legislative day.

● Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and Mr. BIDEN, we are pleased to join with our Democratic colleagues today in introducing a comprehensive drug package which creates major new programs to address demand and treatment for drug abuse and substantially expands enforcement efforts across the board.

As cochairman of the Senate Democratic Working Group on Substance and Narcotics Abuse which drafted the legislation, we believe that this package is a positive commitment by the Democrats to fight drugs with substantial dollars and new or expanded programs. We have heard the public outcry and taken heed of the polls which show that they are willing to support such programs.

We have listened to our law enforcement officials nationwide and know that they are overwhelmed by increasing availability of drugs and growing crime rates in urban as well as rural areas.

We have taken heed of reports from our armed services and drug enforcement agencies that drug traffickers outman our efforts and outclass our high-tech communications systems, radar systems and intelligence networks with their sophisticated technologies.

We have received pleas for help from school administrators and teachers who know that "crack" is replacing marijuana as the drug of choice amongst many youth and they are frightened of its potent and addictive nature. They need information and they need tools.

We have requests from State and local officials, from companies, from churches, from parents, and from drug addicts who need treatment for their citizens, their employees, their congregations, their children and themselves. If they are lucky enough to find a bed, many cannot afford the exorbitant cost of drug rehabilitation.

Our package addresses the compounded needs associated with drug trafficking and abuse. The package authorizes $1.65 billion in enforcement, interdiction, eradication, research, treatment and education programs.

With mandatory sentences up to life imprisonment and fines up to $10 million for drug syndicates, the Democratic bill toughens laws against drug traffickers with the most stringent penalties and fines aimed at large volume traffickers and drug syndicates with their huge financial assets. The bill recognizes the dangerous effects of newer street drugs like "crack" and designer drugs by listing them under the Controlled Substances Act and decreasing the amounts necessary for enhanced penalties and fines.

The bill provides for double penalties for those who employ children in illegal drug enterprises and manufacture narcotics within 1,000 feet of schools.

A new criminal offense is authorized for those who launder funds with penalties up to 20 years and fines as high as $250,000 or twice the amount of the transaction.

To strengthen the legal system enforcing these penalties, the bill adds $1.3 billion for additional Federal prisons over the next 3 years and provides for $125 million to State and local law enforcement agencies for drug enforcement activities. In addition, the legislation directs the President to provide for five military sites which can be used to detain felons, especially those who are a Federal resonsibility such as illegal alien felons and major drug traffickers.

The Democrats double the amount of Federal dollars for interdiction programs by the Customs Service, Coast Guard and other armed services. Included in the expanded efforts are a new United States-Bahamian Drug Task Force, an all source intelligence center to provide information to all drug enforcement agencies, support under DOD for two long-range surveillance aircraft in the Caribbean and authority for DOD to loan equipment to drug enforcement agencies.

The State Department's International Narcotics Matter Bureau is provided with additional funds for eradication and a new buffer fund of $35 million for use in narcotics control upon submission of a plan by the President. In addition, the bill tightens immigration processing of suspected drug traffickers and requires a information system for U.S. Embassies to use in denying visas to such persons.

The bill recognizes the inadequacies of the existing $3 million program in drug education and commits $150 million for new education programs with a $125 million grant program for States and local districts which develop a K-12 comprehensive drug program and $25 million for five regional centers to provide necessary training and education of school administrators and teachers. The Secretary of Education is directed to provide all school districts by October 6 withy information on drug abuse with a special emphasis on crack and its lethal nature and potential harm for children whom drug dealers prey on as customers and dealers. October 6 has been designated as National Drug Abuse Education Day based on a resolution authored by the Senate Democratic Drug Task Force and passed by the Congress.

Noting the most obvious gap in current drug policy, the Democratic package provides for $394 million for drug abuse prevention, treatment and rehabilitation grants to States. In addition, the legislation directs more emphasis within the Department of Health and Human Services and the National Institute on Drug Abuse to conduct extended research on drug abuse and treatment methods and provide more information to practitioners as well as the public on specific drugs and their impacts and treatments.

Finally, realizing the need to better coordinate and implement Federal efforts in drug programs, the bill creates a new cabinet level official to be responsible for overseeing all drug programs and developing a long range strategy for both domestic and international drug policy.

Mr. President, we feel that this package is a firm statement of support from the Democratic membership of the Senate to act responsibly and efficiently to effectively address drug trafficking and abuse in this country. We stand ready to work with our Republican colleagues, the House and the President toward a final comprehensive program. We urge our congressional colleagues and the administration to join us in securing passage of a new and expanded drug policy.●

● Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I join with Senator CHILES and the other members of the Democratic Working Group on Narcotics and Substance Abuse in introducing the Comprehensive Narcotics Control Act of 1986. This legislation fulfills the mandate that the working group established which was to develop a comprehensive legislative initiative that addresses the major components that need to be included in any effective response to the issue of drug abuse in America. This bill provides comprehensive strategies in each of these areas, including the necessary resources to accomplish the goals. In addition, this bill includes the necessary framework to coordinate the many diverse agencies and programs that must be included if we are to attack the drug problem on every possible front.

First, this bill addresses the need to stop the cultivation of drugs in source countries; $52 million in additional funds is provided for foreign assistance programs to help countries eradicate drugs within their borders, including funds for countries who request help similar to the assistance we recently provided to Bolivia. For countries that do not cooperate with us in stemming drug production, the bill mandates that the U.S. vote against loans to such countries from the Multilateral Development Banks. In addition, this bill authorizes the President to deny tariff benefits to drug producing countries. This component of the strategy provides both the carrot and the stick necessary to stem the production of drugs in foreign countries.

Second, we must stem the flow of drugs into our borders. This bill approximately doubles the current level of funding for interdiction at the border, including increased funding for Coast Guard and Customs Service personnel. Moreover, this bill assigns Coast Guard law enforcement teams to Navy ships to bring the Department of Defense more actively into the fight against drug trafficking.

Third, we must rigorously enforce domestic drug control laws. This legislation increases penalties for most drug-related offenses, including a mandatory minimum penalty of 10 years imprisonment, and up to life, for the highest level of drug kingpins, which reflects the responsibility of the Federal Government to pursue and prosecute major narcotics syndicates. This bill also creates new offenses and increases penalties for drug offenses involving children, and fines are increased to strike at the financial underpinnings of drug organizations. This bill also recognizes the need for more law enforcement personnel, at both the Federal and State level. Increased funding is provided for more DEA agents, more prosecutors and for prison construction, to insure that drug traffickers are caught, sentenced, and stay in jail for their full sentences. Finally, the bill provided $125 million in grant money to State and local agencies to assist them in their drug law enforcement efforts.

Fourth, we reduce the demand for drugs by educating our youth about the perils of drug use. Though the President has stressed the need to reduce the demand for drugs, the Federal Government spends only $3 million nationwide for drug education. This bill provides $100 million in grant money to State and local school districts for drug abuse education, and creates an Office of Drug and Alcohol Abuse Education and Policy within the Department of Education to commit the Federal Government to a long-term campaign. The purpose of this section is to insure that every child in this Nation, in both public and private schools, receives objective and credible information about the consequences and dangers of drug use.

Fifth, we must treat those persons who have already fallen prey to the lure of drug abuse. While we as a society must begin to realize that drug users, like drug traffickers, are coconspirators in drug crimes, we must also realize that drug addicts prey upon innocent victims to finance their habits. We must find an appropriate mix between condemnation and compassion in our approach. Despite this administration's rhetoric about treating drug abusers, they have actually decreased the funding for drug abuse treatment in the last 4 years. These cuts have resulted in waiting lists of up to 6 months long for drug users who recognize their problem and who seek help in rebuilding their ability to seek employment and lead constructive lives. This bill provides $300 million to State and local treatment programs, both public and private, to help provide essential services to drug abusers who want help.

Though I have outlined the five essential components that must be addressed in any attack on the drug problem, we must also develop a more effective framework from which to pursue our goals. What we need is leadership. Right now, the Attorney General and the Vice President and the White House drug abuse adviser are all leading the Federal effort, of in different directions. The question remains, who is in charge of this Nation's drug control effort? Frankly, there is no clear answer, and that illustrates the problem.

This bill would place the responsibility for coordinating and implementing our drug control effort, both law enforcement and demand reduction, with one Cabinet-level official who would report directly to the President. This person would have the clout needed to end the bureaucratic infighting and petty turf battles that have consistently undermined our national effort. Moreover, Congress and the American people could look to this person as the leader, to tell us of our victories, to tell us still of our failures, and to continue to move this country toward a long-term effort to reduce drug abuse in America.

In conclusion, I would like to thank my colleagues on the working group for their active participation and cooperation in developing what I think is a comprehensive, well considered legislative proposal to address the drug problem in America. As a Senator who has been working on this issue for almost a decade, I am pleased to join in introducing this bill on behalf of the Senate Democrats. Coupled with the House action this week on a similar bill, I am hopeful that with Republican support we can pass this legislation and get it to the President's desk this Congress.●

● Mr. DODD. Mr. President, today we urge our colleagues in the Senate to take a giant step forward in the battle to prevent and treat drug and alcohol abuse in this country. By introducing the Comprehensive Narcotics Control Act of 1986, we are setting out both short- and long-term strategies to strengthen drug abuse prevention, education, treatment, enforcement, and interdiction efforts in this country. I commend the distinguished minority leader for appointing the task force on the problem of drug abuse and applaud my colleagues on this task force for joining me in sponsoring the Comprehensive Narcotics Control Act of 1986.

Due to the death of several well-known athletes, drug abuse has been at the forefront of public concern over the past several months. No one needs to remind the parents, peers, teachers, or neighbors of young people who have died or been crippled by drug abuse of the need for prevention and treatment efforts.

Despite the public outcry, the problem of childhood drug abuse appears to be getting worse. A 5-year decrease in drug use among high school seniors has stalled. The latest survey of 132 high schools across the country sponsored by the National Institute of Drug Abuse, for example, shows that the use of marijuana, tranquilizers, barbiturates, alcohol, and cigarettes has stopped falling. There has been an increase in the use of PCP and opiates other than heroin. And, there has been a big jump in the use of cocaine, the highest in the 11 years that the NIDA survey has been conducted. Although 80 to 85 percent of high school seniors surveyed acknowledged the harmful effects of using cocaine regularly, only one-third saw much danger in experimenting.

Last month, this task force introduced an emergency package to control the spread of such pure forms of cocaine as "crack." Several important measures in that legislation have become public law. To channel public concern over "crack" and all other forms of substance abuse into action, I had introduced a provision calling on the President to proclaim October 6, 1986, as "National Drug Abuse Education Day" in all schools from Connecticut to California. It will allow every school, from kindergarten through university, to focus the day's curriculum on the dangers of substance abuse. That provision passed the Senate and the House and has been signed into law by the President. So, on October 6, students, parents, teachers, law enforcment officials, and community leaders will be able to collaborate and educate each other as to the deadly risks posed by "crack" and many other drugs, including some that are socially acceptable such as alcohol.

None of us, however, has any illusions that one day of drug awareness education will solve the myriad of problems posed by substance abuse. For alcohol and drug abuse does not occur in a vacuum. And until we tackle some of the underlying problems, we will not make great strides forward. For this reason, I have sponsored a provision in the package being introduced today to target high risk youth for prevention and treatment programs. Under my provision, $50 million will be provided for model, public and private community-based programs which address the underlying causes of drug and alcohol abuse.

We know that during adolescence, a significant number of young people are the victims of physical, sexual, or psychological abuse, drop out of school, become pregnant, fail to get a job, commit violent or delinquent acts, experience mental health problems, and attempt suicide. Such young people are also at great risk of abusing drugs and alchohol.

Model programs are needed to prevent drug and alcohol abuse among high risk youth, including the operation of afterschool care programs, child abuse prevention and intervention programs, and programs designed to prevent students from dropping out of school, becoming teen parents, and remaining unemployed. And multidisciplinary programs which address the underlying causes of drug and alcohol abuse among high risk youth can serve to curb it and are necessary to prevent further abuse. By authorizing HHS to distribute $25 million for innovative prevention models and $25 million for multidisciplinary treatment and intervention models, we will be targeting those youth in most need of services.

In addition to placing a priority on programs for high risk youth, the Comprehensive Narcotics Control Act of 1986 emphasizes a full range of education, prevention, and treatment efforts in communities across the Nation. To encourage all communities to make substance abuse treatment and rehabilitation services a priority, HHS is directed to distribute $300 million by formula grants to all States from Connecticut to California. I commend the distinguished senior Senator from New York for making this contribution to the task force package. Likewise, I commend my distinguished colleage from Arizona, Mr. DECONCINI, for provisions in this package to address the special treatment, intervention and rehabilitation needs of American Indians.

Provisions directing the National Institute of Drug Abuse to develop and disseminate public service announcements on the dangers of drug abuse and to pursue additional research on effective prevention, treatment and rehabilitation programs have been carried over from the Crack Emergency Protection Act introduced last month. In the same manner, we have included the previously introduced measure requiring the Secretary of Health and Human Services, in conjunction with the Centers for Disease Control and the National Institute of Drug Abuse, to prepare an emergency action plan for intervention in the recent epidemic of crack abuse in this country.

The Narcotics Control Act of 1986 also provides for a wide range of educational measures on the dangers of drug abuse designed to reach children from kindergarten through university. In conjunction with my resolution declaring October 6, 1986, as "National Drug Abuse Education Day," the Secretary of Education is required to provide local schools across the Nation with emergency information packs on the dangers of alcohol and drug abuse, with a special emphasis on "crack."

I commend my distinguished colleague from West Virginia, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, for his work on developing a $125 million formula grant program encouraging schools and communities from Connecticut to California to establish statewide drug abuse education strategies. Funds will be available to develop and replicate model curricula and to train teachers, parents, law enforcement officials, and health professionals to work with students. I would also like to applaud the fine efforts of the distinguished senior Senator from Florida, for his work on providing $25 million to expand the Department of Education's existing regional training centers. Such centers will be able to assist States and local communities to establish long range, comprehensive drug abuse education programs.

In addition to making education, prevention, treatment, and rehabilitation efforts a No. 1 priority, the package being introduced today strengthens enforcement by stiffening penalties for major drug traffickers and for any traffickers who use children to distribute drugs. It creates new offenses for money laundering and adds the so-called designer drugs to the list of controlled substances. It provides $125 million on a matching basis to States and local agencies specifically for law enforcement activities.

The Comprehensive Narcotics Control Act of 1986 allocates $35 million for international efforts dependent upon a Presidential plan. It increases funding for the Bureau of International Narcotics matters at the State Department by some $17 million to strengthen their efforts. And it further provides $646 million to stop drug smuggling at the borders, thereby doubling the resources of the Coast Guard, Customs Service, the Justice Department, and the Department of Defense for interdiction activities. I would like to commend the fine work of my distinguished colleagues from Florida, Mr. CHILES; from Delaware, Mr. BIDEN; from Arizona, Mr. DECONCINI; from Georgia, Mr. NUNN; from New York, Mr. MOYNIHAN; and from Tennessee, Mr. SASSER; on the enforcement, interdiction, and international narcotic control sections.

Last but not least, the package being introduced today provides for coordination and leadership at the top levels of Government of all efforts to combat drug abuse. And it provides that all funds seized and forfeited by drug traffickers be used to pay for Federal, and local drug control programs, from enforcement and treatment to prevention and education.

In closing, I urge all our colleagues in the Senate and the President to join with us in taking serious, concerted, and comprehensive steps to combat drug abuse by younger and older Americans. I urge my colleagues to join this task force in sponsoring the Comprehensive Narcotics Control Act of 1986.●

● Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I am pleased to join in introducing the Comprehensive Narcotics Control Act of 1986.

The bill we are introducing today is a major piece of legislation which addresses the issue of drug abuse in our Nation—an issue which has been brought to the attention of nearly every American in recent weeks.

Drug abuse has reached epidemic proportions in this country. No longer is drug abuse an issue of concern only to those living in our inner cities. No longer is drug abuse confined to those who are poor and uneducated.

The use and abuse of controlled substances has reached every corner of our Nation and every level of our society.

In my home State of Maine we are seeing increased numbers of people who have become addicted to cocaine and crack. Young people who live not only in our cities, but in the most remote parts of our rural State have become involved with the use of illegal drugs.

The cost of drug abuse is high. We as a nation cannot afford the loss in economic terms—or in human terms. Every teenager who becomes hooked on drugs and does not complete high school represents not only lost wages and taxes to the Government but a greater loss of human potential to the future of this country.

Every pregnant woman who jeopardizes the health of her unborn child because of drug abuse robs the child of a fair chance of living a healthy, productive life—and increases the likelihood that society will need to provide special support for that child.

Each person who abuses narcotics not only damages his own life but also jeopardizes the lives of those around him and society as a whole.

This Nation must develop programs which will eradicate drug abuse among our citizens.

The Comprehensive Narcotics Control Act of 1986 establishes new and expanded programs which address prevention and treatment of drug abuse, as well as improve the coordination and enforcement of drug laws.

The bill also includes provisions which increase our drug enforcement capabilities and provide assistance to ongoing programs developed by State and local agencies.

The bill is comprehensive and addresses many weaknesses in existing law. I am particularly pleased that this legislation includes a provision to add a new air support branch for the U.S. Customs Service which would be based in the Northeast region of the country.

The bill's treatment and rehabilitation section includes funding for a much needed model program directed specifically for at risk youth. We need to design programs which treat children and adolescents separately, as their problems and involvement with drugs are intimately tied to their physical and emotional development.

This legislation is an important first step in the war on drugs. I urge my colleagues in the Senate to support our efforts to prevent drug abuse, to successfully treat those who are addicted, and to severely punish those who would profit by the sale of illegal narcotics in our Nation.●

● Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, over the past few weeks we've seen a dramatic heating up of the ongoing debate on the drug issue. Every tabloid, periodical, and politician has been speaking out against drugs. Citizens groups are galvanizing for action. Yet we have not seen a coordinated program to attack the various aspects of this critical problem.

We are united in our objectives. We all want drug free schools. We all want a drug free workplace. The plain truth is that desire alone will not achieve these goals. We must buckle down and begin the trench work if we are to win the war on drugs. The bill we introduce today starts us on this path.

Our bill is a coordinated package to meet the drug problem. We have learned from past experience that a piecemeal approach to drugs just won't work. Despite several years of intense effort in the Gulf of Mexico, drugs are still flooding into this country in record amounts.

We can't abandon interdiction efforts, but neither can we kid ourselves that in and of itself it will cure the problem. Our bill recognizes that. Our legislation includes increased penalties for drug offenses—particularly for major traffickers. It included funding for education and treatment. And it includes increased resources to Federal agencies for drug enforcement and interdiction.

Our legislation increases penalties for drug trafficking. It creates a new level of penalties for the most serious offenders—the kingpins of the drug trade.

Under current law, it is no more serious to possess 500 kilos of cocaine than it is to possess 1 kilo. That is ridiculous. Our bill says if you possess a large amount of an illegal drug you are a major dealer and you are going to pay the price: 10 years to life for the first offense, 20 years to life for a repeat offense—no suspended sentences, no probation, no parole.

Drug dealers must know that if they pump this poison into our society, they are going to prison—do drugs and you do time.

Next we take what are now the severest penalties in law and make them more effective. We lower from 1 kilo to one-half kilo the amount needed to charge individuals as serious traffickers. A half a kilo is about a pound. If you have a pound of a dangerous drug—such as cocaine—in your possession you're dealing drugs. Our bill says try it and you're gone: 5 to 25 years for the first offense, 10 to 40 years for a repeat offense. No suspended sentences, no probation, no parole. We also add crack to schedule 1 of the Controlled Substances Act. Schedule 1 drugs are those that have no medical value. That is where crack belongs. It is as dangerous as any drug on the street and more addictive than almost any of them. Then we say that if you possess 50 grams you are a major trafficker—10 years to life for the first offense. If you have even 5 grams in your possession, it's 5 to 25 years.

Next, we take the other enforcement provisions of S. 2715 that 47 of us introduced on August 7—creating a separate crime for employing minors in drug operations and for manufacturing drugs near a school.

I believe we have to come down on drug dealers and come down on them hard for the use of minors in their drug operations. It brings youngsters into the seamy underworld of crime and exposes them to drugs—usually resulting in their own addiction.

Our bill also recognizes that the way to end the drug epidemic is to reduce demand. We simply must convince our people—especially our young people—to avoid drugs.

Statistics show that one of every six teenagers will have experimented with cocaine before they graduate from high school. That is a truly frightening statistic. And the picture is getting worse. Surveys show that 61 percent of all high school seniors have tried an illegal drug at least once. The simple fact is that students are use to the presence of drugs in their lives. That has to change.

We provide $150 million for drug education. The bill authorizes $125 million in grants to State and local education agencies for drug abuse education. Eighty percent of that money would go to local education agencies. The money would be available for training personnel, teaching materials, counseling and referral of at risk youth, and acquiring professional assistance to develop and implement programs.

The States and local districts receiving these funds would be required to ensure broad involvement in developing their programs.

The people I have talked to in Tennessee—those most closely involved with the problem—have constantly stressed the need to have the entire community involved if a drug prevention program is going to have any hope of success. As we've developed this package, I've worked to make community involvement an important part of both the education and treatment sections of the bill.

The bill also provides $394 million for drug treatment. Of that, $300 million goes directly to the States on a formula basis. Funds could be used to expand community involvement, improve coordination among services to ensure treatment of all the factors involved in drug abuse, reduce waiting lists, and generally rehabilitate drug users.

During the August break, I toured drug treatment centers in Nashville. As anyone who has done it knows, it is a moving experience. I talked with patients, parents, and counselors. One thing they impressed upon me is the tremendous unmet need for treatment. For instance, MeHarry Hospital, in Nashville, is virtually the only public drug treatment facility in middle Tennessee. It has 16 available beds for young people. It serves 40 counties. We must do better than that.

Finally, we make important reforms in the Federal Government's Forfeiture Program. That problem is, let's face it, a shambles. Federal agencies don't even know what they have. Valuable properties—ships, planes, and vehicles—are left to rust and rot until they are virtually worthless. We're telling Justice and Customs to straighten that mess out. Liquidate those assets and put the proceeds to work battling drugs.

The forfeiture funds are in such disarray that GAO can't even give us a figure on the potential gain from efficient administration of those funds. What we do know is that it's in the millions of dollars, maybe hundreds of millions. We're directing that the money to be gained from efficient administration of the funds be used to fund the initiatives we are proposing today. Let the drug dealers pay for the havoc they are causing.

So those are the highlights of our bill. Beating the drug problem will not come cheap and it will not come easy. But I believe we have no choice. And I believe the American people think so too.●

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today to join my colleagues in introducing the Comprehensive Narcotics Control Act of 1986 to provide desperately needed funds and programs to combat the drug abuse crisis in this country.

That the issue of drug abuse is one of great concern to the people in this country is no surprise. A New York Times survey conducted last month revealed that 13 percent of those interviewed named drugs as the Nation's most important problem, more than those cited unemployment, fear of war, or other economic difficulties. To illustrate the degree to which this issue has intensified in the minds of the American public, in an April survey, only 2 percent selected drugs as the country's most important problem.

Irving Kaufman, Chairman of the President's Commission on Organized Crime, has called for "persistent and unyielding assaults on both supply and demand." I agree—we can only make progress by addressing both parts of the drug equation. And we must make such assaults effective by providing adequate assistance to those Federal, State, and local authorities who face the difficult task of stamping out drug use in this country.

That is exactly what the Comprehensive Narcotics Control Act of 1986 seeks to do: Provide additional resources to reduce demand for illegal drugs and to limit their supply.

This $1.65 billion proposal includes $425 million for State and local assistance programs which were provided for in the bill, I introduced on the 1st day of the 99th Congress, S. 15, the State and Local Narcotics Control Assistance Act, which 22 of my colleagues on both sides of this aisle cosponsored.

Of the $425 million, $300 million is provided for the Secretary of Health and Human Services to make grants to States for prevention, treatment, and rehabilitation programs aimed at keeping people off drugs, or rehabilitating drug users for productive employment and drug free lives.

The remaining $125 million is for the U.S. Attorney General to make grants to the States to aid in State and local law enforcement. Grants are to be used for increased apprehension, prosecution, and adjudication of criminal defendants, additional correctional facilities, and illicit crop eradication programs in States.

Our total package offers a multipronged attack against illegal drugs. Specifically, it creates a Cabinet-level office to coordinate the Federal drug effort, increases enforcement funding for Federal agencies, including Customs and the Drug Enforcement Administration, provides funds for the purchase of aircraft for drug interdiction, calls for tariff penalties against uncooperative source countries, and increases international narcotics control, including calling for loans through multilateral development banks for crop eradication and substitution.

We have an obligation to take active measures such as this in the war against drugs, before it is too late. Drug, related deaths, and injuries—particularly from cocaine abuse—have become all too commonplace. Injuries due to cocaine smoking rose from 600 to 1,100 between 1984 and 1985; an 83 percent increase.

The most disturbing statistics deal with our Nation's youth. In 1985, the New York State Division of Substance Abuse Services released the results of a survey on drug use among secondary school students in New York. The survey estimated that an astounding 60 percent of our secondary schoolchildren, more than 900,000 students, reported having tried illegal drugs. Even more disturbing was the estimate that 31 percent of all seventh grade students had tried illegal drugs while in elementary school. Children all, some of whom were only 12 years old. And they are likely to continue to use drugs, with increasing frequency and dependence.

Equally tragic is the phenomenon of "crack babies," children born with an addiction to crack because their mothers were hooked on the drug. During a recent visit to Harlem Hospital, I saw 1 pound babies writhing with horrible withdrawal pains. A civilized society cannot ignore these cries for help. Stopping cocaine and crack addiction must become a priority. Therefore, we must focus on finding narcotic antagonists for cocaine and heroin addiction. This bill directs the National Institute on Drug Abuse to do just that.

Drug problems throughout the country all stem, in part, from the huge supply of illegal drugs into this country. Federal agencies, State officials and local authorities currently do not have the resources to cope with the flood of drugs on their streets.

This is not the first drug epidemic which I have witnessed in my years of public service. I faced a similar crisis in 1969, when I was a Special Assistant for Urban Affairs for President Nixon. While today the crisis involves crack, then it involved heroin, a narcotic derived from the poppy plant just as cocaine is derived from the coca plant. At that time, poppy plants were grown primarily in Turkey, processed into heroin in Marseilles, and then smuggled into New York.

In order to cut off the supply of heroin, I persuaded the President to provide financial assistance to help Turkish farmers make the transition from a poppy-based agriculture to a more general agricultural economy. With our help, the program to eradicate illicit poppy production succeeded and the French Connection collapsed, creating a severe shortage of heroin in every major drug center in the country.

It comes as no surprise to me, then, that our focus has now turned to countries like Bolivia, Peru, and Colombia as they provide the raw materials for some of the world's most powerful drug traffickers. I support the efforts of our Government and the Bolivian authorities in trying to reduce the supply of cocaine from those countries through programs of crop eradication and substitution. The Comprehensive Narcotics Control Act calls for loans to such countries through multilateral development banks for crop eradication and substitution.

But stopping importation is only one area in which we must address drug abuse. Once these drugs are here, there are vast numbers of high, middle, and low level dealers who support themselves through the sale of these drugs. These dealers must be apprehended and to do that, we need more officers on the streets. This act also provides the necessary funds to supplement local authorities in these efforts to catch drug dealers so that no section of their police force would have to be understaffed.

Some might say that we can't afford to allocate more money to the fight against illegal drugs. But I say we can't afford not to. The costs of drug abuse to our society are enormous. According to a study commissioned by the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration, in 1984, drug abuse costs society a total of $60 billion every year. This includes $20 billion spent to prosecute and imprison criminals convicted of drug dealing and related crimes. It also includes the $2 billion we spend each year to treat and rehabilitate drug abusers. Clearly, there is too great a disparity between the cost of drug abuse and the amount of money we spend to prevent it.

The time has come to provide sufficient ammunition to the Federal, State, and local officials who are on the front lines of the fight against drug abuse. The Comprehensive Narcotics Control Act of 1986 is that ammunition, and I urge each of my colleagues to support this bill when the Senate considers this measure. You can't win a war without beans, bullets, and black oil. Without more money and resources we may never win the war against drugs.●

DEPARTMENT OF INTERIOR AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS, FISCAL YEAR 1987

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill.

AMENDMENT NO. 2777

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, returning to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin dealing with the funds for roadbuilding in our national forests, the argument that is propounded by the Senator from Wisconsin, and by others who have looked at this matter, is: "Well, let's cut down on roadbuilding in the forest and so let's save some money."

Mr. President, I believe that is a very attractive issue. What can be a more attractive issue facing this Congress than an amendment that would save $70 to $90 million or more?

But that argument about saving money is just a question of what are the procedures of operating in our national forests, and by law require that before any timber sale is offered the Forest Service has to plan for constructing a road and do all that engineering work and all that planning to see what type of road would be built so the timber sales can be offered. Now that is law. That is law that is well founded and whether it is wise or not cannot be or should not be argued on this appropriations bill.

But then, the question really is, Is there any cost savings? That is the real question. And the answer to that is, no, there is no cost savings. These moneys are recovered by the timber sales. Well, you have to wait for the money. It might take a couple of years, 3 or 4 years, before you ever get the money back. So we could save that.

Again, we get right down to the nitty-gritty. Well, what does the law require the Forest Service to do? It does not give them that option to say, "Well, we are going to let you have the timber sale, but we have to go across the road. We have not done all that preliminary work, so you do it."

The law does not permit that. Whether that is wise or not is not the argument. Indeed, I think if we did have the argument, we would find that is wise and the best way to do it. But the money is recovered. That is the bottom line.

I think perhaps sometimes we fall into this other side of the issue. There are two points to this issue when you make this kind of an amendment. You have the cost—that is a plus for the amendment—then you also have the environmental question. And what side of the environmental question would you be on? Well, you would want to be on the positive side. You would want to protect the environment. So the amendment actually has two pluses.

Yet I find it necessary, Mr. President, to ask for the floor and to seek the floor on my own behalf to argue against this amendment. So I am arguing against some pretty strong medicine. Well, let me tell you where I come from and why I must take the position opposing the amendment.

I was reminded just a few days ago while driving across Montana in the western part of the State of how much I object, abhor, feel bad about looking at national forest lands and seeing substantial acres clearcut or seeing on the slopes a criss-cross every few hundred feet of old logging roads to harvest the timber. You cannot enjoy that kind of a setting. And if you fly over it, as I did a few days ago, over parts of it where you can really get a good view from up on high and look down on it, you know it would be a lot prettier if those trees were there.

Then you get beyond that and your mind wonders to what happens on the slope. Does that not create erosion? Does it not mean something to the watershed? Then, finally, the aesthetics of it is all one way. You know that an ordinary person really does not like it, cannot help but dislike it.

And if that were all there was to it, perhaps I would join with my friend from Wisconsin in this amendment. But that really is not all there is to it.

Here are the limiting factors for now. In 1976, we adopted the Forest Management Act, which was a very far-reaching act. It requires forest plans for every segment of the national forest. And that planning process—which is open to the public and public involvement all the way through it, has several stages—takes several years to get a forest plan for any of our national forests. Indeed it does because we passed that law, we passed a bill making the law in 1976 calling for all these forest plans.

And here it is 1986 and right now the first round of those forest plans are being finally scrutinized, I mean the final stages of approval. It takes that long. It sets in motion this 10-year cycle of the new planning, 10 years, always with the same public involvement, the same criticism, the same objectives to make sure that our forests are now more aesthetic, that they are more conservation oriented, that there is less in the way of watershed damage, and there cannot be any question on the conservation side of erosion. Erosion must be controlled.

Are these plans going to work? Well, you know it is pretty difficult for us to be sure, but as far as I can tell now, I can conscientiously tell you that, yes, I think they will work. It is a very laborious process and it is very well locked into law, and it is very well scrutinized, but it takes a long time to get the first set of plans approved. But that is right at the stage we are at.

You can appeal these plans. Many of these various forest plans have been appealed. So the public involvement and the public insistance that all of these conservation-oriented facets of the forest plan be enforced is held right there to keep the Forest Service nose to the grindstone, keep them constantly under review.

What has all of this to do with the amendment? It has an awful lot to do with the amendment.

Anybody who wishes to look at any particular forest plan, or any portion of a forest plan, can check out which roadbuilding is planned in this 10-year cycle, 20 years from now, 30 years from now, and on down the road.

The facts are that as you look at those plans, they are really not going to be too much in roadbuilding. That would seem to say, well, then, the Senator from Wisconsin has made a good point. Those forest plans really do not indicate there is going to be too much roadbuilding during the next 10 years; why appropriate so much money? Well, the fact is no matter what State it is in, or what particular national forest in which State, in any of the individual States, or which area that is involved of a particular national forest, that planning process triggers the beginning of the need for having those funds available. It is that simple. Will it cost more or less? It will probably cost less. But whether it costs less or not does not depend upon how we restrict in this bill the funds that are available because it is not going to be determined. The amount of money that will be spent on the roads will not be triggered by the amount appropriated. It will be triggered by the forest plans themselves. Those forest plans that are approved will set in motion the triggering mechanism for whatever roadbuilding money is necessary.

But it will not be triggered until the forest plan itself is approved.

I find while that may be a cumbersome way, taking 10 years to develop these forest plans and they are still not finalized in most national forests yet, while they may be a cumbersome way of doing business and may require the Forest Service to do an excessive amount of planning, I find comfort, and I find assurance in the whole mechanism, and in the whole process. And why? It goes back to the environment issue, and to the esthetics. We do not want rapid runoff. We do not want cutting of trees on steep slopes because there will be rapid runoff, which will lead to a cause of environmental degradation, erosion, and loss of quality of the watershed.

We do not want timber harvested close to streambeds for the same reasons. There will be loss of protection for those streambeds and loss of water quality if erosion would result. So we forbid that. We forbid it in the law.

And in order for the public to be sure that the law is followed in these forest plans, by necessity they are long drawn out processes, which it is true is a cumbersome process, but one which I favor and which I believe the public favors.

I want to say this: The amendment, as attractive as it may be, is simply a bad amendment. It should be turned down. It should be automatically defeated because we have the process unfolding now in these forest plans which I believe is the only correct way to manage our national forests, which is the only reassuring way to the public that they are being managed properly and which assures the public the opportunity to envision and examine for themselves whether what we want for prudent management of these forest lands will be followed in the present and in the future.

As a result, we will not have large clearcuts. That is good. Twenty-eight acres, as a matter of fact, is the limitation now required in the law, and nothing larger than that. As a result, we will not have steep slope harvesting, which is good, both from the standpoint of conservation and from the standpoint of esthetics. We will not have streambank erosion, which is good to maintain water quality. It is good for the fish, it is good for the enjoyment of the public, and it is good for the esthetics.

The amendment will not accomplish these things. It is the plans themselves that accomplish these restrictions, these protections, and these fine things we want for environmental protection.

I ask for the defeat of the amendment. But I ask for it in the confidence that we have the process to accomplish what the public of the United States wants, and that is clean, well-managed forests that are attractive, that are good for the people, good for the wildlife, good for the habitat of fish, good for clear water, and good for water protection.

I might point out that the Senator from Idaho, the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations handling this bill on Interior, and also the chairman of the Energy and Natural Resources Committee, comes from the very State that has contributed very generously and very constructively in the Forest Management Act in the person of the distinguished Senator himself and his colleague, the junior colleague, and also by the late Senator Frank Church, former distinguished colleague of all of us.

All of these distinguished Senators have contributed mightily in fashioning the Forest Act of 1976. Indeed, it is the Church guidelines that protect the environment and the conservation efforts of all of us in our national forests that was made statutory. The Church guidelines were just regulations of the national forests for the Forest Service in operating the national forest. They were just regulations adopted by the Forest Service at the request and at the behest of the distinguished Senator, former Senator from Idaho, the late Frank Church, which were made statutory in 1976 act.

On the question of road standards, there is none that have taken the most forthright and strongest stand on what the road standard should be in our national forests regarding timber harvesting than the distinguished Senator now managing the bill as the subcommittee chairman, Senator McCLURE.

I am pleased that he has been successful. I have tried to be helpful in my own way to get those standards to a level that was environmentally more satisfactory, and also carries with it a lower cost.

I think those efforts have been successful. So from the standpoint of both costs and environmentally acceptable standards, the road standards that are now used by the Forest Service are better, and should be good enough to assure the Senator from Wisconsin that not only the Forest Service but Congress itself has been instrumental in trying to pursue the very two key points of this amendment today; that is, cost reduction, and environmental protection.

□ 1700

One final word.

If we want to be confusing, we could adopt the amendment. But I hope it is not adopted. I think that the cost factor is very much self-limiting because of the planning requirements of the Forest Service under the law, the 1976 act, in managing the national forest itself. I think that is obvious if the forest plan is not approved—and it cannot be approved without the scrutiny of the public and the insistence on the practicality and the necessity and conservation-oriented public on when we can or cannot build a forest logging road. That is good.

On the second point, obviously, if it is self-limiting because of the forest plan itself, the money simply will not be spent unless the projected growth, the planned growth, has climbed all these high walls, jumped over all the hurdles, and made the satisfactory answers to the questions of the cost and the environmental protection.

For those reasons, I hope the amendment is defeated and we get on with the rest of the bill.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. McCLURE addressed the chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I will take very little time to respond to the arguments.

The Senator from Wisconsin, the primary sponsor of this amendment, several times made reference to the total number of miles of roads on national forest lands.

Let us put that figure into two different kinds of perspective. What are those roads?

Of the 343,300 miles of roads to which he has made reference, 65,227 miles have been closed. That is over one-fourth of the total mileage which has already been closed.

Of the remaining 278,000 miles of roads, 171,000 are maintained only for high clearance vehicles. They are not regular roads. They are not open to general vehicular traffic.

Only 106,000 miles are maintained for passenger cars, and out of that only 51,000 miles are fully maintained and 55,000 miles are partially maintained.

So you do not really have a road system of the kind that people from the flatlands of this country would consider to be roads. There are not 343,000 miles of roads that everybody can go out from town and drive over the weekend on. They are not available for passenger vehicular traffic.

Let us contrast that for a moment, lest we think that that 55,000 miles is still a lot. Let us look at what is maintained in other States. I am not going to read the entire list, but I have obtained from the Bureau of Public Roads a list of Federal aid highway systems and mileage now on Federal-aid systems in the 50 States.

I will start with Alabama which has 87,560 miles of roads; Wyoming, 38,000. And I cannot help but note Wisconsin 108,000, double the mileage of roads available for passenger car traffic on a fully maintained basis in national forest lands. Contrast Wisconsin, 1 State out of 50, with one-third of our Nation's area in public lands, a large portion of which is the national forest lands.

I think from that standpoint neither comparison would indicate excessive roadbuilding.

I thought it necessary to point out that in the 50 States there are 2,891,781 miles of roads as contrasted to the 55,000 miles of fully maintained roads for passenger cars or even the total of 343,000 within the total forest system which is less than one-tenth of the total in the United States.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a table which has that information fully for all 50 States be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BUREAU OF PUBLIC ROADS—EXISTING PUBLIC ROAD AND STREET MILEAGE, 1984, CLASSIFIED BY FEDERAL-AID SYSTEM AND JURISDICTION

SLOW ROAD BUILDING IN NATIONAL FORESTS

● Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I rise in support of the Proxmire amendment to reduce funding for road construction in our national forests.

I will support this amendment for two reasons—economics and environment.

Forest Service road building simply does not produce a return to the Treasury sufficient to cover the costs of building those roads. At a time when the country is facing the threat of across-the-board cuts in Federal programs—good or bad—frivolous or essential—we should not be increasing funding to an economically unproductive program such as this.

The amendment I will support strikes a compromise on how many dollars to spend on road building. This amendment will reduce funding for road building by $90 million from the committee-passed bill. It splits the difference between the administration's request for road building and the amount appropriated by the House of Representatives.

The Nation does not need to expand the road building program in Federal lands at this time. The timber industry today is faced with low prices and a glut of trees that cannot be moved at profitable prices. The last thing that the industry as a whole needs is an increase in the production of subsidized timber that would drive prices down even further.

Private producers must already compete with a tremendous Federal program to produce timber at subsidized rates. I believe that the free market will better serve the Nation's needs than increasing subsidies.

Second, we should not be embarking on a massive new road building program in our national forests for environmental reasons. This road building program will penetrate many of the more remote and fragile potential timber lands. They will be expensive to open up, expensive to maintain, and carry a high environmental cost as well.

The Forest Service has exceeded its planned and funded goals for road construction in each of the last 5 years, despite periodic funding reductions. If this amendment passes, the Service will be opening up relatively undisturbed land at an unprecedented rate. If a pressing national need for more timber were clearly present, this would be acceptable. But such a national need is not clear to this Senator.

What need does seem to exist is a local need. The money provided through road construction on Federal lands is important to the economies of several States. As a Senator from Wisconsin, a large timber producing State with many timber holdings on Federal lands, I understand this.

But, we have a simple trade-off to make. We can support increased funding for Forest Service road building—which will be concentrated in a few States and will have serious environmental consequences. Or, we can support saving $90 million taxpayer's dollars, and start making the selective spending reductions we will need to avoid an across-the-board cut under Gramm-Rudman.

I believe the responsible choice is clear, and I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.●

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I want to just take a moment to speak on behalf of the committee's position with regard to Forest Service roads and in opposition to any reductions to the Forest Service's road budget as is currently being proposed.

As many of my colleagues know, I have been intimately involved with the establishment of the 1.2 million acre Oregon wilderness bill enacted in 1984 and have consistently supported environmental causes, many of which are funded in this Interior appropriations bill. But unfortunately, too little credit has been given to the critical land acquisition and fish habitat improvement moneys approved in this bill, and too much attention has been provided to Forest Service roads.

Mr. President, the fact is that the Forest Service has not done a very good job in managing the road program and has in many instances built roads in excess of necessary construction standards and in some instances have built roads into areas where timber was not harvested for some time. But some of these decisions can be explained. For example, many roads were built in the late 1970's when timber sales were at all time records only to go unused during the 1980–81 recession. The change in the economic climate is not anything the Forest Service can respond to in short order because of long lead times necessary to plan a timber sale, but this illustration does give an example of "apparently" wasted taxpayers' dollars. I can assure you that those roads have been used and that because of record timber demands in 1984 and 1985, and with continuing low interest rates, new roads will be necessary to sustain our public supply of Federal timber.

A second point, Mr. President, in support of road funding is that in many areas of the West we are overharvesting on existing lands and in order to relieve overcutting, we must begin to access new areas which require roads. Please be assured that it's not our intent to access wilderness areas, nor lands which are unsuitable for timber harvest. But in Oregon and Washington alone over 1 million acres of wilderness study areas were released for multiple use purposes, a portion of which should be considered for timber harvesting. Again, Mr. President, additional funds for roads is necessary to alleviate overcutting on existing lands.

Third, Mr. President, I would like to point out that despite compelling evidence in support of increasing timber sales; interest rates are at record low levels; Canadian timber imports comprise one-third of the entire United States timber consumption. We are only asking to maintain timber harvest levels at the level approved by Congress last year, about 11.4 billion board feet. We must sustain timber volumes to maintain regional employment and address the trade deficit issues which are killing this country's Federal budget.

As an aside, Mr. President, I would just like to mention that in Oregon, where timber is like oil to the gulf and wheat to the Midwest, our July adjusted unemployment figure was 9.4 percent while the national average was just 6.9 percent. Oregon's unemployment rate continues to be 2.5 percentage points, or 36 percent higher than the national average since the recession of 1981.

Finally, Mr. President, I would just like to point out that OMB figures with regard to timber receipts to the Federal Treasury are not correct. In fact, by adding about $50 million in outlays to the Forest Service budget for fiscal year 1987, to increase roads and timbers sales, the Treasury will receive a net increase in revenues of nearly $85 million in fiscal year 1987 alone, not to mention out year receipts to be received from future sales.

One last point I would like to clarify, Mr. President, is that I have heard the word "timber industry subsidy" used alot in this debate and it reminds me of the "educating" I had to do when this body passed the Timber Contract Relief Act. The fact is that unlike other agricultural crops which do receiving minimum production subsidies and guaranteed payments, timber companies pay the Government full market value for the timber they take off of public lands, the Government does not pay industry for removing the lumber. In almost every instance sealed bids are submitted and the contract is awarded to the highest bidder who often time pays for the construction of the roads necessary to remove the timber. To repeat, there is no subsidy.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I rise today in strong support of the amendment being offered this afternoon by the senior Senator from Wisconsin, Senator PROXIMRE, to strike $90 million from the Forest Service's Forest Road Program in fiscal year 1987.

This amendment makes sound economic sense. It makes sense because we are presently pursing a national forest management policy that loses millions of taxpayer's dollars every year—unnecessarily. It makes sense because we can achieve our Federal timber harvest objectives without spending the $90 million in question here today.

The bill before us today contains $253 million for the Forest Service's road construction account. This figure is $66.7 million above the administration's request for this program, and $110 million above what the House approved. Yet, for each of the past 5 years, the Forest Service has constructed more miles of road than it planned for or requested in its budget. Given this overbuilding—which has outpaced associated timber harvesting—it is difficult to understand why a funding increase of this magnitude is necessary, particularly as our national forests now contain over 340,000 miles of roads—more than 1 mile of road for every square mile of forest.

This quantity of road building would be more acceptable if it was leading us in a desirable direction. But we are only being led down a path of fiscal and environmental irresponsibility.

The Cherokee National Forest represents an excellent case in point. In recent years, the Forest Service has lost 62 cents for every dollar spent on timber management in the Cherokee. This amounts to annual losses from timber sales on the Cherokee National Forest alone of over $2 million. These losses can be traced to the Forest Service's use of subsidized road building into areas that are not economically suitable for timbering.

Yet, the Forest Service will not abandon this fiscally unsound policy. In fact, in the final management plan for the Cherokee Forest, the Forest Service proposes to construct an additional 34 miles of new roads over the next 10 years, and to maintain the current timber harvest levels of 40 million board feet annually. Continuation of this level of road construction and timber harvests can only continue these annual losses of $2 million on the Cherokee.

The Cherokee is not an unusual case among our national forests. In the Southern region alone, there are 11 national forests that consistently lose money on timber sales. The Forest Service's costs for timber and mineral activities in 1985 exceeded the Federal share of receipts by $621 million in that same year.

Obviously, Mr. President, someone is the loser in this equation. The loser is the American taxpayer. National forest road construction expenditures have averaged $415 million per year during fiscal years 1981 through 1985. This represents approximately one-fifth of all Forest Service appropriations during those years. In comparison, funding for trail construction has averaged less than $5 million annually, or about one-fourth of 1 percent of the national forest budget.

In the bill under consideration here today, funding for Forest Service recreational programs has been reduced $5 million from last year's levels. Funding for soil and water protection has been cut $1 million. And funding for land acquisition has been slashed $8 million. Certainly, Mr. President, when one compares these budget cuts with a $66.7 million increase for road construction, one can argue that our national forest priorities are seriously flawed.

In addition to the economic arguments for this amendment, there are obvious environmental arguments to support this measure. Road construction is one of the biggest causes of environmental damage on the national forests, creating extensive soil erosion and degrading water quality and fish habitat. Moreover, the Forest Service's plans for the construction of over 8,000 miles of new roads in unprotected wildlands, particularly in the northern Rockies and on the west coast, are aimed at accessing RARE II and other roadless areas. Given that States such as Montana and Idaho have not yet acted on their RARE II recommendations, this Forest Service policy preempts congressional decisions in those States on wilderness designation.

Mr. President, last year the house cut $50 million from the Forest Service's road budget, which would have reduced road construction for fiscal year 1986 by 600 miles from the proposed level of 924 miles. Unfortunately, the final version of this bill cut the road budget by only 5 percent. The result: the Forest Service has found "cost savings" in its budget and plans to construct 1,016 to 1,108 miles of roads this fiscal year, instead of the 924 miles originally proposed.

Despite my misgiving about past practices, I believe we can take comfort in this ability of the Forest Service to build more roads with fewer funds. This knack for getting more with less tells me that this amendment will not cripple the Forest Service's road program. I am hopeful that the additional fiscal rein this amendment would place on the Forest Roads Program will encourage the Forest Service to carry out its roads program in a way that is more fiscally, as well as environmentally, sound. I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I am checking on one other request to speak on this amendment.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHAFEE). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, the one inquiry I had made indicated that the Senator involved wished us to go ahead. I know of no other request to speak on this amendment.

Mr. President, I move to table the amendment and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Idaho to lay the pending amendment on the table. The yeas and nays have been ordered and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from Utah [Mr. GARN], the Senator from Kansas [Mrs. KASSEBAUM], the Senator from Alaska [Mr. MURKOWSKI], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. RUDMAN] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SYMMS] are necessarily absent.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BUMPERS] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 51, as follows:

[Rollcall Vote No. 258 Leg.]

So the motion to lay on the table amendment No. 2777 was rejected.

□ 1740

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, obviously, the issue is close enough that those of us who are managers of the bill would hope to reverse the vote on the motion to adopt the amendment. We could have asked for a motion to reconsider—that is still a possibility—of the motion to table. But I think under the circumstances, Mr. President, it is impossible for us to move further with the legislation today, unless the proponents of the amendment would be willing to allow it to be temporarily set aside so that we could work on three or four other amendments that are not controversial, and that would leave this as the only remaining issue.

The Senator from Wisconsin has been his usual courteous self in allowing us to try to round up votes, with one Member voting believing it were an up or down vote and probably is recorded in a way he would not like to be recorded. We will give him an opportunity one way or another to be recorded on the appropriate side of the issue.

But the amendment is serious enough, in my judgment as manager of the bill and as a Senator from Idaho, that I am not content to allow the result as it sits now to be the final result yielding only this result or one equally bad in the House of Representatives.

For that reason, Mr. President, I would ask the majority leader if it is his desire that we lay this matter temporarily aside and move to something else this evening and resume consideration on tomorrow.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, we do have another bill we could bring up, as I understand, within 10 or 15 minutes. We could be on Labor-HHS if that were the will of the Senate. Of course, the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin has a stake in this, too. The amendment was not tabled.

As I understand it, there are three or four more amendments to this bill that could be disposed of. Does the Senator from Wisconsin have any problem with temporarily setting his amendment aside and working on the other amendments?

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, may I say to my good friend, the majority leader, of course I am very anxious to go ahead. It seems to me it was a pretty decisive win, 51 to 43. I am sure that it is possible that there may be people who would change their mind under certain circumstances. I would hope we could go ahead.

Obviously, the majority leader can, if he wishes, do all kinds of things. He can recess the Senate. The opponents of the amendment can speak at some length.

I want to be as cooperative with the Senators as possible. We want to do as much business as possible. So I am not going to hold them up on this amendment but I would hope that we can vote on the amendment up or down expeditiously, if possible, today. And, if not, as I say, the majority leader has this within his control. I do not. I wish I did.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

□ 1910

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further proceedings under the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SIMPSON). Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE CANARSIE PIER

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. I rise to call your attention to a problem concerning the Canarsie Pier, in the Gateway National Park in Brooklyn, NY. For 60 years, Canarsie Pier has served as a recreational area for New Yorkers, particularly for fishermen.

The pier, which was originally constructed in 1926, has long-term structural problems, which were identified in a preliminary inspection conducted by the National Park Service in 1979, and another study conducted by the Federal Highway Administration in 1980.

Further analysis is needed to examine the extent of the necessary repair work; to assess the alternatives; and to estimate the cost of repairs or reconstruction. I understand that the National Park Service has funds available in its budget.

Does the distinguished Chairman agree that under the circumstances, and if the Director of the National Park Service determines that a study is necessary, the study should be undertaken forthwith?

● Mr. McCLURE. I do and would expect that the Director would make such a determination within 90 days.

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. I thank the chairman and the minority leader for their consideration, and their efforts to address this problem before the safety of the public is jeopardized by the structural condition of Canarsie Pier.●

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR, HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES, AND EDUCATION, AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS—1987

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now turn to the consideration of H.R. 5233, Labor-HHS appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, reserving the right to object—there is no objection on this side—I take it that the distinguished majority leader intends to leave the Interior appropriations bill in a temporarily laid aside status with a call for the regular order being available to bring it back at any time?

Mr. DOLE. That is correct.

Mr. BYRD. I have no objection.

I should state that the ranking manager of the Labor-HHS bill, Mr. PROXMIRE, whose amendment is also involved in the Interior appropriations matter, has no objection. The matter has been cleared with him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 5233) making appropriations for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, and related agencies, for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Saunders, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session, the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE SAINT LAWRENCE SEAWAY DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM 169

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying report; which was referred to the Committee on Environment and Public Works:

To the Congress of the United States:

Pursuant to the requirements of Section 10 of the Saint Lawrence Seaway Act of May 13, 1954, I hereby transmit the Saint Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation's Annual Report for 1985.

REPORT ON THE STATE OF SMALL BUSINESS—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM 170

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying report; which was referred to the Committee on Small Business:

To the Congress of the United States:

I am pleased to submit to the Congress my fifth annual report on the state of small business. The State of Small Business. report by the Small Business Administration, which follows this message, reconfirms the contribution that small business makes to our Nation's economy. In 1986 vigorous small business formation and job creation continues, reflecting the strength and perseverance of millions of men and women building better futures for themselves and for our country.

The freedom to choose a way of life and to build upon the strength of an idea is the cornerstone of American small business and the secret of small business success. Our job in Washington is to ensure that our actions do not stand in the way of small business opportunities; only the limits of entrepreneurs' own imaginations can hold them back.

A stable and growing economy is our most important goal to ensure small business opportunity. For business owners to contribute to that growth, our policies must be clear and government tampering with business decisions must be minimized. Consequently, I believe that two current initiatives of this Administration are critical small business issues: the effort to reduce Federal spending and to reform our tax laws.

Other policies are surely important too, but success on these two fronts will be the most beneficial to this Nation's 15 million small businesses.

Uncontrolled Federal spending and the deficits it has produced compete with private spending including small business investment. They also hurt the ability of small firms to meet foreign competition. Similarly, a tax system that is needlessly complex and built around high tax rates hobbles the business owner's ability to grow and operate in response to the demands of markets. We will be better off when tax considerations do not determine whether a certain investment is worthwhile or profits from a firm should be reinvested in job creating opportunities. Action in these areas is a small business priority; it is a critical priority of my Administration.

Our efforts cannot stop here. Continued steps to reduce regulatory burdens are important to a healthier small business climate. I call on all Federal agencies to continue the fight to eliminate burdensome regulations and to look askance at proposals for solving every problem with a Federal regulation. The Regulatory Flexibility Act, an important tool for agencies in this effort, requires economic analysis of small business impacts and the consideration of less burdensome alternatives.

Businesses are handicapped by uncertain or limitless liability for injuries arising from their products or services. It is important that our legal system provide redress for those injured by the negligent acts of others and incentives for safe products. But a runaway liability system prevents many small business owners from obtaining or being able to afford liability insurance. The Administration supports legislation that would reform the legal system to provide adequate safety for American consumers, without unduly burdening American business.

These and other issues have been clear priorities of the preliminary meetings being held across the country and which are leading up to the National White House Conference on Small Business in August of this year. Meetings held in every State are serving as a forum for America's small business leaders to let their voices be heard on public policy issues vital to small business and to the Nation.

Few experiences are more unique to the American character than going into business for oneself. Ever since small business owners opened their doors they have had to cope with the changing marketplace. Using wit, hard work, and initiative, they have successfully demonstrated that American trait of adapting while thriving in the face of adversity.

These basic talents are found in abundance in America's small businesses and now, as in the past, help us to meet world commercial competition. While some nations have chosen controlled solutions to their economic problems, our answers lie in the freedom that allows small businesses to adapt to the world's changing economic climate.

A nation's wealth and commercial know-how is molded by its culture. Our society, made up of risk-takers from other nations and cultures, is by nature willing to change and make sacrifices. This willingness to take risks is essential to our creative energies: it is the foundation of American entrepreneurship. The continuing economic recovery is a vivid reminder of the pivotal role small business has been playing in recent years.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The following petitions and memorials were laid before the Senate and were referred or ordered to lie on the table as indicated:

POM-839. A resolution adopted by the Southern Association of States Department of Agriculture opposing the use of Federal funds to subsidize agricultural competition; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

POM-840. A resolution adopted by the Conference of Western Attorneys General condemning the failure to implement the mandates set forth in the Nuclear Waste Policy Act; to the Committee on Appropriations.

POM-841. A resolution adopted by the General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

"RESOLUTIONS MEMORIALIZING THE CONGRESS TO ADDRESS THE CONCERNS OF CITIZENS CONCERNED FOR SEACOAST MANAGEMENT PERTAINING TO THE CAPE COD NATIONAL SEASHORE

"Whereas, Numerous concerned fishermen and hunters who are unhappy with Federal management of the Cape Cod National Seashore have banded together as a conservation group named the "citizens concerned for seacoast management"; and

"Whereas, Prominent among the issues that they confront are the rights of fixed-gear fishermen, construction of facilities and destruction of existing structures, arbitrary regulation, and insensitive and calculated interference with the ecological balance of the Cape Cod National Seashore; and

"Whereas, To express their concerns and propose concrete solutions, citizens concerned for seacoast management have compiled an agenda and drafted a proposed legislative program for transmittal to Federal representatives; and

"Whereas, It is most appropriate that Congress address the questions raised by citizens concerned for seacoast management with regard to the Cape Cod National Seashore, as the members thereof strive for "the preservation of seacoast environment and the protection of human rights", therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Massachusetts general court hereby urges the Congress of the United States to exercise its best offices in addressing the concerns of citizens concerned for seacoast management as annunciated in the proposed legislative program of the organization; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded by the Clerk of the House of Representatives to the presiding officer of each branch of the Congress and to the members thereof from this commonwealth."

POM-842. A resolution adopted by the City Council of LaPorte, Texas favoring the retention of the space station project at the Johnson Space Center; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

POM-843. A joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of California; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

"ASSEMBLY JOINT RESOLUTION No. 87

"Whereas, The 55 miles-per-hour National Maximum Speed Limit (NMSL), as originally enacted 12 years ago, was a temporary fuel conservation measure which has become permanent law due to the safety benefits derived from reduced speed; and

"Whereas, Federal standards were established in 1979 that mandated minimum state compliance levels with the 55 mph NMSL and imposed sanctions on those states, whose noncompliance levels were above 50 percent for motorists exceeding the 55 mph NMSL, by withholding up to 10 percent of the state's federal aid primary, secondary, and urban highway funds; and

"Whereas, This state's noncompliance level has consistently increased to its 1985 level of 49.7 percent, up from 45.4 percent in 1984; and

"Whereas, This state could be penalized up to $30,000,000 per year if the 55 mph NMSL noncompliance level rises above 50 percent, which is likely for 1986; and

"Whereas, The gathering and reporting of speed data to determine a state's noncompliance level with the 55 mph NMSL, although governed by federal monitoring guidelines, varies sufficiently between states due to (1) variations in what speeds are reported as exceeding 55 mph, and (2) lack of consistency in the calibration of speed measuring equipment, to warrant a revision of the federal 55 mph NMSL compliance testing and reporting process; and

"Whereas, California motorists continue to exceed the 55 mph NMSL in increasing numbers each year despite active law enforcement efforts (over 1,000,000 citations for exceeding the 55 mph NMSL issued per year) and extensive public information on the legal consequences of exceeding, and safety benefits derived from complying with, the 55 mph NMSL; and

"Whereas, A motorist is more likely to comply with speed limits that he or she feels are realistic for the particular type of highway on which the motorist is driving, particularly on major rural freeways, and public opinion surveys show that the public expects a 5 to 10 mph tolerance before the 55 mph NMSL is enforced; and

"Whereas, Law enforcement agencies and the public are in agreement that legislation which reduces fines and penalties for exceeding the 55 mph NMSL should be opposed because it would encourage motorists to consistently exceed the 55 mph NMSL without fear of serious punishment; now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the Legislature of the State of California hereby respectfully memorializes the President and Congress of the United States to revise the federal 55 miles-per-hour National Maximum Speed Limit compliance testing and reporting process to better reflect safety priorities by assigning greater significance to high-speed violations occurring on less-safe roads and to exempt safety projects from sanctions; and be it further

"Resolved, That California be authorized to selectively increase speed limits on rural freeways in the National System of Interstate and Defense Highways; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Chief Clerk of the Assembly transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States, and to the Secretary of Transportation."

POM-844. A resolution adopted by the City Council of Friendswood, Texas urging review of the NASA reorganization proposal with regard to the assignment of space station work; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

POM-845. A resolution adopted by the House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

"RESOLUTIONS MEMORIALIZING CONGRESS TO ORDER A MORATORIUM ON LAND ACQUISITIONS FOR THE PURPOSE OF RELOCATING THE APPALACHIAN TRAIL AND TO IMPLEMENT A CONGRESSIONAL STUDY INTO THE PRACTICES OF THE NATIONAL PARK SERVICE IN SUCH LAND ACQUISITIONS

"Whereas, The Appalachian Trail is a 2,100 mile footpath extending from Georgia to Maine; and

"Whereas, The National Park Service is the Federal agency charged with the administration of the trail along this corridor; and

"Whereas, The National Trails Act (P.L. 90-543) and subsequent amendments have directed the National Park Service to permanently protect the trail and, where possible, to remove it from the roads; and

"Whereas, The National Park Service is attempting to pursue this mandate along the 2,100 mile corridor; and

"Whereas, The relocation of the trail in certain areas poses serious conflicts with existing and proposed agricultural, recreational and industrial uses; and

"Whereas, Certain landowners have charged that the National Park Service has employed questionable and deceptive practices in negotiations with said landowners; and

"Whereas, The legitimate rights of these landowners must be respected and recognized; and

"Whereas, The National Park Service has interpreted the National Trails Act to mean that the entire trail be removed from all roads, regardless of cost or impact on important local agricultural, and industrial uses; therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Massachusetts House of Representatives urges Congress to order a moratorium on land acquisitions for the purpose of relocating the Appalachian Trail and to implement a congressional study into the practices of the National Park Service in such land acquisitions; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded by the Clerk of the House of Representatives to the presiding officer of each branch of the Congress and the members thereof from the commonwealth.

POM-846. A resolution adopted by the Johnson County, TX, Commissioners Court opposing any reduction of Federal highway funding; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

POM-847. A resolution adopted by the General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

"RESOLUTIONS MEMORIALIZING THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES TO ENACT LEGISLATION REDUCING THE EFFECTS OF ACID RAIN ON THE ENVIRONMENT

"Whereas, acid rain is a serious danger to the environment, health and economy of Massachusetts; and

"Whereas, acidity levels in Massachusetts ponds and lakes are fifteen to twenty times what they should be; and

"Whereas, the acidity of the rainfall in Massachusetts is abnormally high; and

"Whereas, a national resolution of the acid rain problem is necessary; therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Massachusetts General Court respectfully urges the Congress of the United States to take such action as may be necessary to solve the acid rain problem including, but not limited to tax incentives to businesses which reduce emissions of sulfur dioxide and nitrogen oxide waste products; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be transmitted forthwith by the clerk of the House of Representatives to the President of the United States, the presiding officer of each branch of Congress, and to the Members thereof from this Commonwealth."

POM-848. A resolution adopted by the City Commission of Hays, KS, favoring continued efforts to obtain information relating to POW's and MIA's in Southeast Asia; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

POM-849. A resolution adopted by the State of Illinois; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

"SENATE RESOLUTION No. 881

"Whereas, The nuclear power accident in the Soviet Union was a devastating tragedy for the residents of Chernobyl in Ukraine, and may be equally harmful to the residents of Kiev; and

"Whereas, It is alleged that the Soviet Union demonstrated total disregard for human life by not installing proper safeguards during the construction of the nuclear power plant; and

"Whereas, This accident serves notice to the rest of the world of the tremendous force of nuclear power; and

"Whereas, The immediate concern of the government of the Soviet Union should be the medical treatment of the victims and the prevention of further danger of nuclear radiation to them and to other people in the world; and

"Whereas, The Soviet Union should be candid with the international media and foreign governments regarding the severity of the accident; and

"Whereas, The Soviet government should recognize the health hazards to nearby countries caused by air currents carrying radiation particles; and

"Whereas, Ukraine is expected to be the area most seriously affected by the nuclear fallout; therefore, be it

"Resolved, by the Senate of the Eighty-Fourth General Assembly of the State of Illinois, that the government of the Soviet Union should make full restitution to the people of Ukraine and of other countries who will suffer direct or indirect health effects from this nuclear accident; and be it further

"Resolved, That the government of the Soviet Union accept the technical assistance necessary to curtail any further nuclear danger to its own and to other countries; and be it further

"Resolved, That the United States demonstrate its compassion for the Ukrainian people, and for the people of Eastern Europe, by offering medical teams and medicine to these governments; and be it further

"Resolved, That an international body examine the practices used in the construction of nuclear power plants and establish international criteria that must be observed in their construction to assure the safety of other countries and their peoples; and be it further

"Resolved, That suitable copies of this preamble and resolution be presented to President Ronald Reagan, to the President of the United States Senate, to the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, to the Members of the Illinois Congressional Delegation, to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, and to General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics."

POM-850. A resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in America reaffirming its prolife, antiabortion position; to the the Committee on the Judiciary.

POM-851. A resolution adopted by the City Council of Oakland, CA, favoring the establishment of a permanent Veterans' Administration health care facility in Oakland; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

POM-852. A resolution adopted by the General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

"RESOLUTIONS MEMORIALIZING THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES TO ENACT LEGISLATION TO GRANT CITIZENSHIP TO ALIENS OR IMMIGRANTS WHO DIE IN THE ARMED FORCES OF THE UNITED STATES AS A RESULT OF HOSTILE ACTION OR SERVICE-CONNECTED ACCIDENT OR ILLNESS

"Whereas, aliens or immigrants are routinely drafted into the Armed Forces of the United States, and distinguish themselves by their honorable service; and

"Whereas, aliens or immigrants, after completion of their honorable service, can receive their citizenship; and

"Whereas, during the Vietnam war over two hundred aliens or immigrants were killed in action while in service to this country; and

"Whereas, the General Court of Massachusetts requires that due recognition of their sacrifice should be noted and all war death benefits should be extended; now therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Massachusetts General Court respectfully urges the Congress of the United States to enact legislation providing that an alien or immigrant who dies in the service of the United States should automatically be awarded a posthumous citizenship, be rewarded with all rights and privileges of same and receive all war death benefits; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be transmitted forthwith by the clerk of the House of Representatives to the President of the United States, the presiding officer of each branch of the Congress and to the Members thereof from this commonwealth."

POM-853. A petition from a citizen of Alhambra, CA, relative to the late Senator Jacob K. Javits of New York; ordered to lie on the table.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. KENNEDY:

S. 2796. A bill to amend the copyright law to secure the rights of artists of pictorial, graphic, or sculptural works to prevent the distortion, mutilation, or other alteration of such works, to provide for resale royalties, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

VISUAL ARTISTS RIGHTS AMENDMENT

● Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I am pleased to announce the introduction of legislation to provide increased copyright protection for visual artists. It is the result of cooperative efforts of a number of individuals and organizations in the arts community and it draws on the concepts advanced in many other nations and in a number of the States, especially California, New York, and Massachusetts.

The bill recognizes the intrinsic value of our cultural heritage and the need to sustain an environment in America which nurtures this heritage.

The legislation incorporates the moral rights for artists to complement the basic economic rights already provided by copyright statutes. It is disturbing that artists cannot now prevent the distortion, mutilation, or other alteration of their work.

Under this legislation, artists could be able to seek redress for such alterations to a work of fine art. In addition, they will be given the right to be acknowledged as the artist who created the work whenever it is displayed publicly.

A second issue addressed in this legislation is a longstanding defect in the copyright laws.

For years, artists have declined full copyright protection because of requirements that they publicly display the copyright notice on their work. Such notations diminish the esthetic value of their work and inject an unacceptable commercial element into their art.

This legislation would waive the notice requirement for pictorial, graphic, or sculptural works of fine art.

Artists will still have to register their works with the Copyright Office, but their works will no longer be blemished by the commercial notice.

A third provision in the bill concerns the issue of resale royalty rights. In 1976, California adopted this landmark principle to enable artists to receive some of the financial benefits when their works appreciate in value.

The bill provides a modest royalty to artists of 7 percent of the difference between the original selling price and the current transaction.

This legislation has the strong support of Artists Equity, the American Council for the Arts, the Graphics Artists Guild, the New York Volunteer Lawyers for the Arts, the Visual Artists and Galleries Association, and the Boston Visual Artists Union.

President Kennedy once observed that:

To further the appreciation of culture among all the people, to increase respect for the creative individual, to widen participation by all the processes and fulfillments of art—this is one of the fascinating challenges of these days.

That challenge continues strong today.

One of our most important responsibilities is to provide an environment which will promote the arts and enhance our cultural heritage. The legislation I am proposing today is a significant advance for the arts in America, and I look forward to its expeditious consideration in Congress.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a synopsis of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the synopsis was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE VISUAL ARTISTS AMENDMENTS

I. GOALS

The bill improves copyright protections for visual artists. It recognizes the implicit originality of individual works of fine art, the public benefit of encouraging a creative environment for artists to work, the national responsibility to enrich and enliven our cultural heritage.

II. SYNOPSIS

The bill has three major components:

Notice: For works of fine art, delete the requirement in current copyright law that a copyright notice appear on all works for which copying is claimed.

Artistic Rights: Prohibits intentional distortion, mutilation, or destruction of works of art. Allows artist to claim authorship of his work, or disclaim authorship if the work has been distorted. Remedy is the same as for other infringements of copyright, but there are not criminal sanctions. A work of art which is part of a building is not covered, unless the artist expressly reserves his rights at the time of commission.

Resale Royalties: Requires payment to the artist of 7% of the difference between the purchase price and the selling price of a work of art which is resold. Royalty payments are applicable to sales in excess of $500 and when the value of the work appreciates by at least 120%—during the lifetime of the artist and within 50 years of his death. Artists seeking royalties must register with the U.S. Copyright Office. All sales of works of art must be registered with the Copyright Office. Where an artist cannot be located or is deceased, the royalties are to be paid to the National Endowment for the Arts, Visual Artists program.

III. APPLICATION

The bill applies to:

—original works of fine art, eg. paintings, sculpture, pictorial works, including serigraphs and other work done in limited edition series.

—it applies only to works of "recognized quality"

—works of fine art done under commission would be covered since copyright does not usually transfer with the actual work.

Exclusions from the bill:

—"work-for-hire" pieces are not covered since authors in these cases transfer the copyright along with the work.

—work attached to buildings are not covered unless the artist expressly reserves his right in contract at the time of execution.●

By Mr. HATCH (for himself and Mr. GARN):

S. 2797. A bill to correct historical and geographical oversights in the establishment and development of the Utah component of the Confederated Tribes of the Goshute Reservation, to unify the land base of the Goshute Reservation, to simplify the boundaries of the Goshute Reservation, and for other purposes; to the Select Committee on Indian Affairs.

GOSHUTE RESERVATION AMENDMENTS

● Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, today Senator GARN and I are pleased to introduce legislation which is designed to clarify and correct numerous matters affecting the status of the lands of the Confederated Tribes of the Goshute Reservation, which lies along the west-central border of Utah. Since the creation of its reservation over 80 years ago, the small, 400 member Goshute Tribe has been plagued by problems relating to its reservation boundaries.

Most obvious of all of these problems is a strip of land one-quarter mile wide and 7 miles long which cuts through the middle of the reservation, but does not belong to the tribe. This strip resulted from an error in the Executive order legal descriptions originally establishing the reservation. Technically, the strip is now held by the United States as a part of the Bureau of Land Management inventory. This bill will change the statute of the title so that the United States will hold it in trust as a part of the Goshute Reservation.

Among the other provisions of the bill are sections which will place the tribal cemetery—now owned privately by the tribe—in trust status along with surrounding BLM land. Other sections will combine surface and subsurface interests where such are now split between tribal and Federal ownership.

We have worked closely with Congressman JAMES V. HANSEN who represents this district of Utah to draft a bill which could be supported by both the Goshute tribal members and the non-Indians living next to the reservation. On March 1, 1986, Congressman HANSEN held a town meeting at Ibapah, UT, to allow the local residents to raise their concerns and comments about this legislation. Late that day he met with tribal leaders to assess their need for this land. We then drafted a bill which I believe addresses the comments which were made during these meetings.

In addition, we have worked closely with representatives of the Department of the Interior and have accepted their suggestions to improve the bill.

I hope that this bill will see prompt action by the Senate and if possible pass before we adjourn this year.●

By Mr. MITCHELL (for himself, Mr. STAFFORD, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. DURENBERGER, Mr. HUMPHREY, and Mr. MOYNIHAN):

S. 2799. A bill to consolidate and improve Federal laws providing compensation and establishing liability for oil spills; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

OIL POLLUTION LIABILITY AND COMPENSATION ACT

● Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, today I am introducing Federal oil spill legislation that addresses the problem of damage caused by oil spills. Many coastal States already have their own laws that are designed to protect their shores from oil spills. The legislation I am introducing today builds on the State experience, but in no way preempts States from continuing to protect their citizens under State law. This legislation has been developed in close consultation with the attorney general of Maine.

Unlike much of what Congress considers, this legislation is not in reaction to a recent disaster. It is, rather, designed to establish an improved Federal system for responding to future oil spills. We are fortunate that our shorelines have not been exposed to an accident as harmful as the 1978 Amoco Cadiz accident that occurred off the coast of France, but a country with as much coastline as the United States should be better prepared for such a possibility. This is particularly true for coastal States, such as Maine, that are heavily dependent upon fisheries and tourism.

Currently, there are several Federal statutes that address some aspect of oil spill liability and compensation. This bill consolidates those provisions and provides a comprehensive framework for oil spill compensation and liability. This is necessary to promote more effective Federal responses to oil spills. The bill also provides more compensation to those adversely affected by an oil spill. If it is enacted, we will be better prepared to respond to these risks.

Many coastal States already have enacted oil spill programs. Maine has had an oil spill statute to protect its 3,500 miles of tidal shoreline for almost 15 years. It is the largest coastal State—in terms of length of coastline—to have an oil spill statute. That law has been used to respond effectively to over 110 oil spills, recovering costs without yet having to resort to litigation. The success of this statute, as well as other State statutes, persuades me that the Federal Government should build on, not erase, State laws.

The bill affirmatively permits States to continue to use their oil spill statutes and leaves States free to subsequently enact their own laws. The bill also leaves in place State oil spill funds which many States, including Maine, have set in place. There are those who argue that such duplication is unwarranted. However, in many areas, including protection of the environment, States and the Federal Government have worked cooperatively for decades to protect the public. The Clean Water Act section 311 program, the most comprehensive of current Federal oil spill laws, is based on this principle. A new oil spill liability law should not become the first exception to this cooperative principle.

The bill creates a Federal oil spill compensation fund to pay for costs associated with cleanup of and damages from an oil spill. The fund is supported by a tax on oil receipts.

The bill also provides that States can gain immediate access to the Federal fund for up to $250,000 to respond promptly to a spill. Notification to the Coast Guard within 24 hours is the only requirement. Such direct access authority can be augmented by cooperative agreements between the Federal Government and the States.

The bill holds oil tanker owners or operators liable for $420 per gross ton of capacity. For a tanker with a 200,000 gross ton capacity, this would mean a liability limit of $84 million. There is no overall liability ceiling, as there is in some other proposals. Many vessels have large capacities and therefore pose large risks, that would place their per ton liability far above any arbitrary ceiling proposed to date. More than a dozen such large ships routinely use U.S. waters. Other vessels with smaller capacities would have a lower limit. Inland barges, which can present a great risk to the public health and the environment, are treated as tankers when they haul oil as cargo.

Lessees and permittees of Outer Continental Shelf facilities are liable for cleanup costs plus $75 million. Owners and operators of all other facilities are liable for up to $100 million in damage.

The Federal fund would have a per incident limit of $500 million. Bills being introduced in previous Congresses had no such limit, the bills considered by the House have a $200 million per incident limit. A reasonable per incident limit is one that is likely to cover all costs of a serious oil spill. Lobstermen in Maine should not be left uncompensated because we set a limit on Fund use that is too low. Based on information that is currently available, most major oil spills occurring in the United States today would not cost more than $500 million once the shipowner's liability has been exhausted.

The bill provides for compensation for natural resource damages, including cases in which the natural resource is completely destroyed. Economic losses, such as lost profits, lost taxes, or impairment of earning capacity, are also compensable. These are important provisions to those who earn their living from the sea, since a major oil spill can render miles of shoreline an economic wasteland.

International protocols on oil spill liability are now pending before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. When I testified before the committee earlier this year, I stated my opposition to protocols that were preemptive of States, just as I oppose preemptive Federal legislation. The legislation I am introducing today implements the protocols to the extent that they are not inconsistent with the Federal regime, which does not preempt State laws.

Other provisions have been included to improve existing law and to accommodate concerns raised by other Members and interested parties. I believe this is effective, reasonable compromise legislation that I hope will be considered by the Environment and Public Works Committee when it marks up oil spill legislation next week. Compromise is an essential ingredient in policymaking. This bill contains such compromises while preserving the rights of States to protect their citizens from oil spills.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill and a section-by-section analysis be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2799

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act of 1986".

TITLE I—OIL POLLUTION LIABILITY AND COMPENSATION

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 101. For the purposes of this Act—

(1) the terms "vessel", "public vessel", "owner or operator", "remove" or "removal", "contiguous zone", "onshore facility", "offshore facility", and "barrel" shall have the meaning provided in section 311(a) of the Clean Water Act;

(2) the terms "person", "navigable waters", and "territorial seas" shall have the meaning provided in section 502 of the Clean Water Act;

(3) the term "act of God" means an unanticipated grave natural disaster or other natural phenomenon of an exceptional, inevitable, and irresistible character the effects of which could not have been prevented or avoided by the exercise of due care or foresight;

(4) the term "claim" means a request, made in writing for a sum certain, for compensation for damages or removal costs resulting from a discharge of oil;

(5) the term "claimant" means any person who presents a claim for compensation under this Act;

(6) the term "damages" means damages for economic loss or the loss of or injury to natural resources as specified in section 102(a) of this Act;

(7) the term "deepwater port facility" means an offshore facility which is or was licensed under the Deepwater Port Act of 1974;

(8) the term "discharge" means any emission, intentional or unintentional, into the environment, and includes, but is not limited to, spilling, leaking, pumping, pouring, emitting, emptying or dumping;

(9) the term "environment" means the navigable waters, the waters of the contiguous zone, the ocean waters of which the natural resources are under the exclusive management authority of the United States under the Magnuson Fishery Conservation and Management Act, adjoining shorelines, and the ambient air above such waters and shorelines.

(10) the term "foreign offshore unit" means a structure or group of structures which is located, in whole or in part, in the territorial sea or on the continental shelf of a foreign country and is or was used for one or more of the following purposes: exploring for, drilling for, producing, storing, handling, transferring, processing, or transporting oil produced from the seabed beneath the foreign country's territorial sea or from the foreign country's continental shelf;

(11) the term "Fund" means the Oil Spill Compensation Fund, hereby established under this Act;

(12) the term "guarantor" means any person, other than the owner or operator, who provides evidence of financial responsibility for an owner or operator under this Act or section 311(p) of the Clean Water Act;

(13) the term "lessee" means a person holding a leasehold interest in an oil or gas lease on submerged lands of the outer continental shelf, granted or maintained under the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act;

(14) the term "liable" or "liability" under this Act shall be construed to be the standard of liability which obtains under section 311 of the Clean Water Act;

(15) the term "mobile offshore drilling unit" means a vessel capable of use as an outer continental shelf facility to drill for oil;

(16) the term "natural resources" includes land, fish, wildlife, biota, air, water, ground water, drinking water supplies, and other such resources belonging to, managed by, held in trust by, appertaining to, or otherwise controlled by the United States (including the resources of the fishery conservation zone established by the Magnuson Fishery Conservation and Management Act), any State or local government, or any foreign government;

(17) the term "oil" means petroleum, including crude oil or any fraction or residue therefrom;

(18) the term "outer continental shelf facility" means an offshore facility which is located, in whole or in part, on the outer continental shelf and is or was used for one or more of the following purposes: exploring for, drilling for, producing, storing, handling, transferring, processing, or transporting oil produced from the outer continental shelf;

(19) the term "owner or operator" means—

(A) with respect to an outer continental shelf facility other than a pipeline or mobile offshore drilling unit, the lessee or permittee of the area in which the facility is located, or the holder of a right of use and easement granted under the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act for the area in which the facility is located (where the holder is a different person than the lessee or permittee);

(B) with respect to a mobile off shore drilling unit being used as an outer continental shelf facility, from which oil is discharged on or above the surface of the water (or which posed a substantial threat of such a discharge), the owner or operator of the unit, and such unit shall be deemed to be a tanker;

(C) with respect to a mobile offshore drilling unit being used as an outer continental shelf facility—

(i) from which oil is discharged on or above the surface of the water (or which posed a substantial threat of such a discharge), to the extent removal costs or damages exceed the limitation specified in section 102(c)(1)(A), or

(ii) from which oil is discharged below the surface of the water (or which posed a substantial threat of such a discharge), the permittee of the area in which the unit is located, or the holder of a right of use and easement granted under the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act for the area in which the unit is located (where the holder is a different person than the lessee or permittee);

(20) the term "permittee" means a person holding an authorization, license, or permit for geological exploration issued under section 11 of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act;

(21) the term "removal costs" means the costs of removal taken after a discharge of oil has occurred or where there was a substantial threat of a discharge of oil, to prevent, minimize, or mitigate oil pollution from that incident, including all costs of completing removal as determined under section 106(d);

(22) the term "tanker" means a vessel constructed or adapted for the carriage of oil in bulk or in commercial quantities as cargo;

(23) the terms "United States" and "State" means the several States of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the United States Virgin Islands, the Commonwealth of the Northern Marianas, and any other territory or possession over which the United States has jurisdiction.

LIABILITY

SEC. 102. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision or rule of law, and subject only to the defenses set forth in subsection (b) of this section, the owner or operator of a vessel or an onshore or offshore facility from which oil is discharged, or which posed the threat of a discharge which causes the incurrence of removal costs, shall be liable for—

(1)(A) all removal costs incurred by the United States Government or a State under subsection (c), (d), (e), (f)(4), or (1) of section 311 of the Clean Water Act or under the Intervention on the High Seas Act or section 18 of the Deepwater Port Act of 1974; and

(B) any removal costs incurred by any person, including, but not limited to, any State; and

(2) all damages or economic loss or loss of natural resources resulting from such a discharge, including:

(A) any injury to, destruction of, or loss of any real or personal property;

(B) any loss of use of real or personal property;

(C) any injury to, destruction of, or loss of natural resources, including the reasonable costs of assessing such injury, destruction, or loss;

(D) any loss of use, including loss of subsistence use, of any natural resources, without regard to the ownership or management of such resources;

(E) any loss of income or profits or impairment of earning capacity resulting from injury to or destruction of real or personal property or natural resources, without regard to the ownership of such property or resources; and

(F) any direct or indirect loss of tax, royalty, rental, or net profits share revenue by the Federal Government or any State or political subdivision thereof, for a period of not to exceed one year.

(b)(1) There shall be no liability under subsection (a) of this section for a person otherwise liable who can establish by a preponderance of the evidence that the discharge or threat of discharge of oil and the damages resulting therefrom were caused solely by—

(A) an act of God;

(B) an act of war;

(C) an act or omission of a third party other than an employee or agent of the defendant, or than one whose act or omission occurs in connection with a contractual relationship, existing directly or indirectly, with the defendant (except where the sole contractual arrangement arises from a published tariff and acceptance for carriage by a common carrier by rail), if the defendant establishes by a preponderance of the evidence that (i) the defendant exercised due care with respect to the oil concerned, taking into consideration the characteristics of such oil, in light of all relevant facts and circumstances, and (ii) the defendant took precaution against foreseeable acts or omissions of any such third party and the consequences that could foreseeably result from such acts or omissions; or

(D) any combination of the foregoing paragraphs.

(2) In any case where the owner or operator of a vessel or an onshore or offshore facility can establish by a preponderance of the evidence that a discharge and the damages resulting therefrom were caused solely by an act or omission of a third party in accordance with paragraph (1)(C) (or solely by such an act or omission in combination with an act of God or an act of war), such third party shall be liable under this section as if such third party were the owner or operator of a vessel or onshore or offshore facility from which the discharge actually occurred. Where the owner or operator of a tanker or an onshore or offshore facility which handles or stores oil in bulk or commercial quantities, from which oil is discharged, alleges that such discharges was caused solely by an act or omission of a third party, such owner or operator shall promptly pay to the United States Government, and any other claimant, the costs of removal or damages claimed and shall be entitled by subrogation to all rights of the United States Government or other claimant to recover such costs of removal or damages from such third party under this subsection.

(c)(1) The liability of an owner or operator of a vessel or an onshore or offshore facility for damages and removal costs under this section for each discharge or incident shall not exceed—

(A) $420 per gross ton or $10,000,000, whichever is greater, of any tanker carrying oil in bulk or in commercial quantities as cargo, including any such barge operating in the navigable waters;

(B) $300 per gross ton or $500,000, whichever is greater, of any other vessel;

(C) the total of all removal costs under subsection (a)(1) of this section plus $75,000,000 for any outer continental shelf facility;

(D) $100,000,000 for any deepwater port facility (including the liability of the licensee for a discharge from any vessel moored at such port, in any case where $100,000,000 exceeds $420 per gross ton of such vessel); or

(E) $100,000,000 for any other onshore or offshore facility.

(2) Notwithstanding the limitations of paragraph (1) of this subsection, the liability of the owner of operator of a vessel or an onshore or offshore facility under subsection (a) of this section shall be the full and total damages and removal costs not offset by any removal costs incurred on behalf of such owner or operator, if (A) the discharge of oil was the result of willful misconduct or gross negligence within the privity or knowledge of the owner or operator or of a violation (within the privity or knowledge of the owner or operator) of applicable safety, construction, or operating standards or regulations; or (B) the owner or operator fails or refuses to provide all reasonable cooperation and assistance requested by a responsible official in connection with removal activities or to provide removal action upon order of a responsible official.

(3) Notwithstanding the limitations of paragraph (1) of this subsection or the defenses of subsection (b) of this section, all removal costs incurred by the United States Government or any State or local official or agency in connection with a discharge of oil from any outer continental shelf facility or a vessel carrying oil as cargo from such a facility shall be borne by the owner or operator of such facility or vessel.

(4)(A) The President is authorized to establish by regulation, with respect to any class or category of onshore or offshore facility subject to paragraph (1) (D) or (E) of this subsection, a maximum limit of liability under this section of less than $100,000,000, but not less than $8,000,000, taking into account the size, storage capacity, oil throughput, proximity to sensitive areas, type of oil handled, history of discharges, and other factors relevant to risks posed by the class or category of facility.

(B) The President shall, by regulation, not less often than every three years, adjust the limits of liability specified in paragraph (1) of this subsection to reflect significant increases in the Consumer Price Index.

(d)(1) In the case of an injury to, destruction of, or loss of natural resources under subsection (a)(2)(C) of this section, liability shall be (A) to the United States Government for natural resources belonging to, managed by, controlled by, or appertaining to the United States, and (B) to any State for natural resources within the State or belonging to, managed by, controlled by, or appertaining to such State, and (C) where subsection (e) of this section applies, to the government of a foreign country for natural resources belonging to, managed by, controlled by, or appertaining to such government. The President, or the authorized representative of any State or of the foreign government, shall act on behalf of the public as trustee of such natural resources to recover for such damages. Sums recovered by the United States Government as trustee under this subsection shall be retained by the trustee, without further appropriation, for use only to restore, replace, or acquire the equivalent of such natural resources. Sums recovered by a State as trustee under this subsection shall be available for use only to restore, replace, or acquire the equivalent of such natural resources by the State. The measure of damages in any action under subsection (a)(2)(C) shall not be limited by the sums which can be used to restore or replace such resources. There shall be no double recovery under this Act for natural resource damages, including the costs of damage assessment or restoration, rehabilitation, or acquisition for the same discharge and natural resource.

(2)(A) The President shall designate the Federal officials who shall act on behalf of the public as trustees for natural resources under this Act. Such officials shall assess damages for injury to, destruction of, or loss of natural resources for purposes of this Act for those resources under their trusteeship and may, upon request of and reimbursement from a State and at the Federal officials' discretion, assess damages for those natural resources under the State's trusteeship.

(B) The Governor of each State shall designate State officials who may act on behalf of the public as trustee for natural resources under this Act and shall notify the President of such designations. Such State officials shall assess damages to natural resources for the purposes of this Act for those natural resources under their trusteeship.

(C) Any determination or assessment of damages to natural resources for the purposes of this Act made by a Federal or State trustee in accordance with the regulations promulgated under section 301(c) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act shall have the force and effect of a rebuttable presumption on behalf of the trustee in any administrative or judicial proceeding under this Act.

(e)(1) Except where title II of this Act applies, the recovery of removal costs and damages by (A) persons residing in a foreign country, (B) the government of a foreign country, or (C) any agency or political subdivision of a foreign country, under this Act, shall be exclusively in accordance with this subsection.

(2) A claimant under this subsection must demonstrate that the claimant has not been otherwise compensated for incurred removal costs or damages. Except with respect to paragraph (3)(D) of this subsection, a claimant under this subsection must demonstrate (A) that recovery is authorized by a treaty or executive agreement between the United States and the claimant's country, or (B) that the Secretary of State, in consultation with the Attorney General and other appropriate officials, has certified that the claimant's country provides a comparable remedy for United States claimants.

(3) Where a discharge, or substantial threat of a discharge of oil in or on the territorial sea, internal waters, or adjacent shoreline of a foreign country occurs, claims for removal costs and damages may be made under this subsection if the removal costs or damages resulted from a discharge of, or substantial threat of a discharge, of oil from—

(A) an outer continental shelf facility or a deepwater port facility,

(B) a vessel occurring in the navigable waters of the United States,

(C) a vessel carrying oil as cargo between two ports subject to the jurisdiction of the United States; or

(D) a tanker that received oil at the terminal of the pipeline constructed under the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Authorization Act for transportation to a port in the United States, the discharge or threat having occurred prior to delivery to that port.

(4) This subsection shall apply only in the case of discharges of oil occurring after the enactment of this Act.

(f)(1) No indemnification, hold harmless, or similar agreement or conveyance shall be effective to transfer from the owner or operator of any vessel or onshore or offshore facility or from any person who may be liable for a discharge or threat of discharge under this section, to any other person the liability imposed under this section. Nothing in this subsection shall bar any agreement to insure, hold harmless, or indemnify a party to such agreement for any liability under this section.

(2) Nothing in this Act, including the provisions of paragraph (1) of this subsection, shall bar a cause of action that an owner or operator subject to liability under this section, or a guarantor, has or would have, by reason of subrogation or otherwise against any person.

(g) The owner or operator of a vessel shall be liable in accordance with this section, the International Convention on Civil Liability for Oil Pollution Damage, 1984, and section 311 of the Clean Water Act, under maritime tort law, and as provided in section 106 of this Act, notwithstanding any provision of the Act of March 3, 1851 (46 U.S.C. 183) or the absence of any physical damage to the proprietary interest of the claimant.

USES OF FUND

SEC. 103. (a) The President shall use the money in the Fund for the following purposes:

(1) all removal costs or other costs of carrying out the purposes of subsections (c), (d), (l), and (i) of section 311 of the Clean Water Act, sections 5 and 7 of the Intervention on the High Seas Act, and section 18 of the Deepwater Port Act, with respect to discharges, or substantial threats of discharges, or oil (as the term "oil" is defined in each respective Act);

(2) payment of any claim for removal costs or damages—

(A) in excess of the amount for which the owner or operator of the vessel or onshore or offshore facility from which oil is discharged is liable under section 102 of this Act;

(B) where the source of the discharge of oil is not known or cannot be identified;

(C) in any case where the claim has not been satisfied in accordance with subsection (c) of this section; and

(D) subject to, but in excess of the combined compensation available under, the International Convention on Civil Liability for Oil Pollution Damage, 1984, and the International Convention on the Establishment of an International Fund for Compensation of Oil Pollution Damage, 1984;

(3) payment of any claim for removal costs and damages that have resulted from the discharge, or substantial threat of a discharge, of oil from a foreign offshore unit;

(4)(A) payment of costs incurred by any State in responding to a discharge, or substantial threat of a discharge, of oil into the navigable waters or adjoining shorelines from a vessel, an onshore facility, an offshore facility, or a foreign offshore unit, as provided in subsection (d) of this section;

(B) reimbursement to any State for the payment of any claims for removal costs or damages payable under this Act which such State has paid with funds under the control of such State, including payment pursuant to a delegation under subsection (c) of this section;

(5) the costs of assessing both short-term and long-term injury to, destruction of, or loss of any natural resources resulting from a discharge of oil;

(6) the costs of Federal or State efforts in the restoration, rehabilitation, or replacement or acquiring the equivalent of any natural resources injured, destroyed, or lost as a result of any discharge of oil;

(7) payment of contributions to the International Fund as prescribed in section 305 of this Act;

(8) subject to such amounts as are provided in appropriation Acts, the costs of providing equipment and similar overhead, related to the purposes of this Act and section 311 of the Clean Water Act, and of establishing and maintaining damage assessment capability, for any Federal agency involved in strike forces, emergency task forces, or other response teams;

(9) the costs of a program to identify, investigate, and take enforcement and abatement action against discharges of oil, including the provisions of section 311(j) (1) (C) and (D) of the Clean Water Act;

(10) all administrative and personnel costs of administering the Fund and this Act.

(b) The maximum amount which may be paid from the Fund with respect to any single discharge or incident, in combination with payment, if any, under the International Convention on the Establishment of an International Fund for Compensation of Oil Pollution Damage, 1984, shall not exceed $500,000,000.

(c)(1) The President is authorized to promulgate regulations designating one or more Federal officials who may obligate money in the Fund in accordance with subsection (a) of this section or portions thereof. The President is also authorized to delegate authority to obligate money in the Fund or to settle claims to officials of a State with an adequate program operating under a cooperative agreement with the Federal Government.

(2) The President is authorized to delegate the administration of his duties and authorities under this Act to the heads of those Federal departments, agencies, and instrumentalities which the President determines appropriate.

(3)(A) The President shall promulgate, and may from time to time amend, regulations for the presentation, filing, processing, settlement, and adjudication of claims for removal costs or damages resulting from the discharge, or substantial threat of a discharge, of oil under this Act.

(B) Whenever the President receives information from any person alleging that a person has incurred removal costs or damages resulting from the discharge, or substantial threat of a discharge, of oil respecting which the owner or operator of a vessel or onshore or offshore facility is or may be liable under section 102 of this Act, the President shall notify the owner, operator, and guarantor or such vessel or facility of that allegation. Such owner or operator or guarantor may, within five days after receiving the notification or presentation of any claim by a claimant, deny the allegation, or deny liability for removal costs and damages for any of the reasons set forth in subsection (b) of section 102 of this Act.

(C) The owner or operator of any vessel or onshore or offshore facility from which oil has been discharged shall provide notice to all potentially injured parties.

(D) No claims may be asserted against the Fund pursuant to subsection (a) unless such claim is presented in the first instance to the owner or operator or guarantor of the vessel or onshore or offshore facility from which oil has been discharged, if known to the claimant, and to any other person known to the claimant who may be liable under section 102. In any case where the claim has not been satisfied within 60 days of presentation in accordance with this subsection, the claimant may present the claim to the Fund for payment. No claim against the Fund may be approved or certified during the pendency of an action by the claimant in court to recover costs which are the subject of the claim.

(d) The Governor of each State, or any appropriate State official designated by the Governor, is authorized to obligate the Fund for the payment of removal costs in an amount not to exceed $250,000 per discharge or substantial threat of discharge of oil, for the purpose of immediate response, subject only to the requirement that the President be notified within 24 hours of any such obligation under the authority of this sentence. In addition, the President shall enter into an agreement with the Governor of any interested State to provide a procedure by which the Governor or designated State official may undertake additional removal action or obligate the Fund for the additional payment of removal costs for response to a particular discharge or substantial threat of discharge, subject to such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon. Payments under subsection (a)(4)(A) of this section, other than as authorized by the first sentence of this subsection, shall be made in accordance with such agreements.

(e)(1) Payment of any claim by the Fund under this section shall be subject to the United States Government acquiring by subrogation all rights of the claimant to recover the removal costs or damages from the responsible party.

(2) Any person, including the Fund, who pays compensation pursuant to this Act to any claimant for costs or damages shall be subrogated to all rights, claims, and causes of action for those costs and damages that the claimant has under this Act or under any other law.

(3) Upon request of the President, the Attorney General shall commence an action on behalf of the Fund to recover any compensation paid by the Fund to any claimant pursuant to this Act, and, without regard to any limitation of liability with respect to an owner or operator under section 102(c), all costs incurred by the Fund by reason of the claim, including interest (including prejudgment interest), administrative and adjudicative costs, and attorney's fees. Such an action may be commenced against any owner or operator or guarantor, or against any other person who is liable, pursuant to any law, to the compensated claimant or to the Fund, for the cost or damages for which the compensation was paid.

(f) The Fund shall not be available to pay any claim for costs or damages to the extent the discharge or the damages had been caused by the gross negligence or willful misconduct of that particular claimant.

(g) The Comptroller General shall provide an audit review team to audit all payments, obligations, reimbursements, or other uses of the Fund, to assure that the Fund is being properly administered and that claims are being appropriately and expeditiously considered. The Comptroller General shall submit to the Congress as interim report one year after the establishment of the Fund. The Comptroller General shall thereafter provide such auditing of the Fund as is appropriate. Each Federal agency shall cooperate with the Comptroller General in carrying out this subsection.

(h)(1) No claim may be presented under this section for recovery of removal costs after the date 6 years after the date of completion of all removal action.

(2) No claim may be presented under this section for recovery of damages unless the claim is presented within 3 years after the date of the discovery of the loss and its connection with the release in question, or in the case of damages under section 102(a)(2)(C), if later, the date on which final regulations are promulgated under section 301(c) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act.

(3) The time limitations contained herein shall not begin to run—

(A) against a minor until the earlier of the date when such minor reaches 18 years of age or the date on which a legal representative is duly appointed for the minor, or

(B) against an incompetent person until the earlier of the date on which such incompetent's incompetency ends or the date on which a legal representative is duly appointed for such incompetent.

(i) Where the President has paid out of the Fund for any removal costs or any costs specified under subsection (a)(6) or (7), no other claim may be paid out of the Fund for the same costs.

(j) Except in a situation requiring action to avoid an irreversible loss of natural resources or to prevent or reduce any continuing danger to natural resources or similar need for emergency action, funds may not be used under this Act for the restoration, rehabilitation, or replacement or acquisition of the equivalent of any natural resources until a plan for the use of such funds for such purposes has been developed and adopted by affected Federal agencies and the Governor or Governors of any State having sustained damage to natural resources within its borders, belonging to, managed by or appertaining to such State, after adequate public notice and opportunity for hearing and consideration of all public comment.

FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITY

SEC. 104. (a)(1) The owner or operator of any vessel over three hundred gross tons (except a non-self-propelled barge that does not carry oil as cargo or fuel), using any port or place in the United States or the navigable waters or any outer continental shelf facility or deepwater port facility, shall establish and maintain, in accordance with regulations promulgated by the President, evidence of financial responsibility sufficient to meet the maximum amount of liability to which the owner or operator could be subjected under section 102 of this Act in a case where the owner or operator would be entitled to limit liability under that section. If the owner or operator owns or operates more than one vessel, evidence of financial responsibility need be established only to meet the maximum liability applicable to the largest of such vessels.

(2) The Secretary of the Treasury shall withhold or revoke the clearance required by section 4197 of the Revised Statutes of the United States of any vessel subject to this subsection that does not have the certification required under this subsection or the regulations issued hereunder.

(3) The Secretary of the department in which the Coast Guard is operating may (A) deny entry to any outer continental shelf facility, any deepwater port facility, or any port or place in the United States, or (B) detain at such a facility or port or place, any vessel that, upon request, does not produce the certification required under this subsection or the regulations issued hereunder.

(4) Any vessel subject to the requirements of this subsection which is found in the navigable waters without the necessary evidence of financial responsibility shall be subject to seizure by the United States of any oil carried as cargo.

(b) Each owner or operator with respect to an outer continental shelf facility, deepwater port facility, or other offshore facility, shall establish and maintain evidence of financial responsibility sufficient to meet the maximum amount of liability to which the owner or operator could be subjected under section 102 of this Act in a case where the owner or operator would be entitled to limit liability under that section. Such evidence of financial responsiblity shall be established according to regulations prescribed by the President.

(c) Financial responsibility under this section may be established by any one, or by any combination, of the following methods, which the President determines to be acceptable: evidence of insurance, surety bond, guarantee, letter of credit, qualification as a self-insurer, or other evidence of financial responsibility. Any bond filed shall be issued by a bonding company authorized to do business in the United States. In promulgating requirements under this section, the President is authorized to specify policy or other contractual terms, conditions, or defenses which are necessary, or which are unacceptable, in establishing such evidence of financial responsiblity in order to effectuate the purposes of this Act.

(d) Any claim for which liability may be established under section 102 of this Act may be asserted directly against any guarantor providing evidence of financial responsibility for an owner or operator liable under that section for costs and damages to which the claim pertains. in defending against such a claim, the guarantor may invoke all rights and defenses which would be available to the responsible party under section 102. The guarantor may also invoke the defense that the discharge was caused by the willful misconduct of the owner or operator, but the guarantor may not invoke any other defense that might be available in proceedings brought by the owner or operator against the guarantor.

(e) The total liability of any guarantor in a direct action suit brought under this section shall be limited to the aggregate amount of the monetary limits of the policy of insurance, guarantee, surety bond, letter of credit, or similar instrument obtained from the guarantor by the person subject to liability under section 102 for the purpose of satisfying the requirement for evidence of financial responsibility. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to limit any other State or Federal statutory, contractual, or common law liability of a guarantor, including, but not limited to, the liability of such guarantor for bad faith either in negotiation or in failing to negotiate the settlement of any claim. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed, interpreted, or applied to diminish the liability of any person under section 102 of this Act or other applicable law.

(f)(1) Any person who, after notice and an opportunity for a hearing, is found to have failed to comply with the requirements of this section or the regulations issued thereunder, or with a denial or detention order issued under subsection (a)(3) of this section, shall be liable to the United States for a civil penalty, not to exceed $25,000 per day of violation. The amount of the civil penalty shall be assessed by the President by written notice. In determining the amount of the penalty, the President shall take into account the nature, circumstances, extent, and gravity of the violation, the degree of culpability, any history of prior violation, ability to pay, and such other matters as justice may require. The President may compromise, modify, or remit, with or without conditions, any civil penalty which is subject to imposition or which has been imposed under this paragraph. If any person fails to pay an assessed civil penalty after it has become final, the President may refer the matter to the Attorney General for collection.

(2) In addition to, or in lieu of, assessing a penalty under paragraph (1) of this subsection, the President may request the Attorney General to secure such relief as necessary to compel compliance with this section, including, but not limited to, a judicial order terminating operations. The district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction to grant such relief as the public interest and the equities of the case may require.

(g) Any regulation respecting financial responsibility, which has been issued pursuant to any provision of law repealed or superseded by this Act, and which is in effect on the date immediately preceding the effective date of this Act, shall be deemed and construed to be a regulation issued pursuant to this section. Such a regulation shall remain in full force and effect unless and until superseded by new regulations issued under this section.

LITIGATION, JURISDICTION AND VENUE

SEC. 105. (a) Review of any regulation promulgated under this Act may be had upon application by any interested person only in the Circuit Court of Appeals of the United States for the District of Columbia. Any such application shall be made within ninety days from the date of promulgation of such regulations. Any matter with respect to which review could have been obtained under this subsection shall not be subject to judicial review in any civil or criminal proceeding for enforcement or to obtain damages or recovery of response costs.

(b) Except as provided in subsections (a) and (c) of this section, the United States district courts shall have exclusive original jurisdiction over all controversies arising under this Act (which shall be deemed to include actions under the International Convention on Civil Liability for Oil Pollution Damage, 1984, and the International Convention on the Establishment of an International Fund for Compensation for Oil Pollution Damage, 1984), without regard to the citizenship of the parties or the amount in controversy. Venue shall lie in any district in which the discharge or injury or damages occurred, or in which the defendant resides, may be found, has its principal office, or has appointed an agent for service of process. For the purposes of this section, the Fund and the International Fund, established under Article 2 of the International Convention on the Establishment of an International Fund for Compensation for Oil Pollution Damage, 1984, shall reside in the District of Columbia.

(c) A State trial court of competent jurisdiction over similar claims may consider claims under section 102 or State law and any final judgment of such court (when no longer subject to ordinary forms of review) shall be recognized, valid, and enforceable for all purposes of section 102, section 103, and title III of this Act.

(d) The provisions of subsections (a), (b), and (c) of this section shall not apply to any controversy or other matter resulting from the assessment or collection of any tax, as provided by title IV of this Act, or to the review of any regulation promulgated under the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

(e) The President may prescribe the necessary regulations to carry out this Act and all obligations of the United States under the International Convention on Civil Liability for Oil Pollution Damage, 1984, and the International Convention on the Establishment of an International Fund for Compensation for Oil Pollution Damage, 1984.

(f) No provision of this Act shall be deemed or held to moot any litigation concerning any discharge of oil, or any damages associated therewith, commenced prior to enactment of this Act.

(g)(1) Except as provided in paragraphs (3) and (4), no action may be commenced for damages (as defined in section 101(6)) under this Act, unless that action is commenced within 3 years after the date of the discovery of the loss and its connection with the release in question, or in the case of damages under section 102(a)(2)(C), if later, the date on which regulations are promulgated under section 301(c) of the Comprehensive Environmental Respone, Compensation, and Liability Act.

(2) An initial action for recovery of removal costs referred to in section 102(a)(1) must be commenced within 3 years after completion of the removal action. In any such action described in this subsection, the court shall enter a declaratory judgment on liability for removal costs or damages that will be binding on any subsequent action or actions to recover further removal costs or damages. A subsequent action or actions under section 102 for further removal costs at the vessel or facility may be maintained at any time during the removal action, but must be commenced no later than 3 years after the date of completion of all removal action. Except as otherwise provided in this paragraph, an action may be commenced under section 102 for recovery of removal costs at any time after such costs have been incurred.

(3) No action for contribution for any removal costs or damages may be commenced more than 3 years after—

(A) the date of judgment in any action under this Act for recovery of such costs or damages, or

(B) the date of entry of a judicially approved settlement with respect to such costs or damages.

(4) No action based on rights subrogated pursuant to this Act by reason of payment of a claim may be commenced under this Act more than 3 years after the date of payment of such claim.

(5) The time limitations contained herein shall not begin to run—

(A) against a minor until the earlier of the date when such minor reaches 18 years of age or the date on which a legal representative is duly appointed for such minor, or

(B) against an incompetent person until the earlier of the date on which such incompetent's incompetency ends or the date on which a legal representative is duly appointed for such incompetent.

STATE LAWS AND PROGRAMS

SEC. 106. (a) Nothing in this Act shall be construed or interpreted as preempting any State from imposing any additional liability or requirements with respect to the discharge of oil or other pollution by oil within such State. Nothing in this Act shall affect or modify in any way the obligations or liabilities of any person under other Federal or State law, including common law, with respect to discharges of oil.

(b) Nothing in this Act or in section 9507 of the Internal Revenue Act of 1954 shall in any way affect, or be construed to affect, the authority of any State—

(1) to establish, or to continue in effect, a fund any purpose of which is to pay for costs or damages arising out of, or directly resulting from, oil pollution or the substantial threat of oil pollution; or

(2) to require any person to contribute to such a fund.

(c) A State may enforce, on the navigable waters of such State, the requirements for evidence of financial responsibility applicable under section 104 of this Act.

(d) The President shall consult with the affected State or States on the appropriate removal action to be taken. Removal with respect to any discharge or incident shall be considered completed when so determined by the President and the Governor or Governors of the affected State or States.

(e) Nothing in this Act, the Act of March 3, 1851, as amended (46 U.S.C. 183 et seq.), or section 9507 of the Internal Revenue Act of 1954, shall in any way affect, or be construed to affect, the authority of the United States or any State or political subdivision thereof—

(1) to impose additional liability or additional requirements, or

(2) to impose, or to determine the amount of, any fine or penalty (whether criminal or civil in nature) for any violation of law, relating to the discharge, or substantial threat of a discharge, of oil.

TITLE II—CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

TRANS-ALASKA PIPELINE FUND

SEC. 201. (a) Section 204(b) of the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Authorization Act is amended, in the first sentence—

(1) by inserting after the words "any area" the words "in the State of Alaska";

(2) by inserting after the words "any activities" the words "related to the Trans-Alaska Oil Pipeline"; and

(3) by inserting at the end of the subsection the following new sentence: "This subsection shall not apply to removal costs covered by the Oil Spill Liability and Compensation Act of 1986.".

(b) Section 204(c) of the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Authorizations Act is repealed. This repeal shall not affect the applicability of that section to claims arising before the enactment of this Act. The repeal of paragraphs (4), (5), and (8) of that provision shall only become effective upon the payment by the Board of Trustees of the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Liability Fund of all claims certified under subsection (c) of this section and the rebate of all remaining amounts under, and the completion of all actions required to carry out, such subsection.

(c)(1) Not later than 210 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Board of Trustees of the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Liability Fund shall certify to the President the total amount of claims outstanding against that Fund as of the date of enactment of this Act. The amount in that Fund exceeding the total amount so certified shall be rebated directly, on a pro rata basis, to the owners of the oil at the time it was loaded on the vessel.

(2) After the settlement of all claims described in paragraph (1) and the completion of all actions, if any, by the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Liability Fund for recovery of amounts paid on such claims, the remaining amounts in that Fund shall be rebated directly, on a pro rata basis, to the owners of the oil at the time it was loaded on the vessel.

(3) Whenever a rebate is made on a pro rata basis to the owners of oil under paragraphs (1) or (2) of this subsection, each owner's share of the rebate shall be an amount determined by dividing the amount contributed by that owner to the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Liability Fund by the total amount contributed by all such owners to that Fund.

(d) Trustees and former trustees of the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Liability Fund who were designated by the Secretary of the Interior shall not be subject to any liability incurred by that Fund or by the present and past officers and trustees of that Fund, other than liability for gross negligence or willful misconduct.

INTERVENTION ON THE HIGH SEAS ACT

SEC. 202. Section 17 of the Intervention on the High Seas Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 17. The Fund established under the Oil Spill Liability and Compensation Act of 1986 shall be available to the Secretary for actions taken under sections 5 and 7 of this Act.".

CLEAN WATER ACT

SEC. 203. Section 311 of the Clean Water Act is amended as follows:

(a) Subparagraph (H) of paragraph (2) of subsection (c) amended by striking out "from the fund established under subsection (k) of this section for the reasonable costs incurred in such removal" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "in the case of any discharges of oil from a vessel or facility, for the reasonable costs incurred in such removal from the Fund established under the Oil Spill Liability and Compensation Act of 1986".

(b) Subsection (d) is amended by striking out the last sentence.

(c)(1) Subsections (f), (g), and (i) of section 311 of the Clean Water Act shall not apply with respect to any discharge of oil resulting in removal costs for which liability is established under section 102 of this Act.

(2) Paragraphs (2) and (3) of subsection (f) are amended by striking out "under subsection (c) for the removal of such oil or substance by the United States Government" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "under subsection (c) for the removal of such oil or substance by the United States Government and for payments made pursuant to section 103(a)(4)(A) of the Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act of 1986".

(d) Subsection (i) is amended by striking out "(1)" after "(i)" and striking out paragraphs (2) and (3).

(e) Subsection (k) is repealed. Any amounts remaining in the revolving fund established under that subsection shall be deposited in the Fund established under this Act. The Oil Spill Compensation Fund shall assume all liability incurred by revolving fund established under section 311(k) of the Clean Water Act.

(f) Subsection (1) is amended by striking out the second sentence.

(g) Subsection (p) is repealed.

(h) Section 311 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(s) The Oil Spill Compensation Fund, established under the Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act of 1986, shall be available to carry out subsections (c), (d), (i) and (1) as those subsections apply to discharges, or substantial threats of discharges, of oil. Any amounts received by the United States under this section shall be deposited in such Oil Spill Compensation Fund.".

DEEPWATER PORT ACT

SEC. 204. The Deepwater Port Act of 1974 is amended as follows:

(a) In section 4(c)(1) strike "section 18(1) of this Act;" and insert in lieu thereof "section 104 of the Oil Spill Liability and Compensation Act of 1986,".

(b) Subsections (b), (d), (e), (f), (g), (h), (i), (j), (l), (n), and paragraph (1) of subsection (m) of section 18 are deleted.

(c) Paragraph (3) of subsection (c) of section 18 is amended by striking "Deepwater Port Liability Fund established pursuant to subsection (f) of this section", and inserting in lieu thereof "fund established under the Oil Spill Liability and Compensation Act of 1986".

(d) Subsections (c), (k), and (m) of section 18 are redesignated (b), (c), and (d) respectively, and paragraphs (2), (3), and (4) of subsection (m) are redesignated (1), (2), and (3), respectively.

(e) Any amounts remaining in the Deepwater Port Liability Fund, established under section 18(f) of the Deepwater Port Act of 1974, shall be deposited in the Fund established under this Act. The Oil Spill Compensation Fund shall assume all liability incurred by the Deepwater Port Liability Fund.

OUTER CONTINENTAL SHELF LANDS ACT AMENDMENTS

SEC. 205. Title III of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act Amendments of 1978 is hereby repealed. Any amounts remaining in the Offshore Oil Pollution Compensation Fund established under section 302 of that title shall be deposited in the Fund established under this Act. The Oil Spill Compensation Fund shall assume all liability incurred by the Offshore Oil Pollution Compensation Fund.

TITLE III—IMPLEMENTATION OF INTERNATIONAL CONVENTIONS

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 301. For the purposes of this title—

(1) the terms "ship", "owner", "oil", "pollution damage", and "incident" shall have the meaning provided in article I of the Civil Liability Convention;

(2) the term "Civil Liability Convention" means the International Convention on Civil Liability for Oil Pollution Damage, 1984;

(3) the term "financial responsibility" shall have the same meaning as "financial security" under the Civil Liability Convention;

(4) the term "Fund Convention" means the International Convention on the Establishment of an International Fund for Compensation for Oil Pollution Damage, 1984; and

(5) the term "International Fund" means the International Oil Pollution Compensation Fund, established under article 2 of the Fund Convention.

APPLICABILITY OF CONVENTIONS

SEC. 302. If the Civil Liability Convention and the Fund Convention are determined by the President to be consistent with the provisions of sections 102, 103, and 106 of this Act, during any period that the Civil Liability Convention and the Fund Convention are in force with respect to the United States, liability of an owner for pollution damage arising from an incident involving a ship shall be determined in accordance with the Civil Liability Convention and Fund Convention. During such a period, no claim with respect to pollution damage which is compensable under the International Fund may be made against the Oil Spill Compensation Fund under paragraphs (2) (A), (B), or (C), or (4)(B) of section 103(a) of this Act.

RECOGNITION OF INTERNATIONAL FUND

SEC. 303. The International Fund is recognized under the laws of the United States as a legal person, and shall have the capacity to acquire and dispose of real and personal property, and to institute and be party to legal proceedings. The Director of the International Fund is recognized as the legal representative of the International Fund. The Director shall be deemed to have appointed irrevocably the Secretary of State as the International Fund's agent for the service of process in any legal proceedings involving the International Fund within the United States. The International Fund and its assets shall be exempt from all direct taxation in the United States.

ACTION IN U.S. COURTS

SEC. 304. (a) In any action brought in a court in the United States against the owner of a ship or its guarantor under the Civil Liability Convention, the plaintiff or defendant, as the case may be, shall serve a copy of the complaint and any subsequent pleading therein upon the International Fund at the same time the complaint or other pleading is served upon the opposing parties.

(b) The International Fund may intervene as a party as a matter of right in any action brought in a court in the United States against the owner of a ship or its guarantor under the Civil Liability Convention.

CONTRIBUTION TO INTERNATIONAL FUND

SEC. 305. (a) The amount of any contribution to the International Fund which is required to be made under article 10 of the Fund Convention by any person with respect to oil received in any port, terminal installation, or other installation located in the United States shall be paid to the International Fund from the Oil Spill Compensation Fund, established under this Act.

(b) The President may, by regulation, require persons who are required to make contributions with respect to oil received in any port, terminal, installation, or other installations in the United States under article 10 of the Fund Convention to provide all information relating to that oil as may be necessary to carry out subsection (a) of this section and articles 10, 12, 13, 14, and 15 of the Fund Conventions.

RECOGNITION OF FOREIGN JUDGMENTS

SEC. 306. Any final judgment of a court of any country which is a party to the Civil Liability Convention or to the Fund Convention in an action for compensation under either convention shall be recognized by any court of the United States having jurisdiction under this Act, when that judgment has become enforceable in that country and is no longer subject to ordinary form of review, except where—

(1) the judgment was obtained by fraud, or

(2) the defendant was not given reasonable notice and a fair opportunity to present its case.

FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITY

SEC. 307. (a) The owner of each ship which is documented under the laws of the United States which is subject to the Civil Liability Convention shall establish and maintain, in accordance with regulations promulgated by the President, evidence of financial responsibility as required in Article VII of the Civil Liability Convention.

(b) The owner of each ship (other than a ship to which subsection (a) applies or a ship which is a public vessel), which is subject to the Civil Liability Convention and which enters or leaves a port or terminal in the United States or uses an outer continental shelf facility or deepwater port facility, shall establish and maintain, in accordance with regulations promulgated by the President, evidence of financial responsibility as required in article VII of the Civil Liability Convention. Any ship which has on board a valid certificate issued in accordance with article VII of the Civil Liability Convention shall be considered as having met the requirements of this subsection. Any ship carrying only oil as cargo, fuel, or residue, which has on board a valid certificate issued in accordance with article VII of the Civil Liability Convention shall be considered as having met the requirements of section 104 of this Act.

(c) The President is authorized to issue any certificate of financial responsibility which the United States may issue under the Civil Liability Convention.

(d) The Secretary of the Treasury shall withhold or revoke the clearance required by section 4197 of the Revised Statutes of the United States of any ship which does not have a certificate demonstrating compliance with this section.

(e) The Secretary of the department in which the Coast Guard is operating may (1) deny entry to any facility or to any port or place in the United States, or (2) detain at the facility or port or place in the United States, any ship subject to this section which, upon request, does not produce the certificate demonstrating compliance with this section or regulations issued hereunder.

(f) Any person who, after notice and an opportunity for a hearing, is found to have violated this section, any regulation issued thereunder, or any denial or detention order issued under subsection (e) of this section shall be liable to the United States for a civil penalty, not to exceed $25,000 per day of violation. The amount of the civil penalty shall be assessed by the President in accordance with the procedures set forth in section 104(f) of this Act.

(g) The United States waives all defenses based on its status as a sovereign State with respect to any controversy arising under the Civil Liability Convention or the Fund Convention relating to any ship owned by the United States and used for commercial purposes.

SENATOR MITCHELL OIL SPILL LEGISLATION—SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS—"OIL POLLUTION LIABILITY AND COMPENSATION ACT OF 1986"

Sec. 101: Definitions

Defines a number of terms for the purposes of this Act, and cross references a number of definitions in the Clean Water Act.

Sec. 102: Liability

Vessel owners or operators are liable for removal costs and economic and natural resource damages. Such damages include injury or destruction of, or loss of real or personal property or natural resources; any loss of use, including loss of subsistence use, of any natural resources; any loss of income or profits or impairment of earning capacity; and any direct or indirect loss of tax, royalty, rental, or net profits share revenue for not more than one year. The liability standard is that set forth in section 311 of the Clean Water Act.

The available defenses include acts of God, acts of war, or acts or omissions of third parties with whom the owner or operator does not have a contractual relationship. Owners or operators of tankers are liable for damages and removal costs for discharges for not more than $420 per gross ton or $10 million, whichever is greater. Other vessels are liable for $300 per gross ton or $500,000, whichever is greater. Inland barges are treated as tankers when carrying oil in bulk as cargo. Lessees or permittees of outer continental shelf facilities are liable for all cleanup costs plus $75 million. Other facility owners or operators are liable for $100 million. Such limits on liability do not apply where the discharge was the result of willful misconduct or gross negligence within the privity of the owner or operator, or where the owner or operator refuses to cooperate with removal upon request of a responsible official.

The President is authorized to establish lower limits on liability for classes of facilities, based on size, storage capacity, oil throughput, proximity to sensitive areas, types of oil handled, history of discharges, and other factors. All limits are to be adjusted for inflation not less often than every three years.

The President or authorized representative of a State or foreign government are authorized trustees for natural resources.

Sec. 103: Uses of the Fund

The Fund shall be used to pay for all removal costs; payment of any claims for removal costs or damages:

In excess of the amount for which the owner or operator is liable under section 102 of this Act,

Where the source of the discharge of the oil is not known or cannot be identified,

In any case where the claim has not been satisfied by the owner or operator under subsection (c),

In excess of the combined compensation available under the International Funds,

From foreign offshore units affecting U.S. claimants,

To States under the direct draw authority or pursuant to other agreements between States and the Federal government (including reimbursement to States where States have delegated authority),

For assessing and restoring natural resources,

For costs of the program, enforcement, and prevention under section 311(j) of the Clean Water Act.

There is a $500 million per incident limit. States are authorized to have direct access to the Fund for a minimum of $250,000. States may enter into agreements with the Federal government to supplement the direct access authority. Subsection (e) provides for subrogation of claims of the Federal government. The statute of limitations for claims is 6 years after the date of completion of all removal action or 3 years from the date of discovery of the loss and its connection with the release in question for claims for damages.

Sec. 104: Financial Responsibility

This section authorizes the President to require financial responsibility for vessels and off-shore facilities. Direct action against guarantors is also authorized.

Sec. 105: Litigation, Jurisdiction, and Venue

Judicial review for regulations and actions under this Act is provided. Subsection (c) provides that State courts of competent jurisdiction have authority to hear cases under State law, this Act, or Title III. The Statute of Limitations for judicial actions is 3 years from the date of discovery of the loss and its connection with the release for damages or 3 years from completion of the removal action.

Sec. 106: State Laws and Programs

Nothing in this Act preempts any State from imposing any additional liability or requirements with respect to the discharge of oil within such State. Similarly, nothing affects the rights of States to establish or continue in effect a fund for payment of costs or damages arising from oil pollution.

States are authorized to enforce the financial responsibility requirements of this Act. The President shall consult with the affected State or States on the appropriate removal action to be taken. Removal with respect to any discharge or incident shall be considered completed when so determined by the President and the Governor or Governors of the affected State or States.

The 1851 Limitation on Liability Act shall not affect the authority or the United States or any State, or political subdivision thereof, to impose additional liability of additional requirements, or to impose, or to determine the amount of, any fine or penalty for any violation of law.

TITLE II: CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

Conforming amendments are made to the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Authorization Act, the Clean Water Act, the Intervention on the High Seas Act, the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act, and the Deepwater Port Act.

TITLE III: IMPLEMENTATION OF THE INTERNATIONAL PROTOCOLS

The Protocols are implemented to the extent that the President determines they are consistent with sections 102, 103, and 106 of this Act.●

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I rise today to join Senators MITCHELL and STAFFORD in introducing legislation to address the serious threats posed to coastal States by oil spills.

The need for this legislation is clear. Like many pollution problems, oil spills do not respect State boundaries. Last September, a spill of 435,000 gallons of oil in the Delaware River damaged the shores of New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Delaware. The spill, one of the largest ever on the Delaware, killed thousands of birds and other wildlife, and left a lasting mark on the shoreline following a weeklong cleanup. During the 7-month period following this spill, Coast Guard statistics show that other major mechanical failures on 45 vessels caused groundings, collisions with piers, and leaking storage tanks.

Following the spill last September, another tanker hit a pier and spilled 189,000 gallons of crude oil into the Delaware. Such spills seem to be part of an unacceptable trend toward ships with poorly trained crews or badly maintained equipment. And such spills are a national problem. In the last few years alone we have had major spills affecting such other States as California, Texas, Louisiana, and Oregon.

Clearly we need a Federal oil spill bill; a Federal mechanism for oil spill cleanup and compensation to aid States that are vulnerable to this pervasive problem.

The bill before us today will address this problem. It establishes a comprehensive Federal oil spill system that covers all potential sources of oil spill. The bill establishes both a Federal liability scheme for oil pollution damages and a fund to pay damages when compensation from polluters is not available, or when damages exceed liability limits. The bill provides for compensation of natural resource damages, an ability of States to gain a "direct draw" into the Federal fund for purposes of immediate oil spill response, and stacking of the international and Federal funds to increase total coverage.

Importantly, the bill achieves these objectives without preempting State oil spill programs. It has been my position for some time that any oil spill legislation not undermine positive State efforts, such as New Jersey's to deal with oil spills. This bill clearly states that it does not preempt State laws or funds.

The importance of such a nonpreemption provision is underscored by the Supreme Court's decision in Exxon versus Hunt, which followed 6 years of litigation. That decision concluded that some ambiguous language in the current Superfund statute actually preempted New Jersey's taxing authority for the State spill fund.

The spill fund contested in that litigation is the same fund in New Jersey, which covers oil spills. Just as I expressed my opposition to such preemption by amending the Senate Superfund bill to strike the preemptive language, an amendment adopted by the conference, I support this legislation's clear statement of nonpreemption.

The legislation provides a Federal solution to a serious national problem, and does so without compromising the important efforts States are making. It is an important step forward in protecting and cleaning up the environment from the effects of oil spills.

By Mr. DODD (for himself, Mr. CHILES, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. BYRD, Mr. CRANSTON, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. SASSER, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. NUNN, Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. MOYNIHAN, and Mr. ROCKEFELLER):

S. 2800. A bill to require the Secretary of Health and Human Resources to make grants to public and nonprofit private entities for drug abuse and alcohol abuse prevention, treatment, and rehabilitation model projects for high risk youth; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

DRUG ABUSE AND ALCOHOL ABUSE PREVENTION, TREATMENT, AND REHABILITATION MODEL PROJECTS FOR HIGH RISK YOUTH ACT OF 1986

● Mr. DODD. Mr. President, the resolution I am introducing today is also part of the Comprehensive Narcotics Control Act of 1986. I am pleased to have Mr. CHILES, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. BYRD, Mr. CRANSTON, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. SASSER, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. NUNN, Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. MOYNIHAN, and Mr. ROCKEFELLER join me in introducing this measure providing for community based model programs to prevent and treat drug abuse among high-risk youth.

We know that drug and alcohol abuse crosses all economic, racial, age, ethnic, and religious lines. Nevertheless, a certain segment of our young people—we can call them "high-risk" youth—are in much greater danger of drug and alcohol abuse than other children. If you talk to child protection workers who deal with the children who have been victimized by physical or sexual abuse; or to the directors of shelters harboring runaway adolescents; or to staff of the boys and girls clubs and other groups working with unemployed school dropouts, or to those who work with pregnant teens and teenage parents; they will all tell you that the chances that the young people they work with will end up abusing drugs or alcohol go way off the charts.

As a result, any package would be incomplete without a special program targeting drug and alcohol prevention and treatment services for high-risk young people. In the case of these children, drug abuse does not occur in a vacuum. And unless we get at some of the underlying causes of such abuse, we will fail to make a big dent in the battle to combat the drug epidemic now confronting us. We will also fail to deter some of the serious crimes committed by adolescents in association with drugs unless we target some treatment and rehabilitation services to curb their substance abuse.

The Carnegie Corp. of New York is to be commended for recently establishing a council on adolescence, focusing on high-risk youth. As the Carnegie Council has so aptly stated, during adolescence a significant number of youth abuse drugs and alcohol; are the victims of physical, sexual or psychological abuse; drop out of school; become pregnant; are economically disadvantaged; commit violent or delinquent acts; experience mental health problems; attempt suicide; or are killed or disabled by injuries. The measure I am introducing today is an attempt to explore the connections between these problems and provide concrete help in the form of community-based prevention and treatment programs for high-risk youth.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support this legislation. I ask unanimous consent that the text of the "Drug Abuse and Alcohol Abuse Prevention, Treatment, and Rehabilitation Model Projects for High-Risk Youth Act of 1986" be printed in the RECORD in its entirety.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2800

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Drug Abuse and Alcohol Abuse Prevention, Treatment, and Rehabilitation Model Projects for High Risk Youth Act of 1986".

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) drug abuse and alcohol abuse pose significant threats to the healthy development of our Nation's youth;

(2) some young people are at a great risk of becoming drug abusers or alcohol abusers due to a variety of social, health, and economic factors;

(3) during adolescence, a significant number of youth—

(A) abuse drugs and alcohol;

(B) are victims of physical, sexual, or psychological abuse;

(C) drop out of school;

(D) become pregnant;

(E) are economically disadvantaged;

(F) commit violent or delinquent acts;

(G) experience mental health problems;

(H) attempt suicide; or

(I) are killed or disabled by injuries;

(4) community based model programs are needed to prevent drug abuse and alcohol abuse among high risk youths, including after-school care programs, child abuse prevention programs, and programs designed to prevent students from dropping out of school, becoming adolescent parents, and remaining unemployed; and

(5) community based model treatment programs which address the causes of drug abuse and alcohol abuse among high risk youths can reduce and prevent such abuse.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 3. For purposes of this Act—

(1) the term "high risk youth" means and individual who has not attained the age of 21 years, who is at high risk of becoming, or who has become, a drug abuser or an alcohol abuser, and who—

(A) is a victim of physical, sexual, or psychological abuse;

(B) has dropped out of school;

(C) has become pregnant;

(D) is economically disadvantaged;

(E) has committed a violent or delinquent act;

(F) has experienced mental health problems;

(G) has attempted suicide; or

(H) is disabled by intentional injuries;

(2) the term "secretary" means the Secretary of Health and Human Services; and

(3) the term "State" means each of the several States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

GRANTS FOR PREVENTION PROJECTS

SEC. 4. (a) The Secretary shall make grants to public and nonprofit private entities for projects to demonstrate effective models of preventing drug abuse and alcohol abuse among high risk youths. In making grants under this section, the Secretary shall give priority to applications for projects directed at latchkey children, children at risk of abuse or neglect, preschool children eligible for services under the Head Start Act, children at risk of dropping out of school, children at risk of becoming adolescent parents, and children who do not attend school and who are at risk of being unemployed.

(b) To carry out his section, there are authorized to be appropriated $25,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1987, 1988, 1989, 1990, and 1991.

GRANTS FOR TREATMENT AND REHABILITATION PROJECTS

SEC 5. (a) The Secretary shall make grants to public and nonprofit private entities for projects to demonstrate effective models of treatment and rehabilitation of high risk youth who are drug abusers or alcohol abusers. In making grants under this section, the Secretary shall give priority to projects which address the relationship between drug abuse or alcohol abuse and physical abuse, sexual child abuse, emotional child abuse, dropping out of school, unemployment, delinquency, pregnancy, violence, suicide, or mental health problems.

(a) To carry out this section, there are authorized to be appropriated $25,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1987, 1988, 1989, 1990, and 1991.

APPLICATION PROCEDURES

SEC. 6. (a) In order to receive a grant for a project under section 4 or 5 for a fiscal year, a public or nonprofit private entity shall submit an application to the Governor of the State in which the project will be conducted. Such application shall be in such form, shall contain such information, and shall be submitted at such time as the Secretary may by regulation prescribe.

(b) The Governor of each State shall review each application received under subsection (a) for a fiscal year and shall submit to the Secretary, by a date prescribed by the Secretary for such fiscal year, the recommendations of the Governor concerning the approval or disapproval of each such application and a ranking recommended by the Governor of the priority for approval of such applications. In making recommendations under the preceding sentence, the Governor of a State shall consider the priorities and requirements for grants established by sections 4(a), 5(a), and 7.

(c) In making grants under this Act, the Secretary shall consult with the Director of the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism and the Director of the National Institute on Drugs, and shall consider the recommendations made by State Governors under subsection (b).

PRIORITIES AND REQUIREMENTS FOR GRANTS

SEC. 7. (a) In making grants under sections 4 and 5, the Secretary shall give priority to applications from community based organizations for projects to develop innovative multidisciplinary models for the prevention (in the case of applications under section 4) or for the treatment and rehabilitation (in the case of applications under section 5) of drug abuse or alcohol abuse by high risk youths.

(b) in making grants under sections 4 and 5, the Secretary shall give priority to applications for projects to demonstrate effective models which may be replicated and which are for the prevention (in the case of applications under section 4) or for the treatment and rehabilitation (in the case of applications under section 5) of drug abuse or alcohol abuse by high risk youths.

(c) The Secretary shall make grants under sections 4 and 5 in all regions of the United States.

(d) In making grants under sections 4 and 5, the Secretary shall give consideration to the specific needs of urban and rural areas for the prevention, treatment, and rehabilitation of drug abuse and alcohol abuse by high risk youths.

EVALUATION

SEC. 8. The Director of the National Institute on Drug Abuse shall evaluate projects conducted with grants under this Act.●

OIL POLLUTION LIABILITY AND COMPENSATION ACT

MITCHELL AMENDMENT NO. 2778

(Ordered referred to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.)

Mr. MITCHELL (for himself, Mr. STAFFORD, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. DURENBERGER, and Mr. HUMPHREY) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them to the bill (S. 2799) to consolidate and improve Federal laws providing compensation and establishing liability for oil spills; as follows:

S. 2799, the Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act of 1986, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

TITLE IV—OIL SPILL COMPENSATION FUND

REVENUE SOURCES

SEC. 401. (a) Subsections (a) and (b) of section 4611 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to environmental tax on petroleum) are each amended by striking out "0.79 cent" and inserting in lieu thereof "at the rate specified in subsection (c)".

(b) Section 4611 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended by redesignating subsections (c) and (d) as subsections (d) and (e) respectively, and by inserting after subsection (b) the following new subsection:

"(c) RATE OF TAX.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The rate of the tax imposed by this section is the sum of—

"(A) the Hazardous Substance Superfund financing rate, and

"(B) the Oil Spill Compensation Fund financing rate.

"(2) RATES.—For purposes of paragraph (1)—

"(A) the Hazardous Substance Superfund financing rate is [ ] cents a barrel, and

"(B) the Oil Spill Compensation Fund financing rate is 1.3 cents a barrel."

"(c) Section 4612 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to definitions and special rules) is amended by redesignating subsection (c) as subsection (d) and inserting after subsection (b) the following subsection:

"(c) CREDIT AGAINST PORTION OF TAX ATTRIBUTABLE TO OIL SPILL RATE.—Any taxpayer who has paid fees to the Deepwater Port Liability Fund or the Offshore Oil Pollution Compensation Fund shall be entitled to a credit against the portion of the tax imposed by section 4611 which is attributable to the Oil Spill Compensation Fund financing rate. The amount of the credit for any period shall be equal to the total amount paid by the taxpayer to either or both of those funds less the total of all credits allowed under this subsection for all prior periods. The amount of the credit for any period shall not exceed the portion of the tax imposed under section 4611 for that period, which is attributable to the Oil Spill Compensation Fund financing rate."

(d) Subsection (e) of section 4611 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to application of taxes), as redesignated by subsection (b) of this section, is amended to read as follows:

"(e) APPLICATION OF TAXES.—

"(1) SUPERFUND RATE.—The Hazardous Substance Superfund financing rate under subsection (c) shall apply after [ ] and before [ ].

"(2) OIL SPILL RATE.—The Oil Spill Compensation Fund financing rate under subsection (c) shall apply after [ ] and before the date, as determined by the Secretary of Treasury, upon which the assets of the Oil Spill Compensation Fund, less any outstanding obligations of that Fund, are equal to or greater than $350 million.

CREATION OF FUND

SEC. 402. (a) Subchapter A of chapter 98 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to the establishment of trust funds) is amended by adding after section 9506 the following new section:

"SEC. 9507. OIL SPILL COMPENSATION FUND.

"(a) CREATION OF TRUST FUND.—There is established in the Treasury of the United States a trust fund to be known as 'the Oil Spill Compensation Fund', consisting of such amounts as may be appropriated or credited to that trust fund as provided in this section or section 9602(b).

"(b) TRANSFER TO TRUST FUND.—There are hereby appropriated to the Oil Spill Compensation Fund amounts equivalent to—

"(1) taxes received in the Treasury under section 4611 (relating to environmental tax on petroleum) to the extent attributable to the Oil Spill Compensation Fund financing rate under section 4611(c),

"(2) amounts recovered, collected, or received under the Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act of 1986,

"(3) amounts remaining on the date of the enactment of this section in the Deepwater Port Liability Fund, established under section 18(f) of the Deepwater Port Act of 1974,

"(4) amounts remaining on the date of the enactment of this section in the Offshore Oil Pollution Compensation Fund, established under title III of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act Amendments of 1978, and

"(5) amounts credited to the Oil Spill Compensation Fund pursuant to section 311(s) of the Clean Water Act.

"(c) EXPENDITURES.—

"(1) EXPENDITURE PURPOSES.—Amounts in the Oil Spill Compensation Fund shall be available only for the purposes of making expenditures which are described and authorized in section 103(a) of the Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act of 1986, as in effect on the effective date of this section.

"(2) MINIMUM BALANCE.—Except in the case of payments described in paragraphs (1), (4)(A), (7), (9), and (10) of section 103(a) of the Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act of 1986, a payment may be made from the Oil Spill Compensation Fund only if the amount in the Oil Spill Compensation Fund after that payment will not be less than $30,000,000.

"(d) AUTHORITY TO BORROW.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Oil Spill Compensation Fund, as repayable advances, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of the Oil Spill Compensation Fund.

"(2) LIMITATION ON AMOUNT OUTSTANDING.—The maximum amount of repayable advances to the Oil Spill Compensation Fund which is outstanding at any one time shall not exceed $500,000,000.

"(3) REPAYMENT OF ADVANCES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Advances made pursuant to this subsection shall be repaid, and interest on those advances shall be paid, to the general fund of the Treasury when the President determines that monies are available for those purposes in the Oil Spill Compensation Fund.

"(B) RATE OF INTEREST.—Interest on advances made pursuant to this subsection (i) shall be at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury (as of the close of the calendar month preceding the month in which the advance is made) to be equal to the current average market yield of outstanding marketable obligations of the United States with remaining periods at maturity comparable to the anticipated period during which the advance will be outstanding, and (ii) shall be compounded annually.

"(e) LIABILITY OF THE UNITED STATES LIMITED TO AMOUNT IN OIL SPILL COMPENSATION FUND.—

"(1) GENERAL RULE.—Any claim filed against the Oil Spill Compensation Fund may be paid only out of the Oil Spill Compensation Fund.

"(2) COORDINATION WITH OTHER PROVISIONS.—Nothing in the Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act of 1986 (or in any amendment made by that Act) shall authorize the payment by the United States Government of any amount with respect to any claim filed against the Oil Spill Compensation Fund out of any source other than the Oil Spill Compensation Fund.

"(f) ORDER IN WHICH UNPAID CLAIMS ARE TO BE PAID.—If at any time the Oil Spill Compensation Fund has insufficient funds (or is unable by reason of subsection (c)(2)) to pay all of the claims out of the Oil Spill Compensation Fund at that time, the unpaid claims shall, to the extent permitted under subsection (c)(2), be paid in full in the order in which they were finally determined.".

(b) The table of contents for subchapter A of chapter 98 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended by adding after the item relating to section 9506 the following new item:

"Sec. 9507. Oil Spill Compensation Fund".

(c) The amendments made by this section shall take effect upon enactment of this Act.

NOTICES OF HEARINGS

SUBCOMMITTEE ON OVERSIGHT OF GOVERNMENT MANAGEMENT

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, I would like to announce that the Subcommittee on Oversight of Government Management will hold a hearing on S. 2756, the Computer Matching and Privacy Protection Act of 1986, on September 16, at 9:30 a.m., in room 342 of the Dirksen Senate Office Building.

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE, NUTRITION, AND FORESTRY

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I wish to announce that the Subcommittee on Foreign Agricultural Policy, of the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry, will hold the last in a series of three hearings entitled "Overview of U.S. Food Aid Programs, and World Hunger."

The hearing, to be chaired by Subcommittee Chairman RUDY BOSCHWITZ, will focus on how food aid may be used to promote economic growth in recipient countries and how such aid may be used to develop markets for U.S. farmers.

The hearing will take place at 9:30 a.m. on Tuesday, September 16, 1986, in 332 Russell Senate Office Building.

If further information is needed, please contact Darryl Nirenberg, at 224-2035.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON EMPLOYMENT AND PRODUCTIVITY

Mr. QUAYLE. Mr. President, I would like to announce that the Subcommittee on Employment and Productivity will hold a public hearing on September 25 to examine issues relating to trade between the United States and Japan in automotive parts and accessories. The hearing will be held at 9:30 a.m. in room 430 of the Dirksen Senate Office Building.

In holding this hearing, on "Trade in Automotive Parts and Accessories between the United States and Japan: Implications for U.S. Employment," I intend to highlight the serious inequity that exists in the sale of original equipment and secondary market auto parts for use in the production and service of Japanese-made automobiles in both Japan and the United States. Currently, United States parts manufacturers provide less than 1 percent of the original and aftermarket parts for use in the Japanese market, and no more than 40 percent of any Japanese-made vehicle produced in the United States.

During the hearing, the subcommittee will receive testimony from Under Secretary of Commerce Bruce Smart on the United States-Japan market-oriented, sector specific [MOSS] talks on auto parts, from two auto parts trade associations, and from several United States auto parts manufacturers. The hearing will examine several issues of importance to workers and consumers in my State of Indiana and in other States, including the effect of the dramatic growth of Japanese parts suppliers locating in the United States and the relationship between Japanese automobile assembly companies and their traditional suppliers.

Witnesses have been agreed upon, but those wishing to submit written testimony may do so before October 2. For questions about the September 25 Employment and Productivity Subcommittee hearing, please contact Sonya Wolsey-Paige of the subcommittee staff at 224-6715.

AUTHORITY FOR COMMITTEES TO MEET

COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENTAL AFFAIRS

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Governmental Affairs be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Tuesday, September 9, to hold a hearing to consider the nomination of John Agresto, to be Archivist of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

CENTENNIAL OF THE BERNE CONVENTION

● Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, today marks an important anniversary for the principle of copyright. One hundred years ago today, the International Union for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works was signed. This premier international copyright agreement is better known as the Berne Convention.

The Berne Convention has been the chief means of promoting improved copyright standards worldwide. Today, 78 nations are Berne members. Signatories include developed and developing countries; market and nonmarket economies; nations in the East and West. Berne's contributions in the past are well documented, and its importance to the future readily apparent.

The question of whether our country should join the Berne Convention is an old one. The circumstances of today's world, and the importance of copyright to our national prosperity, infuse that question with a new urgency. We need innovative solutions as we seek to maintain the rights of authors, combat piracy, and meet the challenges posed by new technologies. The Berne Union, with the century of international copyright experience it embodies, is a resource that we ignore at our peril.

In this Congress, the Subcommittee on Patents, Copyright and Trademarks held two hearings on U.S. adherence to the Berne Convention. These hearings revealed a developing consensus among government, the private sector and academia that joining Berne would be to our advantage. As a result, I will be introducing the necessary implementing legislation later this month.

Today Ralph Oman, the Register of Copyrights and Assistant Librarian of Congress, will earn the distinction of being the first occupant of that post to address the World Intellectual Property Organization, which administers the Berne Convention. His remarks speak eloquently to the importance of the Berne Convention and the need for our adherence to it. On this centennial anniversary of the Berne Convention, I ask that his remarks be printed in the RECORD.

The remarks follow:

REMARKS OF HON. RALPH OMAN, BEFORE WIPO GOVERNING BODIES MEETING, GENEVA, SWITZERLAND

Mr. Chairman: Never before has the Register of Copyrights of the United States sat on our national delegation to these Governing Bodies, and my presence here is occasioned by two facts. First, I want to join in honoring the achievements of our predecessors—the visionary authors and artists who founded the Berne Convention. Although our absence from the Berne Union, has at times, been keenly felt, in many ways we have come under the influence of the Berne Convention's principles in our law. Local preoccupations have all been used to rationalize my country's different treatment of her artists, authors and composers. But as we came to realize the proper role of authors' rights in the development of national culture and industry and as a simple matter of justice to intellectual labor, we have steadily moved closer and closer to the central ideas contained in the Berne Convention. So the United States, too, can celebrate with the members of the Union their century of achievement.

The second reason I am here is to give an account of our consideration toward adherence to the Berne Convention. This movement is stronger now than at any time in our lifetimes. The transmittal of the Convention by President Reagan to the Senate for its advice and consent shows the seriousness of purpose of the Administration. The hearings conducted over the past year in Senator Charles Mathias' Subcommittee on Patents, Copyright and Trademarks have called forth the strongest expressions of support from authors, copyright proprietors, composers and the music industry generally; from academics, distinguished civil servants and important segments of the bar. Old opponents have become warm supporters. The sole question remaining is the adoption of appropriate legislation amending the 1976 Copyright Act to bring our law into compliance with the requirements of the 1971 Paris Act of the Convention. Let me briefly explain to you the status of these efforts.

We have finished the brief, intense, public debate over the utility and justice of adherence to Berne. We are now in the midst of an intense, legislative debate over implementing legislation. Our task is not as hard as it would have been a decade ago. The 1976 Copyright Act in many respects resolved important incompatibilities with the Convention; formalities such as the manufacturing clause have lapsed or remain in such diluted form that their further elimination can be, if even necessary, reasonably considered.

Late this spring the Copyright Office prepared a discussion paper outlining options for the Congress to consider in revising our law for Berne adherence purposes. This paper has evoked sufficient response so that the staff of the Senate copyright subcommittee will be able to draft a bill for introduction before the Senate adjourns next month. This legislation will be short but still too technical to discuss at this meeting. It will deal with the few remaining incompatibilities of our Copyright Act with the Paris Act, those that Dr. Bogsch pointed out in his testimony last year before the Senate. These include, of course, formalities most centrally, creation aspects of public performance rights in musical works, and legal solutions for the issues of retroactivity and moral rights.

Mr. Chairman, this legislation would permit our adherence to the Convention upon terms appropriate to our society without distorting our clear obligations under the treaty.

I know the Chairman of our delegation would much rather have brought our instrument of accession. Instead, I offer this small bit of news to hearten all who seek, with us, to extend the universality of this extraordinary Union which we celebrate today, and which we—and many other countries—may soon have the honor of joining.

Thank you.●

SO GOD MADE A FARMER

● Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, recently my good friend and constituent, Grace Matz of Watertown, SD, called to my attention a brief essay attributed to Paula Entelt, "So God Made a Farmer."

It is a unique testimony to a way of life that is precious to rural America—a way of life which must be preserved. I would like to share in with my colleagues.

The essay follows:

SO, GOD MADE A FARMER

(By Paula Entelt)

Surveying the world He had made, God looked down one day and said, "I need somebody down there to be a caretaker of my kingdom."

So God made a farmer.

"I need somebody who will sit up all night with a newborn colt, watch it die and say, "Maybe we'll get an even better one next year."

So God made a farmer.

"I need somebody who can eat dirt, smell manure, listen for thundercaps, taste bugs in his teeth and still feel good all over."

So God made a farmer.

"I need somebody who can get up before dawn, milk cows, work in the field all day, milk cows again, eat supper and then go into town and stay 'til 2 a.m. at a school board meeting."

So God made a farmer.

"I need somebody with arms strong enough to wrestle a big calf to give him shots but a heart gentle enough to cry when his first grandchild is born."

So God made a farmer.

"I need somebody who can call hogs, cuss at ornery, cantankerous old machinery, bark orders to the hired man and then come home and whisper to his wife that she's the same pretty girl he married 15 years ago."

So God made a farmer.

"I need somebody who can wait patiently for his afternoon lunch until his wife is done feeding all the ladies at her cosmetics party, and then tell them all to come back soon."

So God made a farmer.

"I need somebody who waits all year to harvest a crop, but will stop in mid-field and run to help when he sees smoke coming up from the neighbour's place."

So God made a farmer.

"I need somebody who will smile, then laugh and then cry when his son says he wants to spend the rest of his life doing just what Dad does."

So God made a farmer.●

PROFESSIONAL LIABILITY INSURANCE

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, several months ago, I had the opportunity to meet with the leadership of Spectrum Emergency Care, Inc., a contract management corporation which provides emergency department physician staffing for approximately 355 hospitals and clinics around the country.

This particular corporation has been active in emergency medical care for a decade and a half now and is gravely concerned about the adverse impact that the issues surrounding professional liability insurance are having on the overall availability and quality of health care being provided in our Nation.

Mr. President, I request that a statement developed for me by the Spectrum Emergency Care, Inc., on professional liability be printed in the RECORD.

The statement follows:

MEDICAL MALPRACTICE LIABILITY INSURANCE FOR EMERGENCY PHYSICIANS: NEED FOR REFORM

(By Spectrum Emergency Care, Inc.)

During the fifteen years that Spectrum Emergency Care has operated as a contract management corporation in the field of emergency medicine, we have seen many great advances in emergency care, including the growth of emergency medicine as a specialty. We have also seen develop a set of growing major problems: increasing numbers of lawsuits filed and costs per claim, soaring malpractice liability insurance costs, and the lack of adequate insurance available to physicians. These have combined to change deleteriously the practice of emergency care, have unnecessarily increased the cost to patients, and have discouraged physicians from practicing.

Spectrum Emergency Care, Inc., is a St. Louis-based company that provides physicians staffing and management services for over 350 hospital emergency departments across the country. Spectrum has been in operation since 1971 and has offices in San Diego, Boston, Dallas, Chicago, Colorado Springs, Memphis, Tampa, Duluth, Silver Spring, and Columbus, Ohio. Spectrum became a subsidiary of ARA Services, Inc., in 1979. ARA Services is an international, diversified service management company headquartered in Philadelphia which provides basic services for industry, institutions, and consumers, including food and refreshments, health care, child care, uniform rental, maintenance, distribution of publications, and transportation.

We believe there is a liability crisis in all of health care, but over the last three years the impact upon the field of emergency medicine has been particularly severe. Costs per patient visit have skyrocketed, often going from $1 per visit for occurrence insurance to in excess of $6 per visit for claims made insurance (the latter form traditionally being a less expensive and less satisfactory form of malpractice liability insurance). Availability has also become a serious problem, with very few insurance companies remaining in the market. In fact, in some states, such as Illinois and Colorado, there is really only one source from which to purchase insurance.

Joe Gatewood, M.D., F.A.C.E.P., Spectrum's Medical Director, is particularly concerned that the amount of awards for noneconomic damages are not only escalating uncontrollably, but often bear no relation to the injuries involved. Rather, they often have more to do with who has the "deep pocket" and with an attempt to use the tort system to cure social problems. He agrees with President Reagan's concern that the laws have become "twisted and abused" to produce "outcomes that impede our economic life."

We strongly urge the Congress to pass federal tort reform legislation modeled along the lines of the AMA proposal. We are concerned that if tort reform is not successful, the insurance market will dramatically worsen, resulting in fewer physicians willing to practice emergency care and with those remaining forced to practice an increasingly expensive, defensive art.

Tort reform is particularly needed to convince the major reinsurance market in London to continue writing catastrophic coverage policies in the United States. Over the last 18 months, our discussions with London underwriters and brokers have convinced us of their concerns, as have the reactions they have taken: changing to a claims made form of insurance for almost all of their policies and increasing costs at an occurrence based equivalent of approximately 100% annually. They are concerned about the "lottery" atmosphere which has crept into the American tort system and jury awards. We believe that without changes in the law and attitudes in this country, the major London underwriters, Lloyds and Weavers, will gradually withdraw from the U.S. market.

The tort reform legislation we support would include:

1. Elimination of "joint and several" liability: Misuse of this principle of law has possibly been the single largest source of injustice in this country's system of tort law. We applaud the results of the California referendum, in which voters (by the astronomical ratio of 62 to 38 percent) put limits on the "deep pockets" theory. The impact of Proposition 51 of California will be to lessen the ability of plaintiffs to collect outrageous damages from one defendant who has a very low level of liability but adequate insurance simply because another defendant in the same suit has no insurance to pay for the high level of negligence of which he is found guilty. This often results in the twisted outcome President Reagan has noted.

2. Caps on noneconomic damages: Kirk Johnson of the AMA is correct when he says this will substantially decrease the cost of professional liability insurance. This is supported by Patricia Danzon, Ph.D., of the Wharton School, who believes that malpractice claims could be reduced by as much as 20-25% with damage caps.

3. Better defined boundaries for compensation for economic damages: These should be tied to factors such as a person's age, life expectancy, severity of injury, and a realistic assessment of loss of earnings. Also, damages should be discounted for collateral sources of payment.

4. Discourage frivolous lawsuits and limit fees earned by lawyers on a contingency basis: We believe that the current system of contingency fees had helped fuel the "lottery mentality" and has resulted in suits which should never have been filed. Not only has this helped clog the legal system, but has dramatically increased defense costs. In our company alone, cost of defending claims has tripled from 1979 to 1983 in spite of the fact that 62 percent of our claims are closed with no indemnity payment.

In summary, we are pleased to note that already lawmakers in 32 states have enacted bills in an effort to lessen this crisis. However, local judicial interpretation of these laws may override the expressed will of the people and their elected legislators. Therefore, federal legislation is required to speed tort reform and to ensure consistency among states. Solving this crisis in short order is essential because its impact worsens daily.

To those, such as the Association of Trial Lawyers, who say there is no medical malpractice crisis in America, we suggest they:

Ask the emergency department physician in Cook County who will pay $22,012 for a first year's claims made premium (and the tail, to cover future years' exposure, will be an additional $31,180). This physician averages approximately $90,000 in gross income.

Ask the expectant mother in New York who finds that her trusted obstetrician no longer delivers babies because he cannot get insurance.

Ask the emergency department physician who now must report on hospital staff applications the one, two, or more settlements made on his behalf, based on cases in which there was no negligence but in which the insurance companies were forced to settle to avoid the cost of expensive legal defense.

Ask the patient who no longer finds his family physician (or the emergency department physician) as trusting and sympathetic because his doctor is forced to view each patient as a potential lawsuit.

We strongly urge this Congress to pass a much needed tort reform bill, resulting in a health care system which operates more fairly, more efficiently, and more humanely for everyone.●

AID TO CONTRAS

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, someone handed me a copy of an editorial from the Bloomington Pantagraph criticizing our aid to the Contras.

The Bloomington Pantagraph is a reasonably conservative publication that more frequently endorses Republicans than Democrats. They are a highly regarded voice in that region of Illinois, and what they have to say about the Contras makes great good sense.

The editorial calls our policy a mistake, and that is exactly what it is.

I urge my colleagues to read the editorial from the Bloomington Pantagraph, and I ask that it be inserted in the RECORD.

The editorial follows:

AID TO CONTRAS WORSENS SITUATION

The United States is not at war with Nicaragua. It has not severed diplomatic relations.

Soon, however, it will be sending military aid to Contra rebels fighting against the Nicaraguan government.

After intensive lobbying by President Reagan, the House voted 221-209 to send $70 million in military aid and $30 million in non-lethal aid to the Contras. The Republican-controlled Senate has approved a similar measure.

Such action in support of "a virtually unprecedented . . . proxy war," as described by Rep. Thomas Foley, D-Wash., is a mistake.

Previous aid has been put to questionable use. Its primary effect has been to stifle diplomatic actions and encourage a more active Soviet role.

Resuming military aid will worsen the situation.

This would be the first time the United States has openly given military aid to the Contras. Secret aid funneled through the CIA caused embarrassment when it was revealed that the money was used to mine Nicaraguan waters and to produce and distribute a guerrilla handbook that seemed to condone political assassinations.

Switching from secret military aid to open "non-lethal" aid has not ended U.S. problems.

The General Accounting Office, an independent investigative arm of Congress, reported that millions of dollars of the "non-lethal" aid wound up going to off-shore banks, the Honduran military or obscure individuals and corporations in the United States.

There have also been allegations of drug-trafficking, gun-running and corruption within the Contras. The charges were considered sufficiently serious for the Senate Foreign Relations Committee to launch a preliminary investigation—the same day the House was voting to send more aid to the subjects of the investigation.

Meanwhile, the World Court is expected to rule today that U.S. aid to the Contras is a violation of international law. The Reagan administration previously announced it would not be bound by the World Court's ruling.

Including $300 million as economic development assistance for four Central American countries may have made the Contra aid package more palatable to moderates who switched their "no" votes.

However, it does not change the fact that the United States is financing a rebellion against a recognized government that has at least tacit support of its people.●

CALIFORNIA'S UNITARY TAX REFORM

● Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, during the Senate's recess the State of California took a giant step in the direction of an enlightened goal: reform of the unitary tax system. On September 5, Governor Deukmejian signed new legislation to allow multinational corporations to elect the arm's length approach rather than the worldwide unitary method, of calculating their tax base in the State. By enacting this measure, California has recognized the inequity of the worldwide unitary method and taken the first step toward dismantling it. The State deserves commendation for this bold move.

Under the unitary approach, a State takes into account the entire revenues of a corporation in all parts of the world, and then applies a formula to determine the corporation's tax liability in the State. The arm's length method, favored by our Federal Government and by all other industrial countries of the world, treats foreign affiliates and subsidiaries as separate business entities and taxes income earned abroad only when it is repatriated, allowing a credit for taxes already paid in the source country.

I have been advocating unitary tax reform throughout my career in Congress. The extra-territorial taxation involved in the unitary method has impeded both foreign and domestic business investment in the States that have practiced it and has caused painful tensions in our trade relations with Great Britain and other countries that refrain from using this method. The solution I have championed over the years is Federal legislation to prohibit State use of the unitary tax. Late last year, the administration finally became persuaded of the importance of resolving the issue and its version of the legislation, S. 1974, was introduced in December by Senator WILSON.

California's action has for the most part superseded the Federal legislative effort. Three States continue to practice the unitary tax, but I hope they will follow California's example in the months ahead.

The new California law does not accomplish everything aimed for in my earlier bills and in the administration's measure. In the first place, the California statute does not take effect until January 1, 1988. That leaves considerable time for backsliding, a danger that Federal legislation would help to curb. In addition, the California bill imposes a special fee on corporations electing to be taxed under the arm's length approach, to go into a general economic development fund for the State. Also, the tax base for companies that conduct 80 percent or more of their business abroad will still be calculated on the combined basis of all the worldwide revenues, not only those generated in or repatriated into California.

But these shortcomings do not weigh so heavily in the balance as the monumental step forward that California has taken with its progressive new law. Its enactment closes a chapter in the unitary tax debate, at least for the next few years, and I am happy that we have at last been able to achieve some movement in this area. From the viewpoint of U.S. jobs, investment, and the free flow of international commerce, I am convinced that the results will be significant, positive, and visible.●

WORLD SCOFFLAW

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, some weeks ago, the Los Angeles Times ran an editorial titled "World Scofflaw."

It calls into question our defiance of international law and political common sense in our activities in Nicaragua.

It is a well-written, to-the-point editorial that I urge my colleagues to read, and I ask that it be inserted in the RECORD at this point:

The editorial follows:

WORLD SCOFFLAW

The veto by the United States of the U.N. Security Council's resolution on the Nicaraguan crisis is yet another act of defiance by a Reagan Administration bent on pursuing a military course in Central America.

No other nation on the 15-member council voted in support of the United States. Great Britain, France and Thailand abstained on the final vote. Eleven nations supported the resolution. Their support of the resolution was appropriate, for the resolution did nothing more than uphold the rule of law.

At the heart of the matter was the finding of the International Court of Justice on June 27 that U.S. efforts to overthrow the Sandinista government of Nicaragua are in violation of the U.N. Charter. So they are. The court called on the United States to terminate the arming and financing of the contras, who are fighting the government of Nicaragua. The court decision, based on existing international agreements, was persuasive in its arguments and presented a carefully determined effort to encourage the settlement of disputes by peaceful means.

But the United States, catching wind of the impending action, had rejected the jurisdiction of the court just days before Nicaragua, on April 9, 1984, brought the charges. And the United States had rejected the authority of the court again when the verdict was reached 26 months later. Deliberately the United States placed itself outside the law, and eroded the fragile structure of international law that the court represents, to protect its policy of military intervention in Central America.

That same defiance has now been directed within the most important peace-enforcement body of the United Nations, the Security Council, against a resolution supporting the court decision. The resolution bore no condemnation of the United States. It did not even mention the United States by name. In reaffirming the authority of the court, the Security Council called on all nations to comply with the decision of the court and to refrain from any political, economic or military action that might impede the peace efforts of the Contadora nations—the four Latin nations seeking a peaceful settlement for Central America.

Vernon A. Walters, the chief U.S. representative to the world organization, said that the United States had vetoed the resolution because it "could not, and would not, contribute to the achievement of a peaceful and just settlement of the situation in Central America." That is absurd and ludicrous. The resolution embraced the absolute essentials of a peaceful and just settlement as that settlement is understood by virtually every nation in the hemisphere save one—the United States.

The isolation of the United States, as it pursues stubbornly its policy to destroy the Sandinistas, grows apace. The determination of President Reagan to shoot his way to peace in Nicaragua has diverted world attention from the abuses of the Nicaraguan government itself as it breaches the promises of democracy and diversity that it had made for its revolution. And it is Washington that comes increasingly to be seen as the outlaw.●

HONORING DR. WILLIAM N. HUNTER, A LEGIS FELLOW

● Mr. QUAYLE. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to Dr. William N. Hunter and a highly successful program, operated by the Office of Personnel Management. The LEGIS Fellow Program, in existence since 1980, provided me with the opportunity of selecting an employee for the executive branch.

Since January 1985, I have had the good fortune of having Dr. William N. Hunter from the Office of Management and Budget be assigned to my personal staff.

Dr. Hunter has had more than 25 years experience in acquisition with the private sector, the Pentagon and OMB. Prior to coming to my personal staff he was appointed by OMB to establish the "OFPP Chair" at the Defense Systems Management College. He also served as the Director of the Federal Acquisition Institute and Assistant Administrator with the Office of Federal Procurement Policy.

Dr. Hunter was able to provide valuable insight in providing me with timely and relevant suggestions supporting the many procurement issues faced by my subcommittee. In return, we enabled him to obtain a broad spectrum of practical experience in the day-to-day operation of an office of a U.S. Senator and the Senate Armed Services Committee.

Dr. Hunter was instrumental in support of my efforts on procurement legislation, including the "Defense Procurement Improvement Act of 1985" and "Defense Acquisition Reorganization and Improvements Act of 1986."

Dr. Hunter was constantly willing to learn and take on new problems and applied his considerable abilities toward their resolution. I have no doubt that this arrangement was very profitable to him as it has been to me.

I would like to express my sincere appreciation, and the appreciation of my entire staff to Dr. Hunter. He has made a significant contribution to my office and performed at an outstanding level. In short, Bill will be sorely missed when he departs my family. I am certain that we will continue to keep in touch with him.●

DENIAL OF LEGAL RIGHTS TO VETERANS

● Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, one of the most fundamental principles of American democracy is the right of all citizens to have equal access to our judicial system. The greatness of our system of Government lies in the fact that all citizens are equal under law—that no citizen, no matter how powerful, is above the law, and no citizen, no matter what his station in life, is denied the equal protection of the law. The guarantee of access to our judicial system, and the protection of our legal rights provided by the Constitution, is what makes our system of Government unique, and differentiates us from totalitarian societies such as the Soviet Union.

Unfortunately, there is still one group of Americans for whom the guarantee of access to our legal system does not apply. I am referring to our Nation's veterans.

Veterans, unlike all other Americans, are denied by law the fundamental right of access to the American judicial system. Illegal aliens, prisoners, the mentally ill and disabled, and Social Security pensioners all enjoy the right to appeal to the Federal courts. Veterans do not.

The fact that veterans are denied this basic right is an archaic, anachronistic result left over from a paternalistic era in American history. These limitations, along with a limit of $10 on attorneys' fees in veterans' cases, were imposed during the Civil War era, for the purpose of protecting veterans from legal exploitation. Such protections are no longer needed, or indeed desired, by the vast majority of veterans today.

The U.S. Senate has five times voted unanimously in favor of judicial review for veterans. Last year, the Senate again passed S. 367, which I cosponsored, to provide judicial review for veterans. But the House of Representatives has consistently failed to act.

Last month, the House Veterans Affairs Committee defeated, by a vote of 20 to 12, a bill to provide judicial review of claims for veterans benefits. The bill was opposed by the Veterans' Administration, which threatened to withdraw free office space, telephone service, and other benefits for veterans' organizations which supported this legislation.

It is ironic that this administration, which claims to revere our military men and women, in fact has waged an all-out effort to deny basic legal rights to America's veterans. Unfortunately, they have been all too successful. Under the Carter administration, the VA came out in favor of judicial review for veterans. But under the Reagan administration, the VA has changed its tune, and has issued threats to veterans' organizations which do not support its position on this issue.

It is still possible, however, for the House of Representatives to act on this legislation in this Congress. Under the House rules, it is possible that H.R. 585, the bill to provide judicial review for veterans, could be brought to the floor for a vote of the full House before the end of this session. And the fact is that 231 Members of the House, 13 more than a majority, are already cosponsors of this legislation. Clearly, the will of the majority is being thwarted by a minority who do not want to see full legal rights granted to America's veterans.

Mr. President, I hope that the House of Representatives will choose to act, and to pass this legislation before the end of this year. Judicial review for veterans is supported by the Vietnam Veterans of America, a federally chartered veterans' organization, and by most other major veterans' groups.

It is indeed ironic that, in the past year, the Veterans' Administration sued over 40,000 veterans in Federal court to recover money which it claimed that the veterans owed to the VA. But when a veteran believes that he or she is owed money because the VA has made an error in denying a claim for benefits, the current law prohibits the veteran from filing a lawsuit. In other words, justice is a one-way street for veterans. There is one set of rules for the VA, and another for America's veterans. This unfair system must be changed.

Mr. President, for those of us who are veterans, the denial of basic legal rights to all veterans is a continuing outrage. There is a wall in Washington, at the Vietnam Memorial, which contains the names of 58,000 Americans who made the ultimate sacrifice for this country, so that all of us could live in liberty. Surely those fundamental liberties should not be denied to those who have fought to protect them. Veterans are entitled to the same legal rights as all other Americans. The time to provide those rights is now.●

HELPING MEXICO

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, over the August recess I caught up on some of my reading, and it included an editorial from USA Today titled "Let's help Mexico get back on its feet."

The common sense of working much more with Mexico should be so apparent that it should be a major thrust of American foreign policy.

But the reality is that we have only two neighbors on our borders, one which we do not really regard as a foreign country [Canada] and one which we have ignored far too often. Ignoring Mexico is a habit that we have to rid ourselves of.

I urge my colleagues to read the USA Today editorial. It is good, rare, common sense.

I ask that it be inserted in the RECORD here.

The editorial follows:

LET'S HELP MEXICO GET BACK ON ITS FEET

Suppose your neighbor lost his job, faced foreclosure, and talked of suicide. Would you worry about him?

Of course you would.

Suppose a neighboring country faced a similar situation, teetering on the brink of economic collapse.

Suppose it had millions of people living in basest poverty, hordes fleeing its borders, charges of corruption at every level of government, and a $1 billion cocaine trade. Then add demonstrations, political unrest, and charges of election fraud.

Would that worry you? It should. We have a neighbor like that. Mexico.

Mexico's economy is in shambles. It was tottering toward a comeback from 1982's near default on its massive foreign debt—now nearly $100 billion—when it took a one-two punch. The devastating earthquake last fall, which killed thousands and left tens of thousands homeless, will require billions for rebuilding. At the same time, the price plunge has cut its oil revenues in half.

Last week's agreement with the International Monetary Fund, which will bring Mexico as much as $12 billion in new loans, gives the country a breather. Bankers hope the stringent economic house-cleaning required by the IMF will help rejuvenate the economy and allow Mexico to eventually pay back its loans.

Illegal immigrants and drugs—Mexico's two biggest exports to the USA—are souring relations between neighbors. Mexico now supplies most of the marijuana and heroin and one-third of the cocaine consumed in the USA.

In Senate hearings earlier this year, Mexico was criticized for alleged drug-related government corruption and failing to stem the flow of narcotics across the border.

Some people in the USA would like to draw a curtain along the Rio Grande and shut out Mexico's problems. They argue that our loans and assistance just prop up a failed, corrupt system of government. They say we should let Mexico sink or swim on its own.

But we can't turn our backs. Cultural and social ties are too strong. The humanitarian urge that prompts us to give food, medicine, and clothing to Mexico's poor is too strong. And it is clearly in our national interest to help Mexico.

Political instability and a weak economy encourage the illegal immigrants to seek scarce jobs in the USA. The 1,900-mile border, now largely undefended, would be nearly impossible to protect if Mexico became a hostile nation.

Rather than insulting Mexico, we should cooperate to improve the lot of both our nations. Drug eradication programs must be revived and intensified.

U.S. businesses should welcome Mexico's new, relaxed attitude toward foreign investment. We must not try to impose our own system of government, but we should encourage and support healthy change.

Of course we should worry about Mexico. We must provide assistance, without interference. It's as simple as this: Helping Mexico helps the USA.●

EDUCATION: THE EARLY YEARS AND THE NATION'S FUTURE

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, last week Ernest Boyer, president of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, spoke at the National Press Club on excellence in education. Long a leading spokesman on education, author of "High School," a probing examination of secondary education in the United States, and author of a new work on early education, Dr. Boyer has contributed to shaping Federal education policy with his thoughtful analyses of both what is right and what is wrong in American education.

Dr. Boyer's research on elementary education finds a variety of problems which must be addressed including the changing demographics of grade school children, the learning of language skills, the effectiveness of early education and school structures which reflect work and family patterns.

At this time I would like to include Dr. Boyer's September 4 speech in the RECORD. Elementary and secondary education policies will be an early issue in the next Congress, and I commend Dr. Boyer's remarks to my colleagues as critical commentary which precedes our debate on the Federal role in education.

The material follows:

THE EARLY YEARS AND THE NATION'S FUTURE

(Ernest L. Boyer, President, The Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching)

INTRODUCTION

Forty months ago the National Commission on Excellence in Education declared, "our Nation is at risk," and said that, "If an unfriendly foreign power had attempted to impose on America the mediocre educational performance that exists today, we might well have viewed it as an act of war. As it stands, we have allowed this to happen to ourselves."

Since that hyperbole hit the headlines education has been a high priority in the nation.

Thirty governors have named school reform commissions.

Legislators have enacted programs.

The corporate sector has adopted schools.

College presidents have been outspoken for public education.

Graduation requirements have been raised.

Teacher salaries have increased at twice the inflation rate. And there has been a dramatic turnaround in the public attitude toward teachers.

For decades, teachers in this country have been portrayed as ill-prepared, self-serving people who care less about students than about salary increments and summers off.

Today, they are increasingly being viewed as part of the solution, not the problem.

In sum, we've had, during the past three years, more constructive action on behalf of public education than during any comparable period in recent memory.

And I propose two cheers for the current push for school renewal.

I

Still, I see a dark lining to the silver cloud.

While "advantaged" schools are getting better, many others—especially those in our major cities—remain deeply troubled institutions.

These schools differ not just in degree, but in kind. The social pathologies that surround them are so great and the problems so complex that current efforts are just not adequate to the task.

Twenty years ago, there was a crusade in this nation to improve urban education. The centerpiece of the plan was desegregation. Elaborate "remedies" were drawn and agonizing battles were fought out in the courts—and sometimes in the streets.

Today, the crusade of the 1960s, which is but a faded memory, has been followed—not with new ideas—but with disillusionment and neglect.

In some city high schools, at least four out of ten students are absent on any given day. How are we to achieve excellence when students aren't even in the building?

Almost half of the Mexican-American and Puerto Rican students who enroll in public schools drop out before they are awarded a diploma.

In Philadelphia the drop out rate is 38 percent. And in Boston it's 43 percent.

In Chicago, in 1984, over half of the students failed to graduate, and of those that did only a third were reading at the 12th grade level.

Last year—in the Cleveland Public Schools—there was not a single semi-finalist in the National Merit Scholarship competition. Boston and Detroit each had only one high school with semi-finalists.

What's disturbing is that the school reform movement is not confronting adequately the core of our educational dilemma. And there is still an enormous gap between our rhetoric and results.

The breakup of the home, the community wrenched by crime, lack of money, loss of good teachers—all of these threaten to overwhelm our most troubled schools.

To require a failing student in an urban ghetto to take another unit in math or foreign language without a better climate or better teaching is like raising a hurdle without giving more coaching to someone who has already stumbled.

And all this is occurring at the very time the problems are expanding.

By the year 2000, America will be a nation in which one of every three pupils in the public schools will be non-white. What is coming toward the education system is a group of children who will be poorer, more ethnically and linguistically diverse, children who will have more handicaps that surely will affect their schooling.

Unless we deepen our commitment, the crisis in urban education will increase. An aging white population will reduce support, and the gap will widen between the haves and the have nots in education.

What we could be left with in our major cities is a kind of educational Third World. And it is here, in these schools, that the battle of American education will be won or lost. If urban schools do not become a national priority, the promise of excellence will remain sadly unfulfilled.

II

There are no panaceas. If there were obvious answers to the problems of urban education—we would have found them long ago. What is clear, however, is that our efforts must begin before failure has become a way of life.

Without taking educators off the hook, our first obligation is to recognize that poverty and schooling are connected. And that we see as poor performance may be connected to events that precede schooling—and even birth itself.

The growing fetus requires a diet rich in protein, vitamins, and minerals. And yet most poor mothers do not have adequate nutrition.

Further, the human brain grows most rapidly during the first year of life. And yet today 40 percent of all the people in America classified as poor—are children. And malnutrition affects almost a half-million children in this nation.

The implications for schooling are dramatic.

A major report by the Physicians Task Force on Hunger in America revealed that the child, deprived of adequate nutrition during critical years of brain growth, risks "cognitive deficits," to quote the panel—which obviously restrict learning later on.

And in a recent Louisiana study, poor children who had been provided food supplements during pregnancy and the first year of life were compared to those who had been nutritionally denied. The children, who had received good nutrition early, showed higher IQ, higher attention span, and higher grades in school.

And yet, it's ironic that at the very time when better schools are being pushed, funds for the federal child nutrition programs are restricted.

I realize that to talk about babies and poor health may appear to be far off the school reform agenda. And yet the evidence is overwhelming. Our educational problems cannot be divorced from the problems of the poor. All mothers and young children must have good nutrition if good schooling is our goal.

III

Coming directly to troubled schools, I'm also convinced that we must give top priority to early education—and especially to language—a commitment strongly reaffirmed by Secretary Bennett just this week.

I propose that every school district—certainly those with a high drop out rate—organize what might be called The Basic School—a unit that would include kindergarten through grade three.

The Basic School would focus on the certrality of language. And in our society, English must come first. The sending and receiving of messages makes us truly human. Language is imprinted in the genes and by the time the child marches off to school, he or she is already linguistically empowered with a vocabulary of several thousand words. Any child who can speak and listen, I believe, can also be taught to read and write.

The goal of the Basic School would be to build on this foundation; to assure that every child reads with understanding, writes with clarity and effectively speaks and listens. If children do not gain a fundamental graps of language in the early years it is almost impossible for them fully to compensate for the failure later on. It's like playing tennis with a broken racquet.

Further, in these early years, rigid grade levels should be blurred. It's foolish for teachers to fret over the curious question of whether to "fail" a student in grades one or two. Some children develop more slowly than others, and whether a student is in first grade or second grade is inconsequential. What is important is not the age, but the linquistic progress of each child.

The goal is to make sure that students will be reading and writing with confidence and handling math accurately before they move to the next level—where the focus will be on the core of common learning. This is the only way to assure that students in the upper grades will academically succeed.

In the Basic School, class size is also crucial. Today primary school teachers sometimes have 30 or more students in a single class. Even under the best of conditions these teachers can give only a minute or two to each child in any given hour. This is simply not enough.

The State of Indiana recently compared with achievements of first graders in large classes with those in classes with less than 20 students. The evidence was overwhelming. Small classes bring more academic gains.

This nation should move quickly to implement the recent Governors' Report, Time for Results, that recommended one teacher for every 15 students in kindergarten through grade three. The Governors got it right.

Smaller classes mean more money.

And yet, recent polls show that Americans are willing to spend more for education if they feel the investment will pay off. Further, it's my faith that a good Basic School would reduce the high cost of special and remedial education in high school—which is expanding at an alarming rate.

The recent High Scope study of the long term impact of quality early education concluded that for every dollar invested, the payoff is more than four to one.

I'm talking about reordering the educational priorities of the nation by giving more support to early education and more backing to primary school teachers.

Indeed, I'm convinced that if we would give as much status to first grade teachers as we give to full professors, that one act alone would go a long way to bring excellence to the nation's schools.

But teachers cannot do the job alone. Schools need outstanding principals. And parents also must be partners in the process.

Children are not likely to become good readers if no one reads at home, if "bookshelves" are filled only with knickknacks and plastic flowers, and if TV watching is the preoccupation of parents every night.

To reaffirm this partnership I'd like to see parents turn off the TV—even pass up Dynasty and Dallas now and then—to read aloud to children, and rediscover the beauty of the written and the spoken word.

IV

This leads to priority number three.

To strengthen education we also must adjust the school schedule to the changing family and work patterns in the nation—a challenge that goes far beyond the crisis of the poor.

Grandfather Boyer was born in 1872. He died one month short of his 100th year, and during the century of his life the world became a wholly different place—from his horse drawn plow to John Glenn's liftoff into space.

Grandpa had grown up on a southwest Ohio farm. One day when he was 96 I asked him about the schooling he had had. Grandpa said he went to school three years—long enough to learn to read and write. He walked six miles to school, and went only in the winter when he was not needed on the farm.

When today's school calendar was set almost a century ago—with nine months of study and three months off—over 90 percent of all school age children were, like Grandpa Boyer, living on a farm with mother and father, working hard, and staying home in the summer to "tend the crops." The school calendar mirrored the work and family patterns of the nation.

Today, the world has turned upside down. Less than 3 percent of today's families are on farms. In most households both parents work—away from home;

Further, nearly one in five families is now headed by a woman. And two-thirds of these mothers work. About half the children now in first grade will have lived in one-parent homes by the time they graduate from high school.

I'm convinced that, once again, the school schedule and the family schedule should be merged. It's essential that school arrangements match the realities of both family life and work patterns, as they did 100 years ago.

Already, because of working parents, over 40 percent of the nation's children are in prekindergarten programs.

And I predict that increasingly schools will be called upon to provide prekindergarten sessions to serve young children who need care outside the home.

In fact, the Governors, in their new report, urged states to provide quality early education for "at risk" four year olds and "where possible" for three year olds as well. This recommendation touches the realities of life.

Another issue. Today, one out of ten children now comes home to an empty house or apartment. And as this "latch key" problem grows, schools will operate on a longer day, offering after-hour programs such as special studies in science, computers, music or athletics, for example.

Looking down the road, I'm also convinced that the school calendar will be lengthened. A three month summer recess made sense when there were crops to be tended and extra hands were needed in the fields. But it's an anachronism now, especially at a time when most parents work outside the home, year round.

We need an optional summer term for children, not for babysitting but for learning. Their needs cannot be magically turned off when school is out.

Here, then, is the pattern I see emerging—pre-kindergarten programs, afterhour workshops, and summer sessions—all to fit the realities of family life and the needs of the children.

The danger is that affluent families will find their own services—summer camps, private lessons, youth clubs, for example—while poor children are allowed to drift.

In 1983, 53 percent of upper and middle income families had their preschool children in special programs, only 29 percent of at-risk three and four year olds were so enrolled.

If this gap is to be narrowed, new enrichment programs—which I wish to call an Extended School—should be optionally available to serve all students, not just the privileged few.

Families who can pay for these extra services should pay for them—at fees that will make the activities self-supporting.

For those who cannot afford the cost, I urge a state-financed plan that would give poor families a certificate of eligibility—linked to the Federal Chapter 1 guidelines—to be redeemed at the preschool, afterschool, or summer program of their choice.

There is, in fact, precedent for this procedure. Today several states—New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and South Carolina—have state financed enrichment programs where the eligibility is based on Chapter 1. While the focus of these projects is on remediation, the procedure could be applied for the Extended School as well.

Further, by financing this enrichment program—through parent payment—and through the state, local budgets would be relieved and more equity in public school financing would be assured. For the core school program, however, current funding patterns would be kept in place.

Incidentally, a school district could contract for these enrichment seminars—with a college or a youth club or local artists or computer centers, for example.

Further, there would be an advantage, I believe, in having children from all social and economic backgrounds—and perhaps from both public and private schools—participating together in the new enrichment programs.

v

This brings me to priority number four. In the days ahead it is urgently important that we learn more about how children learn.

Today, with all the talk about education, we know far too little about learning and we are far too ignorant about how to measure the results. We have good schools and good teachers, but my optimism about the future of schooling is based on the conviction that, in the days ahead, we will become much more knowledgeable about learning and about how the potential of all children can be assessed.

The most exciting work, in my opinion, is being done by Howard Gardner at Harvard. Gardner in his provocative and insightful book, "Frames of Mind," reminds us that children have not only verbal intelligence—they also have logical intelligence, mathematical intelligence, spatial intelligence, bodily and personal intelligence. And I suspect intuitive and social intelligence as well.

Gardner suggests that we should find ways to understand the many dimensions of intelligence in our children.

And yet today's paper and pencil tests focus on a limited range of verbal skills and on computation—on a merger sampling of selected words and numbers. We need yardsticks to assure that our 140 billion dollar annual investment in public schools is paying off. And today tests are useful in providing a barometer of how well schools are doing.

But our tests do not come close enough to individual children or provide sufficient information to the teachers. And by reducing students to a number we may tell children they are failures before they've discovered what they might become.

If our goal is to educate all children we must broaden our definition of potential and honor the full range of talent that contributes to our civility and perhaps to our survival, too.

James Agee, wrote on one occasion that with every child who is born, under no matter what circumstances, the potentiality of the human race is born again.

Here then is my conclusion. To achieve excellence in education we must Confront the problems of poor children.

Give priority to early education.

Affirm the centrality of language.

Provide enrichment programs that reflect the changing work and family patterns of the nation.

And learn more about how children learn.

As we move toward the year 2000, the most urgent issue we confront is this: Will America continue to believe in education for all children or will it sort out schooling between the winners and the losers—and in so doing become a separated and more divided nation?●

VIOLENCE ON TELEVISION

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, we in the Senate will shortly be faced with the question of how to handle an increasing problem in our culture, and that is violence on television. We do not want censorship. We do want to protect the civil liberties of our country, but we cannot remain powerless in the face of overwhelming evidence that violence on television is causing harm in our society. The Christain Century published an article by Dr. William F. Fore, head of communications for the National Council of Churches of Christ. The article appeared late last year.

Its message on media violence is clear and solid.

I urge my colleagues and their staffs to read this article, and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

MEDIA VIOLENCE: HAZARDOUS TO OUR HEALTH

(William F. Fore)

Of all the people in industrialized nations, Americans are the most prone to violence. Between 1963 and 1973, when the war in Vietnam took 46,212 lives, firearms in America killed 84,644 civilians. In the past 50 years the per capita rape rate in the United States has increased by 700 per cent. During the past 30 years our per capita homicide rate has almost doubled. In 1980 there were eight reported handgun murders in England and 10,012 in the United States (Jervis Anderson, "An Extraordinary People," New Yorker, November 12, 1984], p. 128). And the U.S. Bureau of the Census reported that between 1974 and 1983, the number of aggravated assaults has increased by 6 per cent, forcible rape by 26 per cent, robbery by 2 per cent and child abuse by 48 per cent (Statistical Abstract of the United States 1985, pp. 166, 172, 183).

For years people have wondered whether the amount of violence portrayed on American movie and TV screens has any correlation with the growing violence in our streets and homes. For 20 years, the evidence has been slowly accumulating. Now the verdict is as clear as the evidence that links smoking to cancer: Violence in media is causing violence in the society.

As early as the 1950s Congress held hearings on the effects of television. When Senators expressed concern over television's role in increasing juvenile delinqency and crime, industry representatives immedicately promised to reduce violence (while denying any evidence of harmful effects). Yet during that same period—in the mid-50s to mid-60s—television programming shifted noticeably toward action-adventure formats, and TV violence increased markedly.

As programming became more violent, research became more decisive. The National Commission on the Causes and Prevention of Violence, headed by Milton S. Eisenhower, focused on the relationship between violence and television in 1969 and concluded that "violence on television encourages violent forms of behavior and fosters moral and social values about violence in daily life which are unacceptable in a civilized society."

Noting that advertisers were spending $2 billion each year in the belief that television does influence human behavior, the commission declared "Television entertainment based on violence may be effective merchandizing but it is an appalling way to serve the 'public interest, convenience and necessity.'"

Three years later, U.S. Surgeon General Jesse Steinfeld testified at a Senate hearing that a study, ordered by Congress, had unearthed "sufficient data" to establish a causal relationship between watching television violence and aggressive behavior. "Broadcasters should be put on notice," he said, "that television violence, indeed, does have an adverse effect on certain members of our society" (Broadcasting, March 27, 1972, p. 25).

The broadcasting industry, however, resisted the conclusions of both studies, and research by George Gerbner, dean of the University of Pennsylvania's Annenberg School of Communication, shows that the level of violence on television during the '70s did not change significantly.

The broadcasting industry challenged Gerbner's violence profile. Writing in the Journal of Broadcasting, David M. Blank contended that Gerbner's study defined violence too broadly by including cartoons and slapstick violence and that it counted some single acts of violence as multiple (Summer 1977, pp. 273-79). The Annenberg School countered in the same issue of the journal that comic content (such as cartoons) is a highly effective form of conveying serious lessons, and that when a new person or agent enters a scene, a "single" violent episode becomes "multiple" (pp. 280-86).

Broadcasters continued to insist in the face of such evidence that the research was still inconclusive. Gene Mater, a CBS spokesperson, told a congressional hearing that "our figures, our studies, and lots of other studies [show] that there is no unanimity." Mr. Mater cautioned against making television a scapegoat when seeking solutions to the problem of violence. He argued that "with this single focus we ignore many of the root causes of societal ills," thus neglecting elements other than media that influence our lives: the home, school, church and peer groups.

In a memorandum "Research on Television Violence: The Fact of Dissent," prepared for the hearings, CBS quoted Eli Ribenstein, who had been vice-chairman of the original surgeon general's report, as saying that "opinions are more sharply divided than they were [in 1969]. Paradoxically, the hundreds of studies done in the past decade have apparently served to support diametrically opposing conclusions" (p. 50).

But research continued, and in May 1982 the National Institute for Mental Health released the findings of a ten-year followup on the surgeon general's study, "Television and Behavior," conducted by David Pearl. "After ten more years of research," the report said, "the consensus among most of the research community is that violence on television does lead to aggressive behavior by children and teenagers who watch the programs."

The report noted that "not all children become aggressive, of course," but that "the correlations between violence and aggression are positive," indeed as strong as "any other variable behavior that has been measured." Conversely, the study found that "children can learn to be altruistic, friendly and self-controlled by looking at television programs depicting such behavior patterns."

Earlier this year Pearl released another report in which he maintained that the NIMH report demonstrated that television has four effects on violent behavior: direct imitation of observed violence; "triggering" of violence that otherwise might be inhibit-ed; desensitation to the occurrence of violence; and viewer fearfulness. "Consider the situation if even only one out of a thousand viewing children or youth were effected (there may well be a higher rate)," Dr. Pearl wrote, "Consider also the cumulative effects for viewers who watch such programs thorughout the year. Even if only a small number of antisocial incidents were precipatated in any community, these often may be sufficient to be disruptive and to impair the quality of life for citizens of that community" (p. 6).

After completing the most thorough and most conclusive overview of research on television violence to date, George Comstock—who, only four years earlier, was quoted by the broadcasting industry as saying that the evidence was not yet conclusive—declared that "a very large majority of studies report a postive association between exposure to media violence and aggressiveness" ("Media Influences on Aggression," in A. Goldstein (editor), Prevention and Control of Aggression [Pergamon, 1983]).

Despite these decisive conclusions, the level of violence does not appear to be diminishing. Dean Gerbner's Violence Profile, which has traced television's performance annually since 1966, indicated that in the 1982-83 season, violence on television had not diminished but was approximately at its 17-year average. However, violence in children's weekend programs reach a record high, with a rate of 30.3 violent incidents per hour against a 17-year average of 20. In a paper prepared for the National Council of Churches of Christ, Gerbner said: "For the past 17 years, at least, our children grew up and we all lived with a steady diet of about 16 entertaining acts of violence (2 of them lethal) in prime time alone every night, and probably dozens if not nhundreds more for our children every weekend. We have been immersed in a tide of violent representations that is historically unprecedented and shows no real sign of receding ["Gratuitous Violence and Exploitative Sex: What are the Lessons?," pp. 2-3].

Dr. Gerbner went on to explain television's role in creating a "mean and violent world" in the minds of many viewers, particularly heavy viewers:

Symbolic violence . . . is a show of force and demonstration of power. It is the quickest and most dramatic demonstration of who can get away with what against whom. . . .

Violence as a scenario of social relationships reflects the structure of power in society and tends to cultivate acceptance of that structure. . . . It is clear that women, young and old people, and some minorities rank as the most vulnerable to victimization on television. . . .

Most heavy viewers in every education, age, income, sex, newspaper reading and neighborhood category express a greater sense of insecurity and apprehension than do light viewers. . . . Fearful people are most dependent, more easily manipulated and controlled. . . . They may accept and even welcome repression if it promises to relieve their insecurities. That is the deeper problem of violence-laden television [pp. 5-6].

Violence on television—as well as on cable, in movies and on videocassettes—is lowering our quality of life. Whether or not we personally watch the excessive amounts of TV violence, enough people do see the violence, which, in the end, causes more crime, more abuse, more injuries and more deaths in our society.

Of course, television can—and never should—be "sanitized" to the point that it contains no violence at all. Such a depiction of life would be dishonest in a different way. The problem is gratuitous and excessive violence—an identifiable phenomenon that we created and that, if we wish, we can correct.

Some observers have said that we are faced with pollution of our mental environment that is just as dangerous as pollution of our physical environment. But how does a free society combat mental pollution? The First Amendment guarantees each of us the freedom to speak whatever we wish, since one person's truth is another person's heresy. The media industries hide behind this freedom, to the injury of us all. On the other end of the spectrum lurk those True Believers who, knowing the truth, are anxious to impose it on us by censoring all other perspectives. Somewhere between these two poles there must be a middle way which enables society to curb harmful violence without curbing freedom of speech.

Before we can do anything to confront the problem of violence in the media, I suspect that we must first decide what kind of society we really want. At that point the solution will become more apparent. In the meantime, at least we now know the facts about the effects of violence in the media, and our ignorance can no longer be blissful—or even a valid excuse for inaction. ●

AIR SAFETY

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, the Chicago Sun-Times had a story with the heading: "Air controllers' inexperience hit in O'Hare errors."

The article, written by Tim Padgett and Phillip J. O'Connor, points to the need for more experienced people working on air traffic control.

Some months ago, I dropped in at the Aurora, IL air traffic control center and visited with perhaps 15 or 20 different people. From the person in charge of the center to those who are working as controllers, the overwhelming sentiment was that after careful screening—to make sure people who are either not physically or emotionally able to handle it would be kept out—some of those who were controllers before should be brought back in.

If our number one concern is air safety, that clearly ought to happen.

There is no question that President Reagan did the right thing by firing the air controllers, even though it should have been handed differently. You cannot strike against the Federal Government. We cannot compromise on that.

But that was 4 years ago. A substantial penalty has been invoked, and now the question ought to be air safety.

I ask that the article from the Chicago Sun-Times be inserted in the RECORD, and I urge my colleagues to read it.

The article follows:

AIR CONTROLLERS' INEXPERIENCE HIT IN O'HARE ERRORS

(By Tim Padgett and Phillip J. O'Connor)

Almost half the air traffic controllers responsible for the 15 errors at O'Hare this year—13 of them near mid-air collisions—had less than two years' experience at the airport, according to the Federal Aviation Administration.

The study of errors at O'Hare showed that six of the 14 controllers involved in them had less than 20 months' experience at O'Hare and five of those had been on the job less than a year and a half or were in training.

The O'Hare errors—more than double the number during the first seven months of 1984—has prompted a National Transportation Safety Board investigation. It comes five years after striking controllers nationwide were fired by President Reagan and the FAA began replacing them with trainees.

Meanwhile, the FAA said a major computer failed for an hour Tuesday at the Aurora Air Traffic Control Center, causing the delay of many flights.

The same computer failed for 3 minutes and 40 seconds on Monday, the FAA said. An identical spare computer had previously failed on Sunday for 34 minutes and was being repaired because the regular computer element failed on Monday and Tuesday, the FAA said.

Chicago FAA spokesman Mort Edelstein, discussing the computer failures, said that the Aurora center handled the normal number of landings and takeoffs, but that traffic was "stretched out" so controllers could safely manage it.

Dave Kelley, who heads the NTSB investigation of O'Hare errors, said that controller experience is "one of the significant issues we'll be looking at" before making recommendations to the FAA.

FAA spokesmen said the number of years each of the 14 controllers had worked before coming to O'Hare—and whether they'd had any prior experience—was not available yesterday.

John Galipault, president of the Aviation Safety Institute in Worthington, Ohio, said yesterday he had received calls from "experienced" controllers complaining of controller inexperience and insufficient controller training at O'Hare.

"The reports I get from them tell me there are enough inexperienced controllers to make it difficult to do the job there," Galipault said.

But Edelstein has labeled warnings of inexperience at O'Hare as "absurd."

Though Edelstein said it was possible for a controller just out of the academy to reach full performance level—qualified to fill every post in the tower—at O'Hare within two to three years, Galipault said at least three to four years should be required.

"Two to three years is pushing it at an airport like O'Hare," Galipault said.●

REMARKS BY POLICE OFFICER CICERO B. BOOKER, JR.

● Mr. DODD. Mr. President, several months ago I was honored to be a guest at a dinner of the Connecticut Civil Liberties Union and to say a few words of tribute to U.S. District Court Judge M. Joseph Blumenfeld. At this dinner, citations of merit were also presented to several individuals who, through their words and deeds, have contributed to securing the civil liberties of our citizens, to making justice and equality more than nice words or lofty ideals. I was particularly impressed and moved by the remarks of one of these individuals, Mr. Cicero B. Booker, Jr., a member of the Waterbury Police Department. Mr. Booker eloquently reminds us that our constitutional democracy works only if and when we actively assert and exercise our civil rights. I commend his remarks—and the vital theme underlying them—to my colleagues and ask that they be printed in the RECORD.

The remarks follow:

REMARKS BY CICERO B. BOOKER, JR.—THE CONNECTICUT CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION, AN EVENING OF TRIBUTE

I have the honor to speak on the behalf of my fellow police officers, who could not be here with us tonight.

We would like to, first, say thank you to the Connecticut Civil Liberties Union and the staff attorneys for their devoted efforts, which brought to an end a 40-year-old discriminatory practice in the Waterbury Police Department that limited the training, assignments, and promotional opportunities for black and Hispanic police officers.

I can remember when I became a member of the police department, my father—Cicero B. Booker, Sr.—who was the first black officer in Waterbury, said, "Son, I was able to open the door for black people to become police officers in this city. It is now up to you and the other young black officers to open those doors now closed to you."

I was talking with my son, Cicero B. Booker III, on the need for education when he asked, "Well, Dad, tell me where education has gotten you?" I, with regret, had to tell my son not to "judge your life by mine" because I allowed other people to control my opportunities.

My son's remarks provided me with the great awakening, reminding me of the closed doors my father had spoken about and I had done nothing to open those doors.

In conclusion, my fellow officers and I, as well as others on the police department, have learned: to have a healthy Constitution of the United States one must exercise their rights.●

NAUM AND INNA MEIMAN: THE VIGIL GOES ON

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President: it pains me to say that it has been more than 6 months since I have begun a daily plea for the release of my close friends Professor Naum Meiman and his wife, Inna. They are not just Soviet citizens, but prisoners of the state.

Professor Meiman, a physics scholar trained in the Soviet Union, has not held a meaningful job in his field since his first plea for emigration. Just recently, their phone was removed and they can no longer receive phone calls. Their only request has been to live a free life in Israel. Without reason, they have been rejected several times a year for more than 10 years.

What is most inhumane is that Inna is dying of cancer and is being refused further treatment. Western physicians believe she can be cured, but this treatment is only available to Inna outside the Soviet Union. Time is running out.

I implore the officials of the Soviet Union to allow the Meimans to emigrate to Israel.●

ORDERS FOR WEDNESDAY

RECESS UNTIL 9 A.M.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that once the Senate completes its business today, it stand in recess until 9 a.m. on Wednesday, September 10, 1986.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Hearing none, it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF CERTAIN SENATORS

Mr. DOLE. Following the recognition of the two leaders under the standing order, I ask unanimous consent there be special orders in favor of the following Senators for not to exceed 5 minutes each: Senators HAWKINS, PROXMIRE, WILSON, TRIBLE, LEVIN, BIDEN, CHILES, CRANSTON, DECONCINI, DODD, NUNN, ROCKEFELLER, and BENTSEN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. DOLE. Following the special orders just identified, I ask unanimous consent there be a period for the transaction of routine morning business not to extend beyond 10:30 a.m. with Senators permitted to speak therein for not more than 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Hearing none, it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR CHAFEE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to add Senator CHAFEE as the 14th special order tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objecton, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. DOLE. Following the morning business, the Senate will resume consideration of the pending measure, Labor/HHS appropriations. I understand votes can be expected on that measure and I also hope that we can work out whatever the problem may be with the Interior appropriations bill and complete both of those tomorrow, and then possibly one other appropriations bill, District of Columbia perhaps, and then on Thursday morning we will begin consideration of the Rehnquist nomination.

RECESS UNTIL 9 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, there being no further business to come before the Senate, I move we stand in recess until 9 a.m. on Wednesday, September 10, 1986.

The motion was agreed to; and, at 7:19 p.m., the Senate recessed until Wednesday, September 10, 1986, at 9 a.m.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

NEW SPIRIT OF AGRICULTURAL ACCOUNTABILITY DISPLAYED BY AFRICAN LEADERS

HON. STEVE GUNDERSON
OF WISCONSIN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 9, 1986

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Speaker, several weeks ago, Joan Holmes, global executive director of the Hunger Project, completed a month-long visit to five eastern and southern African nations. Purpose of the trip was to examine the perspective of national and regional leadership of the continent with respect to their commitments and policies toward the well-being of their people.

On August 7, 1986, Ms. Holmes reported on the findings of her trip before the African Affairs Subcommittee of the House Foreign Affairs Committee.

As one who followed and in fact supported the work of the Hunger Project, which has organized more than 4.3 million individuals committed to ending hunger by the year 2000, I am pleased to submit excerpts from Ms. Holmes' testimony for the benefit of my colleagues and the American people.

STATEMENT OF JOAN HOLMES, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, THE HUNGER PROJECT

Several weeks ago, I completed a month-long visit to five eastern and southern African nations. The purpose of this trip was to better come to know Africa from the perspective of the national and regional leadership of the continent, and to ascertain the commitments and policies of Africa's leaders toward the well-being of their people.

I was accompanied by Mr. Wayne Fredericks (formerly U.S. deputy assistant secretary of state for African affairs and currently a consultant in international affairs for the Ford Motor Company). Our itinerary included the nations of Kenya, Zimbabwe, Zambia, Botswana and Mozambique, a group of countries that demonstrate widely differing records of accomplishment with regard to agricultural and other issues bearing upon the eradication of hunger within their borders.

During the course of our four weeks in Africa, we had the opportunity to meet with more than 200 people in all sectors of leadership—including government, business and banking, NGOs, religious institutions, academia, women's organizations and agriculture and farming. In four countries, we also had the opportunity to make field trips to observe first hand the situation in the agricultural sector and to meet with both peasant and commercial farmers.

Were I to make one fundamental observation about the situation I found in the countries visited, it would be that a remarkable and historic "sea change" is taking place among leaders with regard to the resolution of the problems facing their societies. As President Quett Masire of Botswana told us, "We have graduated from the stage of blaming our condition on colonialists to taking positive initiatives on our own behalf. Agriculture needs to be the first priority. This is something that, until recently, had been forgotten."

In each country, I encountered a new spirit of accountability and responsibility concerning agricultural and economic matters, and a willingness by national leadership to make difficult and, at times, politically unpopular decisions in order to correct failed policies or meet new economic and geopolitical realities. It is impossible to tell, at this early date, whether the new policies of Africa's leaders will bring about the agricultural resurgence of the continent that all are agreed is needed. There can be little question, however, of the authenticity of their commitments and their intention in this regard.

Nowhere did we find this to be more true than in Zambia, where, as you know, President Kenneth Kaunda has initiated a sweeping economic austerity program that is designed to stimulate agricultural production and substantially reduce national dependence on copper revenues. While many observers agree that the president's austerity measures will have a positive long-term impact, in the short term the result is a dramatic increase in prices for the urban consumer, particularly the lower and middle classes, which constitute a substantial percentage of Zambian society.

In a working breakfast, President Kaunda summed up the situation in this way: "For years, we subsidized consumption [in urban areas] because we thought it would distribute the copper revenues. One of our errors was that we did not pay food producers enough, and so agricultural production lagged. The difficulty we are now in is changing from a subsidy for consumption to a subsidy for production . . ."

Another theme we encountered wherever we traveled was the sense of African leaders that the way they and their countries are portrayed outside of Africa misrepresents them and their commitments. From their perspective, the information available in the West is skewed toward portraying Africa as a continent of crisis, drought, corruption and absence of leadership. Certainly, the more one travels to the continent, the more clear it is how woefully inaccurate is this picture of Africa, and how absent is the experience of the people of Africa as courageous, determined, committed and exhibiting strong leadership in the face of difficult circumstances.

Mr. Elijah Mwangale, minister of foreign affairs of Kenya, perhaps put it most succinctly when he told us, "The Western media reporting gives the impression that the African crisis is solely the result of African stupidity." Dr. G.T.K. Chiepe, Botswana's minister of foreign affairs, noted that "all the goodwill in the world is not enough if you lack information. There is a lack of appropriate information about Africa in the Western world."

In a similar vein, Dr. Bernard Chidzero, Zimbabwe's internationally regarded minister of finance, commented that "the world community needs to be disabused of the notion that all African countries do not have agriculture as a priority. You can transform the world's relationship to Africa by creating a consciousness that it is not a god-given irreversible situation in Africa. What has succeeded in Zimbabwe can happen elsewhere."

With regard to hunger, what was immediately striking was that the issue of ending hunger generally does not yet appear as a distinction for policy makers, but rather is seen to be something that will be handled as part of the overall process of economic development. Of the government representatives we met, officials of the national health ministries were those most likely to suggest that were a greater focus given to nutritional matters, and were the issue of hunger to be viewed as a distinction among the range of other pressing concerns, then greater national resources could be mobilized in support of the resolution of this problem.

In several of the health ministries, we encountered stories of the difficulties the health professionals face in having other ministries integrate nutrition into their plans and perspectives. As one health official stated, "I don't want our hospitals full of hungry people. I'm trying to make the other ministers understand that hungry people can't carry out development projects. We need to keep a focus on hunger in our national development . . ."

On a country-by-country basis, we found distinctive issues and opportunities facing the leadership of each nation . . .

Dominating every discussion in Kenya was the population question. With the population growth rate the highest in the world (4.2 percent), Kenyan leadership is acutely aware of the importance of family planning. President Moi has included the issue in his personal range of concerns and is speaking out on a difficult subject in Kenya with considerable skill . . .

While we met many remarkable individuals in Kenya, certainly one of the most outstanding was Dr. Thomas Odhiambo, the director of the International Centre of Insect Physiology and Ecology (ICIPE). During our visit, Dr. Odhiambo was chairing the first meeting of the African Academy of Sciences, an organization he founded in December of 1985. Consisting at this time of 45 member scientists from throughout Africa, the AAS, as conceptualized by Dr. Odhiambo, is an opportunity for African scientists to take the initiative to cause a breakthrough in generating solutions to Africa's problems from within Africa. This first meeting of the AAS focused on drought, desertification and food production efforts. Ultimately, what is envisioned is nothing less than a continental opportunity, with no inhibiting national barriers.

Zimbabwe is the agricultural success story of Africa. Since the formation of the majority-ruled state in 1980, the communal farmer (peasant) sector has increased its percentage of production of two of the country's major crops—maize and cotton—from roughly 5 percent of the national total to around 50 percent. Today, agricultural production among Zimbabwe's small farmers is among the highest for all peasant farmers in Africa.

There is a strong sense in Zimbabwe that a powerful and authentic partnership exists between the government and the communal farmers. As one farmer told us, "Rural people here decide their own destiny. We are free to criticize the government and we do. We feel we are in direct communication with the government . . ."

One is overwhelmingly left with the impression of a country on the move, a country with purpose . . .

Zambia finds itself at an historic turning point as it works to redirect its economy and establish the basis for future self-sufficiency. The great challenge facing President Kaunda is to enlist the continued support of the Zambian people for policies that, in the immediate future, will result in considerable personal hardship . . .

As a result of the economic situation, there are growing pressures on the social fabric of the country, pressures that in other countries have resulted in volatile political developments. In Zambia, however, we generally found that people expressed a willingness to sacrifice and continue to support the government's actions. Although people grumble about the economic situation, those who could form the opposition to the government seem, in fact, to desire to empower the government rather than to agitate against it. President Kaunda's personal courage in facing the current economic realities is widely and sincerely praised . . .

Botswana has been as severely hit by drought as any country in the region, yet, as the leadership of Botswana is proud to point out, not a single death during this period is attributed to the drought. Thanks to the government's commitment to prevent drought from leading to a famine situation, as well as the widely acknowledged integrity with which Botswana administers the aid it receives, the country has achieved tremendous success in meeting the emergency needs of its people.

Several people with whom we spoke, both officials in the government and representatives of multilateral and bilateral donor agencies, voiced some concern that foreign assistance programs could become an institutionalized and permanent feature of the culture of Botswana . . .

It is worth noting that this concern for the potential negative impact of foreign aid programs is not confined to Botswana. While a great deal of gratitude is expressed for the international support Africa receives, there also exists a more cautious evaluation of foreign assistance than one generally encounters in the donor nations . . .

Unique among the countries we visited, Mozambique is a country in crisis and emergency. Historically, the Portugese colonial experience left the people of Mozambique much less prepared to assume nationhood than the surrounding countries, which had been governed by the British . . .

Agriculture has particularly suffered in the post-independence era, and Mozambique is listed by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the UN as one of the four worst food deficit countries in Africa. In an effort to meet the food needs of Maputo, a highly organized and successful "Green Zones" movement has been established and is now made up of more than 10,000 members, more than 90 percent of whom are women . . .

Mozambique is a difficult and complex case to assess. Certainly, the national leadership is highly dedicated and committed, and at the most senior levels is widely regarded as extremely competent and honest. Policy reforms of the past several years indicate that, while remaining committed to a socialist vision of an egalitarian society, the leadership is willing to acknowledge and correct mistaken economic policies . . .

During this visit to Africa, several people quoted the words of the late Kwame Nkrumah: "When we get liberation, all else will follow." One minister who did so went on to add, "Unfortunately, it didn't. We have had our political liberation. Now we need leadership in the economic realm. We need good policies in support of agriculture. We need the political will of the farmers."

All would agree that the countries of Africa have only just embarked on the road of building their economic viability upon the foundation of their political liberation. What is encouraging is that, at least in the countries I recently visited, this economic necessity was given central importance in public policy discussions. In several instances, the leadership of these countries has already begun taking the concrete steps necessary to create a self-sufficient future . . .

NEWARK'S MAYOR SHARPE JAMES DISCUSSES THE AMERICAN DREAM

HON. JACK F. KEMP

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 9, 1986

Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, I recently had the opportunity to read the inaugural address made by Mr. Sharpe James, the newly elected mayor of Newark, NJ. Mayor James, a Democrat and former city council member and college professor who happens to be black, speaks eloquently about the American dream, about the need to extend opportunity and hope for the future to all individuals, and about the values and virtues like hard work, honesty, thrift, patriotism, and responsibility that we share as Americans and which for the bedrock of our common culture. I commend Mayor James and his speech to my colleagues in the spirit of bipartisanship.

MAYOR SHARPE JAMES INAUGURAL ADDRESS, JULY 1, 1986

To my loving wife, Mary, who has stood by my side during good and bad times; my three sons, John, who with the grace of God escaped from near death, graduated with honors from high school and will enter college in September, Elliott, a musician, dancer and politican, and Kevin, the quiet one; to my mother who labored to give us a home and stressed the importance of an education; to my brother, Joseph, a graduate of Newark College of Engineering now NJIT and his lovely family; to all of my relatives and friends who gave me inspiration and hope along the highway of life; to the Honorable Members of the Newark Municipal Council and their families, many of whom I have shared the best years of my life with; to Mr. Frank D'Ascensio, our esteemed City Clerk; Reverend Clergy; honored guests; citizens of Newark; my dedicated campaign workers; ladies and gentlemen, good afternoon. It's time for a Sharpe change!

Firstly, I sincerely and humbly wish to thank you for your vote of confidence in selecting me the 37th Mayor of Newark. It is an honor and challenge to lead the largest city in New Jersey and the third oldest city in America.

Secondly, and most importantly, let me personally extend my sincere and heartfelt gratitude and appreciation to a great American, our friend, our former Mayor, the Honorable Kenneth A. Gibson. We thank him for sixteen years of leadership. We wish him every success and happiness in his future endeavors.

Thirdly, let me personally and wholeheartedly congratulate the duly elected Members of the Newark Municipal Council. I pledge my full cooperation in working with you to improve the quality of life for all citizens. Together, we go forward. Together, we can build bridges of opportunities and achievement. Together, we can make Newark a city of hope and prosperity. Together we stand, divided we fall.

I will miss my eighteen years at Essex County College. I will miss its outstanding staff, faculty and administration. And, most of all, I will miss standing in front of a classroom watching students challenging the unknown and experiencing the thrill of discovery. Thank you, Dr. A. Zachary Yamba, President, and to the entire Essex County College Family.

Today, there is a mood of celebration and security in beautiful Symphony Hall, which grows out of our being together. We feel that joy and security in new relationships, new life, new energy and new hope.

My election is testimony to the validity of the American dream. Where else can a poor boy with holes in his sneakers and no suit, living on Howard Street, move from Robert Treat to Miller Street School and on to South Side High; attend college on a work/athletic scholarship, graduate with honors, serve two years in the United States Army in Germany, return to the State of Massachusetts for graduate study, become a Newark school teacher, a community activist, former President of UCC Area Board 9 and President of the Weequahic Community Council, a college professor, a district leader, a ward councilman, twice a delegate to the National Democratic Convention, a councilman at-large and now Mayor? Only in America. Only with the grace of God and only with your trust and support.

My victory in this election is not a personal one. Many citizens of all colors, languages and ages labored in my behalf. We learned that signs do not vote. And, we learned that truth crushed to the ground will rise again. Our victory provides hope for all who share a belief in better tomorrows. A belief that our children, their children and children yet unborn, can live, grow and prosper. A belief that they can shape the American dream. A belief that every child should be able to dream that one day he or she can be president of the United States of America.

No generation can choose the age or circumstances in which it is born, but through leadership it can choose to make the age in which it is born, an age of enlightenment.

Our society generally seems more violent, more drunk, more suicidal and more threatening of one another than generations past. Too many individuals are experiencing an ethical collapse, a spiritual withdrawal, and escaping reality through drugs, alcohol, sex-without-love, making unwanted babies, and turning on each other with violence.

Drugs, especially crack, have reached epidemic proportions among our youth. We must crack down on crack. We must feel the challenge of raising the price and value of life everywhere. What difference does it make if the doors of opportunity swing wide open when you are too drunk or too high to go through?

What difference does it make if you have an old school book or a new book, if you open neither. In our homes and churches we must teach by word and by example, that drugs are morally wrong, physically destructive and will kill you. Will power must replace pill power if we are to face the future and its difficulties head-on and overcome all obstacles. During these hours of crisis. We must reject premature death and reaffirm life. We must turn to each other and not on each other. The Bible says that "without vision the people perish."

There are no quick and easy solutions to the problems before us. Problems of public safety, a need for more housing and jobs for the unemployed; a need to better educate our children and recognize the importance of job training programs; expanded economic development, more cultural and recreational opportunities for the young and old, and the need to recognize the importance of the family, religion, justice and peace. A major part of the solution to these problems rests with a public administration that is thorough, honest, meticulous and responsible. A government that will form a meaningful partnership with the private sector. A government serving the people and not a government serving the people in government.

Government can and must work. It must work for those who have entrusted their faith in us. It must work for the poor and disadvantaged. Government must prove fiscally and programmatically sound for struggling taxpayers. In this administration, we will have the courage to change those governmental functions requiring change and the courage to accept those governmental functions not requiring change. The job of moving Newark forward to take its rightful place among the great cities of this nation will not be achieved overnight, or in one year. Progress may at first be slow,

There will be pain and gains, setbacks and cutbacks, regress and progress. But, I assure you that as Mayor, there will be a change. I call upon every citizen, every block leader, district leader, ward councilman, councilperson at-large, elected official, clergy and business people to join me in a partnership for a new Newark. One that will offer new vision, new hope, and a better way of life for all citizens.

The philosophy of the James administration will be to come to work early and leave late; to demonstrate self-discipline and the disposition to make some sacrifice for the common good. We are dedicated to the principle that one man, one woman can make a difference.

We stand on the shoulders of great men and women whose dreams and struggles have brought us this far. Men and women such as Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., Rosa Parks, John Kennedy, Paul Robeson, Eleanor Roosevelt, Adam Clayton Powell and Harry Truman, who stated, "The buck stops here!" One man, one woman can make a difference.

In this administration we will select men and women to serve in government who are qualified to do their job. They will remain on the job and be promoted based on the quality of their performance. No employee will be required to participate in political activity. City Hall will function as a business, and not as a social or political club. We will encourage proper dress codes, good telephone manners and will insist on sound and courteous relations with the public. Our function is to provide services not excuses. Performance not promises. We will establish a code of ethics to govern the conduct of all key officials in this administration.

We will ask large and small businesses to share in the responsibility of keeping their property free of litter. We will ask the young and old not to use our streets and sidewalks as a waste paper basket. Pride in Newark begins with pride in self.

Pride in throwing grass seeds, and in growing grass. Pride in not littering and not loitering. Pride in taking care of our family . . . our personal family . . . our extended family . . . our community family.

Last week, I presented to the distinguished members of the Newark Municipal Council a plan for reorganization. This plan will save valuable tax dollars, consolidate responsibilities, establish clear lines of communication and improve our delivery of services. A plan for a better administration, a better city.

For too long we have looked for financial help from Washington, D.C. or the Office of the President. For too long we have looked to Trenton for miracles. In this administration we will accept the challenge of doing more for ourselves.

Without one additional federal dollar, we can sweep in front of our homes. Without one additional federal dollar, we can clean our vacant lots. Without one additional federal dollar, we can paint, repair and improve our homes and apartments. Without one additional federal dollar we can declare war against graffiti, and respect the rights and property of others. We can fight drug abuse.

With the possibility of the Gramm-Rudman bill becoming a reality and no "big brother" watching over us in Washington, we must accept the challenge of doing more for ourselves—the challenge of doing more with less.

We in government must never forget from whence we came. When we are right we want to hear from you. When we are wrong we want to hear from you also.

I can hear the words of Lord Chesterfield in Letters to My Son, written in 1853: "The galleries are full of critics. They play no games. They fight no fights. They make no mistakes because they attempt nothing. Down in the arena are the doers. They make mistakes because they attempt many things. The man who makes no mistakes lacks boldness and the spirit of adventure. He is the one who never tries anything. He is the brake on the wheel of progress."

We will make mistakes, because we are doers. We have entered the arena for a Sharpe change.

Both sweat and tears are wet and salty, but progress comes through sweat in ways that it will never come through tears. Tears will gain you sympathy, but sweat will allow you to make progress. We must pursue academic and moral excellence. For, if we stress a moral force and a passion for excellence, we can overcome all odds. We can lift ourselves with our minds and morals.

We need social, economic and political change. But, let the change begin today, and let it begin with you and me! Let us vow together that we will excel . . . We will push for moral, academic, social and political excellence—even against the odds.

If we do, we can win. If we do, we can make a difference! In looking back, I decided to forfeit a council at-large seat to run for the Office of Mayor. I decided to risk what I had based on my belief in a better Newark. For the only way to protect a true democracy is to continue to challenge those in office. For there is always room at the top for those who dream great dreams and have the courage of their convictions.

We won because of you. We won against all odds. We won because of the need for a Sharpe change.

Together we have dreamed great dreams.

Together we must march much to solution.

Together we stand, divided we fall.

I need your help. Without you there can be no me . . . no city . . . no hope. With you as my partner in progress, there will be visible, viable and meaningful change . . . a better city for all citizens!

As I close, I am reminded of the words of the great American poet, Robert Frost, who wrote so eloquently:

"The road is lovely, dark and deep, and I have many promises to keep,
and miles to go before I sleep,
and miles to go before I sleep,"

Thank you and may God bless you all.

TRIBUTE TO ARTURO LOPEZ

HON. PETER W. RODINO, JR.

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 9, 1986

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to Newark's new director of general services, Mr. Arturo Lopez. Mr. Lopez is the city's first Hispanic department head, and his great accomplishment is a testament to his lifetime devotion to hard work and unwavering ambition.

Like many Americans before him, Mr. Lopez came to this country with high hopes, but few practical skills necessary to adapt to life in a foreign land. Despite initial setbacks and frustrations, Mr. Lopez studied English, economics and education at Essex County College and at Rutgers University while working long hours at Newark Seaport. He graduated from Rutgers in 1975.

As general services director, Mr. Lopez will be in charge of public buildings, motor vehicles, and parks throughout the city.

Mr. Lopez has said:

I believe that education is the greatest means of achieving upward mobility. I'm a perfect example of that and I'm very proud of it.

Mr. Speaker, I, too, am proud of Mr. Lopez and his great achievements. The greatest strength or our Nation is its diversity—the many immigrants who have made America their home, and who have generously enriched it with their talents and hard work. Mr. Lopez, his lovely wife, Elisa, and their daughter, Estrella, will carry on this great tradition as they work for their community and the Nation.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to count Mr. Lopez and his family among my constituents, and I commend to you the following article about Mr. Lopez, published in the Newark Star Ledger on August 18, 1986:

THE MAN MOST LIKELY TO SUCCEED * * * DOES

(By Caryl Lucas)

When Arturo Lopez, the city's first Hispanic department head, was growing up in Spain, he was always thought of as most likely to succeed.

His potential was clearly evident, for he was the first resident of a small village to graduate from high school and college.

Today, Lopez is the city's new manager of general services, an appointment which he believes was made possible as a result of the many "strong" values instilled in him as a young boy.

"I come from a family of hard workers—workaholics," said Lopez, 37. "My parents were farmers, like most of the other families in Galencia which is in the northern province of Orsene," said Lopez. "My two brothers and I all worked together with my father, who divided his time as a farmer, baker and businessman.

"As the middle child, I worked less than any of my brothers because of my school responsibilities. But we all chipped in with the chores around the house."

After completing grammar school, Lopez said, "I won a national academic scholarship to a prestigious boarding school 30 miles away from our village. Later, I attended the University of Madrid where I majored in Electrical Technology.

"Because of the lack of jobs, we were directed to short and practical majors which could be applied to a variety of jobs," he explained, noting that it was his parents and grammar school teacher, Don Mannuel, who inspired him to further his academic career.

"Don Mannuel is the reason why I was able to excel in my academics," he reminisced. "He saw something special in me. I learned more from him in our one-classroom grammar school with one headmaster than I ever did.

"Don Mannuel was the greatest teacher I ever had," said Lopez of his mentor. "He is now 86 years old, and I visit him every year."

Shortly after graduating college, Lopez emigrated to the United States with his parents and younger brother. My oldest brother, Benito, and one of my aunts were already in Newark," he explained, describing the transition as one of the "roughest" periods in his life.

"I was 20 years old and couldn't speak a word of English. I was sort of confined to my house and neighborhood, because I couldn't communicate.

"All of my intellectual friends were in Madrid," he added. "I was the only immigrant in our neighborhood with a college degree, but I wasn't able to use my degree or work at my fullest potential because I couldn't speak English."

Lopez's first job was in a repair shop.

"I used to take the train to Morristown at 5 a.m. every morning and work until 8 p.m.," he said. "I was very discouraged. I use to work with solvents that would peel my skin, and I used to dispose of my clothing so my family wouldn't be embarrassed."

From there, he went to work in a chemical factory, which he described as "a tough job, too, working with torches at 1,000-degree temperatures." Although he had been relegated to work beneath his education level and found it discouraging at times, he stressed he "never gave up" his hope of doing better.

"That's because I come from parents who knew what difficult times really were by growing up between World War I and World War II," he said.

"That's why I was able to endure the long hours, plus going back to college when I started working at Westinghouse in Hillside. It was my first encounter with a major corporation. After I was promoted three times, my duties changed and I was assigned to write a report in English.

"But I didn't know how to write," he lamented. "When I went to ask some of the people I use to work with for help, I found out many of them resented the fact that I had been promoted and couldn't speak English.

"One man," he remembered, "said to me, 'How can you be promoted when you're illiterate?' "

Astonished by the remark, Lopez said he made up his mind at that point to go back to school to learn English.

"I enrolled at the American Language at New York University. After I realized I couldn't afford the expensive tuition, I transferred to Essex County College and from there I enrolled at Rutgers-Newark," he noted. "I didn't even know there was a college in Newark at the time."

Yet, he managed to juggle three majors at once while working as a security officer at the Newark seaport.

"Sometimes I would have to ask myself, 'How did you do it?'" he laughed.

"I was majoring in economics, foreign language and education," said Lopez, who speaks Spanish, Portuguese, Italian and Galethian. "It was like burning a candle from two ends—going to school full-time and working nights up to 50 hours a week."

Nevertheless, he was able to endure and survive, graduating from Rutgers in 1975. Soon after, he obtained his teaching certification.

"I guess hard work and dedication to strive for the best has paid off for my brothers and I," he added. "While I was pursuing my goals, so were they. My youngest brother, Carmen, ventured into the restaurant business. He owns Don Pepe's along with my oldest brother, Benito, who went into construction and real estate. Today, they're both very successful businessmen and they work together."

"Having a close family is still important to us all," said Lopez, who sees himself as a family man and perfectionist.

"My wife, Elisa, and daughter, Estrella, are my greatest sources of joy. Although I don't have much time, I enjoy spending what spare time I do have with family. I guess it stems from growing up in a small village of about 100 people. It was like an extension of my family."

Over the years, he has taught at East Side High School and Roberto Clemente School, in addition to working in admissions at Rutgers for the past 10 years.

"Rutgers will always be my second home," Lopez said, noting that he was instrumental in developing the International Foreign Exchange Program into a major division.

"Working in city government is an entirely different environment, but one common denominator is that I'm used to dealing with people," said the general services director. "I'm a people's person and I'm used to helping people no matter what the problem." Living in the Ironbound over the years, an area he describes as Newark's "melting pot," has exposed him to the city's many multi-ethnic groups, he said, noting:

"Newark is a unique city and it's fantastic to live with people from different social and ethnic backgrounds."

As general services director he has charge of three major city operations: Public buildings, motor vehicles and parks and grounds.

While his new job is his first encounter with city government, the former educator credited his "diversified" educational background and job experience as the qualifications needed to run his department.

"I believe that education is the greatest means of achieving upward mobility. I'm a perfect example of that and I'm very proud of it," he said. "This is the first time in the history of the city that an Hispanic has been appointed as a department head."

Calling his appointment a "significant" accomplishment for Newark's Hispanic community, he added:

"I feel it is an important event. I'm going to work hard to make Mayor James and the community feel that the responsibility given to me is worth their while. I would like to prove that I'm capable of getting the job done.

"It's going to be a big challenge," he added. "Although I realize that I may not have specific experience in city government, I do have a good education behind me and the ability to deal with people. My combined educational background and experience will be very important in running the department efficiently.

"Mayor James fulfilled his promise to Newark's Hispanic population by selecting an Hispanic administrator," said Lopez, "and now it's my chance to fulfill my commitment to him and our community."

THE LOCKHEED-GEORGIA CO.

HON. GEORGE (BUDDY) DARDEN

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 9, 1986

Mr. DARDEN. Mr. Speaker, our Nation's ability to safeguard freedom anywhere in the world depends on our capability to deliver our military forces, their support equipment and their supplies quickly and efficiently—anywhere in the world.

For 35 years now, the Lockheed-Georgia Co. in Marietta, GA, has been the major provider of aircraft to maintain that vital capability. Through its operation of Air Force plant No. 6, it has produced a military airlift fleet unmatched by any other nation.

Today, the Lockheed-Georgia Co. truly deserves the title, "The Airlift Center of the World."

Lockheed-Georgia assumed control of the old Bell bomber plant in January 1951. That facility—from which 665 of the famous B-29 bombers went forth to combat the Axis powers—had been mothballed since the end of World War II.

Since 1951, Lockheed-Georgia has produced or modified more than 7,500 jet and propjet aircraft.

The plant's first role under Lockheed management was to modify B-29's for the Korean conflict, and to build B-47 bombers as a second production source. But it soon established a worldwide reputation with new, innovative designs to meet the rapidly evolving challenges of modern warfare.

First, there was the C-130 Hercules. It introduced a new kind of engine—the propjet—and remains in production today as the most popular air cargo hauler ever built. More than 1,800 copies have been produced since 1955, meeting civilian and military needs not just for our Nation, but all over the world.

The C–130 has been instrumental in the development of many nations. Its nonmilitary missions have included food drops in famine-ravaged areas and delivery of first-aid supplies to the victims of earthquakes and other disasters.

In 1963, the first C–141 Starlifter was delivered to the Military Airlift Command by Lockheed-Georgia. The 285 jet airlifters in that line later were modified at Marietta, lengthening their fuselages by 23⅓ feet and adding in-flight refueling capabilities.

Lockheed-Georgia's crowning achievement has been the C–5 Galaxy. Eighty-one copies of the massive C–5A transport were produced early in the last decade, and today the Marietta plant is nearing completion of an order for 50 C–5B's—the latest version of this pacesetter heavy strategic airlifter.

During its 35-year history, Lockheed-Georgia has produced other outstanding aircraft for both military and civilian use—including the Jetstar, the world's first jet-powered business plane.

Today, Lockheed-Georgia employs more than 18,000 people in Marietta. Employees live in 78 Georgia counties and in all of the 10 congressional districts of our State. The plant's weekly payroll of $11½ million is a major factor in the economy of Metropolitan Atlanta and the surrounding region.

Lockheed-Georgia seeks to do business with as many Georgia and Southeastern firms as possible. Throughout Georgia last year, more than $148 million in subcontracts was awarded to more than 1,600 small businesses and more than 650 large concerns.

Lockheed-Georgia plays a valuable role in the life of the community outside its purely business contribution. Those 18,000 employees are leaders in our churches and civic groups, helping build a better life for both themselves and their neighbors.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud that the Lockheed-Georgia Co. calls the Seventh District of Georgia its home. I invite my colleagues to join me in congratulating Lockheed-Georgia President Ken Cannestra and the other men and women of this outstanding company on their contributions to the preservation of our freedoms.

PROTECTING PENSIONS FROM BANKRUPTCY

HON. EDWARD F. FEIGHAN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 9, 1986

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, On July 17, LTV Corp., the second largest steel manufacturer in the United States, filed for bankruptcy under chapter 11 of the Federal Bankruptcy Code. This was the largest bankruptcy in U.S. history. On the same day LTV made another historic move—the most heartless corporate stunt of the 20th century. It unilaterally terminated the health and pension benefits of its 78,500 retirees. More than half of these retirees are under age 65 and ineligible for Medicare. For them to buy individual policies would be very expensive—too expensive for most. LTV's bankruptcy was due in part to wider economic and trade circumstances, but there's no excuse for their decision to cancel the negotiated, hard-earned benefits of their retirees. Not only was it wrong, it was illegal.

LTV claims that the bankruptcy code obligated them to halt payment of these benefits. That's plain wrong. Congress passed a clear and specific law in 1984 to prevent this very claim. The law states that companies filing for bankruptcy cannot "terminate or alter any provision of a collective bargaining agreement" without negotiating such changes or petitioning the court for permission.

Now LTV claims that the law does not apply in this case. LTV argues that this section of the law, section 1113, was not meant to cover retirees' health and life insurance benefits, but "any provision of a collective bargaining agreement" means any provision. It couldn't be any clearer. I am hopeful that the courts will eventually rule against LTV's action. But, in the meantime, to ensure that nothing like this ever happens again—to protect retirees from corporate lawyers who cannot read—I am introducing along with Chairman RODINO of the Judiciary Committee a bill to clarify Congress' intent by stating specifically that retirees benefits are protected under the original section 1113.

This bill should be unnecessary, but there are 30,000 retirees in the Cleveland area fearful for their well-being who convince me that it isn't. We must remove all doubt for those men and women who worked in good faith. We must remove all doubt for the courts.

Let me commend Chairman RODINO for the speed with which he is moving to address this crisis, and urge the support of the rest of my colleagues to prevent anything like this from ever happening again.

OUR HOSTAGE IN MOSCOW

HON. JIM COURTER

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 9, 1986

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, as the following New Brunswick Home News editorial on the Daniloff hostage situation points out, Gorbachev is the key to this entire incident. Whether Mr. Daniloff is released is totally in the power of the Soviet dictator.

It was unwise for President Reagan to assure the man who is responsible for framing the journalist that Mr. Daniloff is not a spy. That assurance told the whole world the administration believes Gorbachev doesn't know Daniloff is innocent. President Reagan has fallen into the trap set by Gorbachev, unwittingly demonstrating that Gorbachev's faked charge has standing and is a legitimate subject for debate and negotiation.

The proper course is for the President to demand that Daniloff be released immediately, unconditionally, period. Potentially this incident can be Gorbachev's diplomatic Chernobyl: quite simply he needs American reporters in Moscow more than we need to send them there, but his frameup threatens their continued presence.

If President Reagan refuses State Department advice to cringe before the throne in the Kremlin, United States correspondents in Moscow will recognize that their security within the Soviet capital depends not on American protection but on their willingness to swallow—what Mr. Daniloff would not—the Soviet propaganda line. They might then ask themselves something they have not asked in many years: Is my presence here of more use to Soviet propagandizing than it is to the principles of journalistic integrity and the truth which I have pledged above all to follow? The right answer to this question would be immensely valuable to the global expansion of the idea of freedom of the press.

[From the New Brunswick Home News, Sept. 5, 1986]

OUR HOSTAGE IN MOSCOW

Will the jailing in Moscow of American journalist Nicholas Daniloff affect U.S.-Soviet relations?

It ought to. It ought to remind Americans and freedom-loving people everywhere that the Soviet government—for all its "charismatic" new leadership and its widely remarked new "openness"—remains a brutal, totalitarian regime that does not scruple at taking an innocent American hostage in retaliation for the arrest of an accused Soviet spy in New York.

There doesn't seem to be much doubt that U.S. News & World Report correspondent Daniloff was set up by the KGB arrested by a swarm of KGB agents in a Moscow park immediately after a Russian acquaintance handed him a package that the KGB later claimed contained "top secret" documents. Daniloff, says his editor-in-chief and U.S. News owner Mortimer Zuckerman, "is no more a spy than John Wayne, no more involved in espionage that Gidget or any of us and it's outrageous he's kept in prison."

Unfortunately, however outrageous Daniloff's imprisonment is, it would not be the first time an American had been framed and used as "trade-bait" for the release of Soviets held on criminal charges in the United States. In this case, a Soviet employee of the United Nations, arrested on spy charges in New York two weeks ago, apparently is the other half of the equation that put Daniloff in a Moscow cell—the first American since the Stalinist era actually to be thrown in prison by the Soviets.

But just because the Kremlin once again has trotted out the brutal tactic of setting up a tit-for-tat situation when one of its own is nabbed for spying does not mean that the United States should roll over and give in.

A swap of Daniloff for the accused Soviet spy would be another outrage—a knuckling under to Soviet thuggery that also would taint the American journalist. Not surprisingly, according to Zuckerman, Daniloff doesn't think it would be "appropriate for him to be swapped for someone clearly involved in espionage." Even the deal the United States reportedly has offered Moscow—pretrial release of the accused Soviet spy to the custody of the Soviet ambassador in exchange for Daniloff's freedom—seems an overly generous gesture under the circumstances. For the circumstances, let us not forget, are that the Soviet Union has blotted its copybook—grabbed a vulnerable American citizen as a hostage in a tough, damn-the-consequences effort to secure the release of a Soviet government employee charged with espionage against the United States.

Instead of worrying about finding a way for the Soviets to "save face" in order to preserve the prospects for a Soviet-American summit later this year, our government should be doing everything it can to keep the onus for this frightening incident where it belongs—on the Soviet government. Mikhail Gorbachev can order Nicholas Daniloff's release whenever he wishes. And if he wishes not to be the cause of a rupture in U.S.-Soviet relations, he'll do so immediately.

DESIGNATING OCTOBER 1986 AS "LEARNING DISABILITY AWARENESS MONTH"

HON. GEORGE E. BROWN, JR.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 9, 1986

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, before Congress recessed on August 15, 1986, my colleague from New York, Representative JACK KEMP, and I introduced House Joint Resolution 716, a bill to designate October 1986 as "Learning Disabilities Awareness Month." Last year, Mr. KEMP and I sponsored this resolution which was passed by Congress. On October 16, 1985, the President proclaimed October as "Learning Disabilities Awareness Month." Throughout the country, State and local governments, civic organizations and parent groups sponsored awareness events. Mr. KEMP and I believe that these activities significantly increased public knowledge about learning disabilities, the invisible handicap. We hope to broaden that knowledge through this resolution.

Learning disabilities are among the least understood handicaps, and yet, millions of Americans—10 million children alone—suffer from them. October has been recognized as the unofficial "Learning Disability Awareness Month" for many years. This legislation will again give the learning disabled the national attention they deserve. Although Representative KEMP and I have differing opinions on many issues, on this issue we are in total agreement. I encourage my colleagues to join us in bringing about the speedy passage of this measure.

It is important for all of us to be more aware of the nature of learning disabilities. Some estimates suggest that as many as 5 percent of school-aged children are learning disabled. The learning disabled are as handicapped as a person in a wheelchair—but theirs is an invisible handicap. It is a condition which is not immediately apparent and whose causes are not clearly defined—but to the person who must cope with the frustration of overcoming it, this handicap is very real. If parents, educators, professionals, and the learning disabled themselves are to become better able to deal with learning disabilities, increased awareness of the problem is essential.

The "dark ages" of learning disabilities were only a decade ago. It was the rare parent or educator who understood learning disabilities or could recognize a learning disabled child. If a parent or teacher believed that a child was learning disabled, it was a struggle to find the proper diagnostic testing and then to set up a program to deal with the problem on a daily basis. Children with learning disabilities were often not identified as such, or were mislabled as minimally brain damaged, slow, emotionally disturbed, or even retarded.

Actually, the learning disabled are of normal or above average intelligence, but are not able to learn many things in the conventional manner. Learning disabilities encompass a broad range of neurological problems which are distinct from retardation or emotional disturbances. This includes such conditions as perceptual handicaps, dyslexia, and developmental aphasia. The learning disabled are likely to have difficulty with reading, writing, spelling, distinguishing letters of the alphabet, and performing other simple tasks involving language. They may also have difficulties with mathematics, concentration, memory, coordination, understanding time and planning, and distinguishing right from left. With early diagnosis and proper remediation, the learning disabled can overcome their disabilities. Few people realize that Albert Einstein, Thomas Edison, Nelson Rockefeller, Gen. George Patton, and Auguste Rodin, to name just a few, all had some kind of learning disability.

It is hard for us to imagine the frustration of the learning disabled and of those who come in regular contact with them. Typically, the learning disabled excell in one area, yet are incapable of functioning on a level commensurate with their age and intelligence in another. An apparently bright and talkative child might not be able to memorize the alphabet or the months of the year. An otherwise intelligent person might find it difficult to distinguish between written words like "girl" and "grill," to spell correctly and consistently, to work with columns of numbers, to remember names easily, to write neatly, and/or speak clearly.

The learning disabled need differing degrees of individual attention and a school program that offsets their difficulties. It may be just a matter of allowing them extra time on a test or having them attend a special education program once a day. Or they may need some time at a school specially geared to them and special training from an optometrist, speech therapist, or other specialist. Whether they are adults or children, they need patience and understanding. If the learning disabled are not given the proper support, they often find themselves confronted with questions like "What is wrong with me? Why can't I function as well as my peers in class or at work? Am I stupid?" The frustration due to misunderstanding the cause of their problems can often lead them down a path of social isolation, behavioral problems, delinquency, and to feelings of inadequacy and self doubt.

With the passage of the Education for All Handicapped Children Act of 1975—Public Law 94-142—and similar legislation, and with the formation of hundreds of national and local support groups, awareness of learning disabilities has increased. Now parents and teachers who need to know about learning disabilities can turn to many organizations for help. They can contact the National Information Center for Handicapped Children and Youth [NICHCY] set up by Congress—Public Law 98-199—to provide them with free information. They can also contact private organizations such as the Association for Children and Adults with Learning Disabilities, a national organization whose membership includes more that 60,000 parents of learning disabled children and adults. Public schools are now required to provide special education for the learning disabled. Also, some colleges and many private schools offer programs tailored for the learning disabled. Talking book records and tapes are among the national and local programs which currently help the learning disabled gain access to books.

We are fortunate to be out of the "dark ages" of learning disabilities, but we have much further to go to bring about a real renaissance. There are millions of children and adults who are not receiving special education or are not even aware that the cause of their troubles is a learning disability. There are parents who are confused about what to do with their children who have learning disabilities. There are children who are still being mislabeled and are not receiving the proper attention. The only way to solve these problems is to increase awareness. We applaud the courageous efforts of parents and children to lead productive and happy lives despite their handicaps. We must continue to stress the need to detect learning disabilities in children as early as possible and to give them the proper treatment. We are encouraged that Congress is now considering amendments to Public Law 94-142 which will extend the protections of the law to children 3 years of age and older and to provide incentives for State programs of early intervention for handicapped infants and children.

These are some of the reasons we are proposing to again designate October as "Learning Disabilities Awareness Month." I strongly urge my colleagues to pass this bill. Below is the text of this commemorative bill:

H.J. RES. 716

Joint Resolution to Designate October 1986, as "Learning Disabilities Awareness Month"

Whereas millions of Americans suffer from one or more learning disabilities;

Whereas it is estimated that ten million American children have been diagnosed as suffering from learning disabilities;

Whereas most learning-disabled persons are of normal or above normal intelligence but cannot learn to read and write in the conventional manner;

Whereas it is important for parents, educators, physicians, and learning-disabled persons to be aware of the nature of learning disabilities and the resources available to help learning-disabled persons;

Whereas early diagnosis and treatment of learning-disabled children gives such children a better chance for a happy and productive adult life;

Whereas the courage necessary for learning-disabled persons to meet their special challenges should be recognized;

Whereas hundreds of national and local support groups for learning-disabled persons, parents of learning-disabled children, and professionals who work with learning-disabled persons have made important contributions to the treatment of learning disabilities;

Whereas research and study have contributed to public knowledge about learning disabilities, but much remains to be learned; and

Whereas public awareness of and concern about learning disabilities may encourage the establishment of the programs necessary to promote early diagnosis and treatment of learning disabilities and to help learning-disabled persons and their families cope with their learning disabilities: Now, therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That October 1986 hereby is designated "Learning Disabilities Awareness Month", and the President of the United States is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon all public officials and the people of the United States to observe such month with appropriate programs, ceremonies, and activities.

NAVY OMBUDSMEN: A SHIP-TO-SHORE LIFELINE

HON. G. WILLIAM WHITEHURST

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 9, 1986

Mr. WHITEHURST. Mr. Speaker, the Sunday, September 7, 1986, edition of the Virginian-Pilot and the Ledger-Star carried an article by Jack Dorsey describing the invaluable work done by the Navy ombudsmen. These ladies, and other volunteers who work in and through Navy family services centers and family services centers of the other branches of the armed services as well, are a major factor in ensuring the well-being of military families, and they work long hours with no compensation other than the knowledge of a job well done.

As Adm. Jackson Parker points out, the Navy ombudsmen alone save the Navy over $100 million annually, and certainly if we were to figure in the savings brought about by the efforts of all the other family service volunteers, the total could reach $150 million or more per year.

I am proud to have initiated the legislation authorizing the Department of Defense to utilize the services of these volunteers in such programs, and I am delighted that this year the House-passed Defense Authorization bill was amended on the floor to contain language which I had offered to provide reimbursement for these volunteers for out-of-pocket expenses at the discretion of commanding officers, using available funds; the total for all the services for this reimbursement is expected to be about $2 million annually—a modest sum, indeed, in light of their value to the armed services, and a small, but tangible further expression of our deep appreciation of all they do.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The article follows:

NAVY OMBUDSMEN: A SHIP-TO-SHORE LIFELINE

(By Jack Dorsey)

NORFOLK.—For a Navy wife, the rumors are the worst.

There were stories during the spring that the carrier Coral Sea, plying the waters off Libya, was on fire. Injuries were said to have occurred.

About the same time, the amphibious transport dock Ponce was said to be unloading its landing boats and sending Marines ashore in the Middle East. The word reaching wives back home was that their men had entered harm's way.

To compound matters, a cruel hoax was being played in Norfolk by someone posing as a casualty assistance officer. He was calling Navy wives and saying their husbands had been killed or injured as a result of the Libyan crisis. For a while, some wives thought they were receiving official word.

In Hampton Roads—home to 125 ships, 50 aircraft squadrons, more than 100,000 sailors and Marines, and 300,000 dependents—rumors can mean widespread havoc.

While the Navy's bureaucratic machinery eventually straightens out the false reports, the minutes or hours it takes to sort out conflicting reports are miserable ones for the families back home.

But when the rumors get rolling, so do the Navy's ombudsmen. Three thousand strong worldwide—473 of them representing 250 commands in Norfolk—they are an army of sailors' wives who can cut through red tape, activate their telephone message machines at home and quash the poppycock that seems to arise almost daily.

They are able to put out the correct word because the commanding officers of their ships, or the squadron commanders back home, see to it that the ombudsmen are among the first to know when a problem exists.

If nothing else, weekly messages sent from a ship to the ombudsmen update them on the ship's schedule, tell of a canceled port visit or reassure the families that their men are well.

Although they are called ombudsmen—which originally were public officials appointed to investigate citizens' complaints against the government—these volunteers, nearly all of them women, have become quite a bit more in the 16 years they have been used by the Navy.

They are the Florence Nightingales of the '80s as well. They handle emergency calls, suicide threats, alcohol and drug abuse matters. They direct those in need of financial or legal help to the proper channels. They contact the Red Cross. They are social workers. They are confidantes. They are trained. They are organized.

"But we're not a taxi service. We're not a bank, and we're not baby sitters," said Sue Laguana, ombudsman for the Ponce, where her husband, Joseph, is a first-class boiler technician.

Laguana, who served in the Navy for four years and remains a member of the Naval Reserve as a first class hospital corpsman, has been the Ponce's ombudsman for a year.

She has handled the rumors, especially during the Libyan crisis. She has summoned the Red Cross for a crewman who was needed at home because of an illness in his family. She has fielded the emotional telephone calls from a distraught wife whose automobile had broken down in North Carolina. She has done battle with the Navy's finance center in Cleveland to straighten out tardy allotments to five crewmen's wives. She has soothed the fears of a young wife alone for the first time while her husband is at sea.

"I didn't know what an ombudsman was," said Laguana of the days when she followed her husband from port to port. "Every time we went to a new place, I was at the point of not knowing anyone off the ship. My husband would deploy right away, and I would suddenly be alone.

"So I got interested in it and thought, if possible, I would become one."

Despite the midnight phone calls, the emergencies and the gloom that frequently come to her, Laguana says the inspirations and thrills of resolving problems make up for the bad days.

As liaison for the ship, ombudsmen work to bridge gaps between commands and families. They can be the feather in a ship commander's hat—and infrequently a thorn in his side when the crew and its families become upset.

There is normally at least one ombudsman per ship, though a 5,000-man carrier may have 10 or more. They are appointed by the commanding officer. In Norfolk, they are drawn together by the Tidewater Ombudsman Assembly. One Washington bureaucrat, computing the worth of ombudsmen, estimated that they save the Navy $107 million annually, said Rear Adm. Jackson K. Parker, commander of the Navy's facilities in and around Norfolk.

The estimate was based on the mandatory training given at an ombudsman training academy operated by the Navy Family Services Center. Ombudsmen work approximately 600 man-years annually, he said.

In return, they may receive a reserved parking space on the pier, a monthly lunch with the ship's captain and a hearty nod from every sailor aboard. On Friday, in tribute to their long hours of work, the ombudsmen in the area are to be honored with Navy Ombudsman Day in Norfolk.

Rear Adm. David M. Bennett, deputy commander of the Atlantic Fleet Naval Surface Force, has been associated with ombudsmen as a ship's commanding officer, squadron commander and now force deputy commander.

"I'm not so sure you could hire anyone to do what they do," Bennett said. "What they have got, in addition to their special training, is 15 to 20 years of experience in the field."

Bennett said he has always held the ombudsmen in high esteem. "They take a lot of heat off and alleviate a lot of potential problems," he said. "They are really command advisers to us on dependent matters."

The ombudsman program began in 1970 with one of the famous "Z-Grams" from Adm. Elmo Zumwalt, who was then chief of naval operations. He wanted better communications between the ships and the families at home.

Before then, said Nancy Woodall, the wife of Cmdr. Stephen Woodall, skipper of the destroyer King, there was no such program for families to fall back on.

"From what I remember in the late '60s, it was traditionally a job held by a senior chief's wife on the ship," Woodall said. "She sort of was the focal point and the one with the most experience. She was the natural one to go to, and she took all the problems and got no recognition for it."

Woodall, although not an ombudsman, has taken some of the training and courses the ombudsman academy offers. As the wife of the commanding officer of a ship, she also has certain obligations. But dealing day after day with problems, such as those the ombudsmen face, is a tremendous challenge, she said.

"For me, in the unearned position of a captain's wife, it takes a lot of burden off because people problems bother me, and I would take them home. But these girls are really professionals," she said. "They know what they are doing."

They have also become a safety valve for the sailor at sea, said Lt. Lyman Smith, the chaplain of the Ponce. Just knowing that the ombudsman program is working and in place saves the sailors grief when they know the nightly news is carrying information about a crisis they may be in, he said.

"There is a great concern on the part of sailors in the Mediterranean that what they may be experiencing will be blown out of proportion back home," Smith said. "There is that concern of 'How do we get the word back that things aren't so bad?' "

A simple message from the ship's captain to the ombudsmen, relayed by a squadron commander at home, usually does the trick, he said.

OBJECTIONS TO PROPOSED FEMA RULE CHANGES

HON. JAMES J. HOWARD

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 9, 1986

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I am joining with members of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation today to introduce legislation that will prohibit the Federal Emergency Management Agency [FEMA] from finalizing its proposed rules to revise the Federal Disaster Relief Program.

This legislation was developed as a result of the hearing held by the Subcommittee on Investigations and Oversight, and the nearly unanimous opposition from both Republicans and Democrats to this FEMA proposal. The hearing made clear that congressional action is necessary to prevent these misguided regulations from taking effect.

The underlying problem with the regulations proposed on April 18, 1986, is that they are not based on any program-related needs. Instead, they were developed because of an Office of Management and Budget directive to FEMA to find budget savings for fiscal year 1987. When ordered to reduce the budget, FEMA officials developed the present proposal that takes several steps backward in the development of an effective Disaster Relief Program.

There are two major objections to the proposed FEMA rules. First, the proposal would reduce the Federal share of disaster relief from 75 to 50 percent. That reduction would place an intolerable burden on local governments faced with the numerous problems associated with disasters. It is when disasters strike that the assistance of the Federal Government is needed. It is a primary function of Government to help its citizens at the times of severe need.

Second, the proposal uses an arbitrary population-based formula to establish thresholds for the distribution of assistance. These thresholds bear no relation to the needs of a particular community but simply to the population of the State in which it is located and the State taxing capacity.

Using these thresholds, New Jersey would receive no disaster relief unless the damage exceeded $9.1 million. California would receive no assistance unless there was more than $29 million in damage—an extraordinary amount.

Under this proposal, 61 of the last 111 national disaster areas would have been ineligible for assistance. The proposal is arbitrary in its thresholds and unfair to the recipients.

The illogical proposal produces illogical results. It would produce the strange situation, in a coastal storm in the Northeast, of communities in Delaware qualifying for assistance if the damage exceeded $669,000, in New Jersey if the damage exceeded $9.1 million, in New York if the damage exceeded $19 million and in Rhode Island if there is more than $970,000 in damage.

The unfairness of the proposal demands that Congress take action to prevent the rule from taking effect. The legislation that I am introducing today will bar these rules from taking effect. If they are adopted before the legislation is enacted, they will be nullified.

The bill also would bar FEMA for 18 months from issuing or implementing any rules concerning the policy relating to the declaration of disasters, or the non-Federal responsibility under the Disaster Relief Act of 1974.

Finally, the bill would direct the Comptroller General to study the effect the proposal would have on the ability of State and local governments to respond to major disasters. The Comptroller General would be required to submit the report to Congress within 6 months.

It is not our intention to limit the ability of FEMA to respond to disasters or to make changes where necessary in the administration of the Disaster Relief Program. However, it is necessary to ensure that those changes are made fairly and with an improved program as the goal. Congress must not allow the Federal Government's Disaster Relief Program to be distorted in a way that could be harmful to citizens facing the effects of disasters.

GOV. TOM KEAN'S MESSAGE OF OPPORTUNITY FOR ALL AMERICANS

HON. JACK F. KEMP

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 9, 1986

Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, New Jersey's Gov. Tom Kean is, in my view, one of the most effective and progressive leaders in our country. Under his administration, New Jersey has become a center of job creation, entrepreneurship, equal opportunity, and economic growth for all its citizens. Governor Kean's recent remarks before the annual conference of the National Urban League outline his ideas and initiatives for making the ladder of opportunity accessible to all Americans, particularly through education. I commend Governor Kean for his vision and leadership, and I hope my colleagues will take the time to read his remarks.

REMARKS OF GOV. THOMAS H. KEAN

When the history books are written a century from now, the civil rights movement will be viewed as one of the most profound periods of social change in human history—and the Urban League as one of its greatest champions.

To be here with so many leaders of that movement is a little awe inspiring.

Like many white children growing up in the 30's and the 40's, I was insulated from much of the prejudice and oppression that black Americans had to endure.

But even as a child, I knew something was wrong.

My father was a Congressman, so I was brought up in Washington, D.C. Schools were separate. We couldn't even go to the movies with a black friend. As it was explained to me in class by a white teacher, the "coloreds" has their own theaters.

I remember my father's anger when he was turned away from a resturant near the Capital because he was with a black constituent. I was angry too.

From that anger grew a sense of purpose. I marched with Dr. King, and, as a student at Columbia, helped open the first northern chapter of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, on 125th Street in Harlem.

I thought of those days a few weeks ago as I sat next to Coretta Scott King at the unveiling of the Statue of Liberty.

I thought of the irony of this country offering freedom, hope and opportunity to Europe's poor while denying it to our own of African descent.

The civil rights movement forced all Americans, of every color and nationality to face that contradiction.

The civil rights movement fought for power—power at the voting booth, power in the schoolyard, power in the American economy.

Twenty years later, as we meet here in San Francisco to discuss the problems facing urban America, much has changed.

Yet still today, if you walk the streets and alleys of our major cities, you hear that same call—the call for empowerment.

For a large number of black Americans, the picture of a prosperous and comfortable America is no more real than the image of the Bill Cosby Show flickering from old TV sets.

These poor black Americans belong to a distinct community—a community of poverty, despair and deprivation.

A community in which over 60 percent of the children live in single parent households headed by women.

A community in which unemployment is two and sometimes three times the national average.

A community in which every single day, over 40 teenagers give birth to not their first, not their second, but their third child.

This is the community of poverty in America. Sadly, it seems more permanent today that it did twenty or thirty years ago.

What went wrong? Why has the dream been deferred for so many? Why when civil rights were gained for all did not economic rights for all follow?

The answers to that question are complex. But no matter how we look at it, we have to admit that part of the blame must lay at the doorstep of government.

The same government that gave civil rights to black Americans too often inadvertently asked for dependency in return.

Our welfare system encourages people to stop working and provides no rewards to those who get a job.

And it creates financial incentives for our children to have children.

Our housing policy blocks urban residents from owning their home or living in a clean apartment.

Our criminal justice system tells the drug pusher and gang leader that yes the risks are worth it. There are few incentives for obeying the law.

Remember the war on poverty? Well, poverty won.

As Hosea Williams put it, "the war on poverty lost because by the time it trickled down to the poor, all we got was scraps from the table."

There are some in my party who look at all this and say government's hurting urban America. Government ought to just get out of the anti-poverty business. And there are others who still blame the victim. After all, the urban poor are poor because of their own weaknesses.

Let me tell you something. Those people are wrong.

Just because poverty still exists doesn't mean that government should throw up its hands and go home. Nor does it mean that the poor will always be with us.

I believe that government can make a difference. Government can create a climate so that urban Americans can help themselves.

This can happen. This must happen. And it must start with education.

Historically, education has been the catalyst for the liberation of black Americans.

The most enduring work of the Freedman's Bureau was the development of a common education system for former slaves. The NAACP and the National Urban League itself were born in the service of education to meet black needs.

Most of the landmark civil rights cases dealt with constitutional issues around the use or misuse of public education—especially Brown v. Board of Education in 1954.

It was the struggle in the schools which gave Dr. King commitment for the Montgomery movement in 1955. It was from the schools that the strategy of economic boycott was born in 1959. It was in the schools that the Federal Government finally stood for justice at Little Rock, Alabama and Ole Miss and it was in the schools that the SNCC was born and black voter registration launched.

John Jacob put it simply and directly. "Black survival is directly linked to education."

But today, urban schools are no longer the seedbeds of social change. Instead they are mere warehouses of unfulfilled human potential.

In our urban schools—particularly schools in which the majority of students are black—we see a pattern of rules and regulations, dogma and doctrine that perpetuate powerlessness.

Consider for a moment the problem of disruptive students.

Perhaps no other criteria separates good schools from bad schools than the treatment of unruly students.

In good schools, students know what is expected and what will happen if their behavior deviates.

In bad schools, no clear or explicit signals exist.

If the teacher doesn't want profanity, fights or sarcasm, the teacher says to the student, "if you won't disrupt, then I won't demand too much of you. You'll be able to get by with minimum effort."

By making these truces, we set the wrong tone. We lose the incentives for good behavior and hard work.

Consider the issue of academic standards.

The urban schools in my State are filled with children who perform substantially below their grade level. That's what the academics says—what they mean is that they simply cannot even read or write.

Yet for years our response has been to simply pass these children from grade to grade, regardless of performance. Until the child drops out, and that child—that young adult—soon finds himself or herself condemned to low paying, dead end jobs for the rest of their life.

A black friend of mine in the city runs a string of grocery stores. He desperately needs people to work the cash registers. The neighborhood kids want the jobs—very badly. Sometimes they wait in line for hours to be interviewed.

My friend asks these kids a simple question: If a product is three for $1, how much does one item cost? The kids look at the floor. They can't answer.

It breaks my friend's heart. These are kids he wants to help, but he can't. Instead, they are back on the street, with drugs and crime their only alternatives.

What kind of message do we send when we promote and even graduate our children, regardless of whether they have even mastered the minimum skills required of their grade?

The message is simple: We say to our youngsters, you can't succeed. You are powerless. No matter if you study or not—you graduate. Your actions have no consequences. Is it any wonder that years later these human beings are on the street?

Is it any wonder they cannot get a job?

Finally, consider our treatment of urban schools as institutions.

In my State, as in so many others, we give extra money to schools for compensatory education. Yet the system is biased so that the more children in remedial classes, the more money a school gets. We reward failure and penalize success.

Under that system, schools will never let students out of special classes, because they lose money.

As budgets get larger and student performance declines, support for education deteriorates. People forget that when you spend money on the education of a child, it is so much cheaper than spending money on prisons or spending money on welfare programs.

What we must do is really very simple. We must restructure incentives to reward achievement for both schools and students.

Take the problem of disruptive students. Urban schools must have clear-cut codes of conduct. And they must create alternate education programs for students who consistently violate those codes.

The rules must be clear: If students misbehave, they will be removed from the classroom. And if the disruptive behavior continues, the student will be suspended.

With a good alternate education program—one that usually costs no more than regular education—we can meet the needs of the disruptive student and maintain classroom discipline.

But the message must be clear, if you interrupt the learning of other students, you leave the classroom and perhaps the school.

And we can no longer pass our students from grade to grade, with scant concern for their ability to even read or write.

We must put in place rigorous tests in basic skills. All high school students must pass these tests before they are given a diploma.

No longer can we pass our problems on to employers and colleges. No longer can we let our children suffer for our mistakes.

Basic skills tests will be controversial. In my State, some educators have warned of failure rates as high as seventy percent. These people say that urban children simply cannot learn to read and write and do arithmetic.

Nonsense. I know our children have the ability to learn. The question is—do our schools have the capacity to teach? And if they do not, that is our failure, not our children's.

Convincing students that their behavior does have consequences is so vitally important. What's equally important is changing the incentives facing our schools themselves.

Federal and State governments should restructure their formulas for compensatory education. No longer should schools with the largest classes receive the most money. Instead, let's give the extra money to schools that get kids out of special classes, and back with their classmates.

We've done that in my home State. And just recently, I took the boldest step of all.

I believe that all children have a right in this democracy to a good education.

A handful of school districts in New Jersey—mostly urban schools with black majorities—have repeatedly failed to meet minimum State standards. Students in those schools are being denied what is a constitutional right in my State to a thorough and efficient education.

Last month, I announced a change of policy regarding those schools. If those schools continue to fail and if by every piece of evidence are not educating children, then the State of New Jersey will take over—we will replace the school boards, superintendents and other key administrators.

We are telling our urban school districts that no longer will we turn our backs and tolerate mediocrity. We are no longer going to blame our children. We are going to fix the schools.

By doing so, we prove that the development of the poorest black or Hispanic student is just as important as the education of the middle class in the suburbs.

We will provide that institutional actions, just like individual actions, do indeed have consequences.

That's what we need to do. We need nothing less than a national assault on the problems plaguing our urban schools.

We can no longer tolerate a situation where an entire community of children are deprived of the basic skills needed to hold a job.

We must recognize that when we fail in education—our failure is our children.

It's not going to be easy. It will take the cooperation of everyone—the Federal Government, States, and the cities.

I hope my party will take the lead—but today I call on the leadership of both great political parties to make education a priority. If we fail here, we fail everywhere.

We must do it.

The fact is that we will never break the back of poverty unless we provide a decent education to every child in our cities.

Don't let government off the hook. Don't let government play big daddy. And don't let government tell you that it simply can't do anything about the poverty in America.

James Baldwin once wrote, "Not everything that is faced can be changed, but nothing can be changed until it is faced."

Government and the entire urban community together must face the fundamental issue of the 1980's: How to empower urban Americans—not paralyze them.

I am an historian, and to me the history of black Americans is a story of human possibility.

You have produced some of the great leaders in history. People like W.E. DuBois, Booker T. Washington, Benjamin Banneker, Jackie Robinson, Dr. Martin Luther King and, of course your own Whitney Young.

What is amazing about each of these people is that they came out of an atmosphere of hardship and oppression. From poor schools and sometime broken families came some of the people richest in intelligence, integrity and ideas in human history.

That tells me something. Because if these black Americans can contribute so very much, think of what all black Americans can contribute with an equal chance as the rest of us—with good schools and a solid family.

It hasn't happened yet. This is a country that has put a man on the moon, found a cure for polio and forged technology that boggles the mind. Yet still, we have yet to find a way to empower urban Americans to become a competitive force in American life.

We have yet to fulfill Whitney Young's dream of a "society in which each human being is free to flourish and develop to the maximum of their God-given potential."

When that day arrives, and it must, I can guarantee you that lady in the New Jersey harbor will smile a little wider.

Whenever I think of the potential in Americans, I think of the gifted scholar, singer and actor from my home State—Paul Robeson.

I remember a song he used to sing called, "The House I Live In."

In the song, Robeson asked, "what is America to me?"

He spoke of many things—of a certain special word: "Democracy."

He reminded us of the words of old Abe Lincoln, of Jefferson and Payne—of Washington and Douglas, and the task that still remains:

To Robeson, America was, "the right to speak my mind out, and the air of feeling free."

He concluded, "The town I live in, the street, the house, the room, the pavement of the city or a garden all in bloom: the church, the school, the clubhouse, the million lights I see, but especially the people, that's America to me."

America is all those things. But today, America still is all those things to only some people.

The promise of America will never be fulfilled, until we throw open our doors and let urban Americans share in the power and opportunity we all enjoy.

Until those who are strong demand inclusion of the weak.

Until those who have power demand inclusion of the powerless.

Until those who are rich feel an obligation to the poor.

That time is coming.

I believe it. I feel it.

On his deathbed, W.E. DuBois wrote: "The only possible death is to lose belief in life simply because the great end comes slowly, because the time is long."

Black power in this country has been a long-time coming. But this is one American who believes that great end is within our grasp.

Thank you.

LEGISLATION TO CLARIFY THE SCOPE OF BANKRUPTCY PROVISIONS RELATING TO COLLECTIVE-BARGAINING AGREEMENTS

HON. PETER W. RODINO, JR.

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 9, 1986

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation to clarify congressional intent with respect to the scope of section 1113 of the Bankruptcy Code. This bill makes clear that section 1113 protests all provisions of a collective-bargaining agreement, including provisions covering benefits for retired workers, from unilateral rejection by an employer filing under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code.

In recent months, there has been a debate over the scope of section 1113 and its relationship to other sections of the Bankruptcy Code. Some have claimed that section 1113 applies only to those provisions of a collective-bargaining agreement dealing with active workers who will continue in the employ of the company after the bankruptcy filing and not to provisions dealing with retired workers. They contend that since retired workers will not supply services to the company after the bankruptcy filing, any payment of benefits to retired workers—even when such benefits are clearly set forth in a collective-bargaining agreement—is barred by the Bankruptcy Code as a prepetition claim.

There is absolutely no basis for such an interpretation. In 1984, when I introduced H.R. 4908, which led to section 1113, I intended to protect every provision of a collective-bargaining agreement, including provisions relating to retiree benefits; from unilateral rejection. The purpose was to require employers in chapter 11 to honor labor contracts in their entirety—and to prevent them from picking and choosing among provisions. To reflect this intent, subsection (h) of H.R. 4908 was drafted to state unequivocally that all provisions of a collective-bargaining agreement were protected and that no other section of the Bankruptcy Code would permit the unilateral alteration or termination of any such provision. The provision that was enacted into law also reflects this intent. Subsection (f) of section 1113 states clearly that—

[N]o provision of the [Bankruptcy Code] shall be construed to permit a trustee to unilaterally terminate or alter any provision of a collective bargaining agreement prior to compliance with the provision of this section.

The legislation I am introducing today will put an end to the debate on whether section 1113 covers retiree benefits. It will leave no doubt that subsection (f) of section 1113 means what it says: A company filing for bankruptcy under chapter 11 must first comply with the procedures set forth in section 1113 before it terminates or alters any provision of a collective-bargaining agreement dealing with retiree benefits, just like any other provision of a collective bargaining agreement.

In the case of retired workers, it is particularly critical that companies should not be permitted to cut off benefits precipitously. Retirees depend on these benefits, particularly health insurance benefits, on a day-to-day basis. Unlike other creditors of the company, retirees are likely to have no other resources to fall back on. They cannot wait while a company reorganizes to find out what remains of their benefits. This bill will make clear that companies in chapter 11 must continue to provide retired workers with any benefits provided for in a collective-bargaining agreement until it follows the procedures in section 1113 and obtains court permission to modify any such benefits.

TRIBUTE TO DR. ROBERT L. JOHNSON

HON. GEORGE (BUDDY) DARDEN

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 9, 1986

Mr. DARDEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the attention of my colleagues to the outstanding contributions made to his community by Dr. Robert L. Johnson, the long-time pastor of Zion Baptist Church in my hometown of Marietta, GA.

Dr. Johnson has been a consistently positive moral force in our community. He has played a key role in nurturing a spirit of brotherhood and cooperation between our white and black citizens.

Dr. Johnson's devotion to public service does not end with local interests; he has served with distinction on the Georgia State Board of Pharmacy. The Georgia Coalition of Black Women named Dr. Johnson the most influential black man of the year.

To further acquaint my colleagues with the achievements of Dr. Johnson, I submit a recent article from the Marietta Daily Journal. The article follows:

[From the Marietta Daily Journal, Aug. 5, 1986]

VOICES FROM PAST HONOR ZION'S DR. R.L. JOHNSON

(By Lorri Preston)

Fulton County Commissioner A. Reginald Eaves, Marietta Mayor Vicki Chastain, Marietta City Councilman John Hammond and Don Jackson of Georgia Secretary of State Max Cleland's office went to church together Saturday night.

They went to Zion Baptist Church in Marietta to recognize their friend Dr. Robert L. Johnson for his 26 years of pastoring during a special "This Is Your Life" tribute. And they weren't alone.

While he sat under a flowered arbor with long-time Zion member Annie Mae Solomon at his side, Johnson guessed correctly each in a long string of old friends who stood behind, bringing to life memories.

As each guest spoke, another stage of Johnson's fruitful career was recounted.

Before Dr. George McFarland, president of the the Georgia State Pharmacy Board, spoke, Johnson was reminded by emcee Joe Washington of 11-Alive News of the time he tripped and fell when shaking the governor's hand at the swearing in of the board.

"The Lord moves in mysterious ways," Washington said.

McFarland said the board has become more professional because of Johnson's presence.

Johnson was also reminded of the time he took his choir and some members of Zion to preach at a small town church. After finding the church's doors locked upon arrival, Johnson found some of the church's deacons, had them unlock the building and round up some local members for the sermon. Five years later Johnson learned he had gone to the wrong church.

Sentimentally, Ella Mae Brayboy of the Martin Luther King Jr. Center for Social Change and the Georgia Coalition of Black Women recalled how Johnson helped register black voters more than 20 years ago.

"Remember the year 1964, that important leadership role you played in political development?" Mrs. Brayboy said. "Remember, we registered 500 (blacks) that night at Turner High School and 10,000 across the city? That led to the first eight black representatives (being elected) to the state legislature. I'm here to say thank you again."

The coalition named Johnson the Most Influential Black Man of the Year.

Eaves recited the "Whom would go for us, whom shall I send" biblical passage, and said lightheartedly that Johnson has been pressuring him to go into preaching.

The Fulton County Board of Commissioners gave Johnson the Community Service Award.

Ms. Chastain recalled how she asked Johnson to give the invocation at a Marietta City Council meeting, adding he was the first black man to do so.

"You have always been a friend," she said.

Jackson read a certificate of appreciation from the secretary of state's office recognizing Johnson for outstanding service to the State Board of Pharmacy.

"He's our consumer member half the time, the other half we need to call on him in prayer," Jackson said.

Johnson had little trouble guessing Hammond's voice as he told of how Johnson worked some near miracles in securing a marriage license during a haphazard wedding ceremony. Hammond has worked with Johnson on listing the old Zion church building on the National Historic Register.

Oscar Freeman, president of Cobb's chapter of NAACP, remembered sitting on some steps in a housing complex when Johnson approached him and said, "Young man, do you belong to Zion Church?" Though he wasn't a member then, Freeman said Johnson's encouragement led to his intense involvement with Cobb NAACP. Johnson is past president and a board member of the chapter.

Charles Harrison of Alpha Phi Alpha commended Johnson on his help in organizing local celebrations of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday. And the Rev. J.F. Ham of the Cobb Ministerial Alliance commended Johnson for the renewing of the Cobb organization.

Educator Dr. Joseph "Pete" Silvers said, "You and I have long realized the children are our future." Hiram Little recited lines from Johnson's first trail sermon and Dr. Harris T. Travis, Zion's associate pastor, commented on Johnson's preachings.

"I really don't know a gentleman, a preacher, a pastor I could make comments about as I could with Rev. Johnson," Travis said. "The Reverend is such a sensitive person. He tries to meet the needs of everyone. He was one of the greatest diplomats I've ever seen. And he doesn't use boxing gloves."

The ceremony, interspersed with prayers and chronological accounts by Washington, was highlighted by the singing of two most appropriate hymns: "Stand By Me," and "How Great Thou Art."

"It really did catch me by surprise," Johnson said. "This is the first time they've done this kind of thing. It's unusual for me and exciting and glorious and every other adjective you can think of."

Mr. and Mrs. K. Charles Burris coordinated the Aug. 2 program. On Sunday, Aug. 3, a special Sunday morning service, dinner and anniversary services took place in Johnson's honor.

TRIBUTE TO A WOUNDERFUL CHURCH AND PARISH

HON. GERRY SIKORSKI

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 9, 1986

Mr. SIKORSKI. Mr. Speaker, this Sunday in northeast Minneapolis, the Chuch of the Holy Cross is celebrating its centennial. The Reverend Frank Decowski will preside over the festivities, and it is right that he should be there. Father Decowski was born just a few blocks away from the Holy Cross. Maybe that is why he is so good at serving his parishioners. They grew up together and share the same Polish heritage. They share the same commitment to traditional American values: God, family, and country.

For 100 years, the Holy Cross has been a shining example of all that is great about America. The church is made up of descendants of early Polish immigrants to Minnesota. Many of these settlers—my grandparents among them—came to this country with no material wealth, no knowledge of the language or system of government. But they used their skills and their faith to forge a new life in a foreign land.

These immigrants came seeking freedom and a better life, and learned to love America and to fight for her. They gave their physical strength to building a new life in this democracy, and they gave their spiritual strength to the Holy Cross. Their faith came from God, from within themselves, and from their church.

As a tribute to this wonderful church and parish, I would like to submit the following article from the Minneapolis Star and Tribune. May the Holy Cross stand another 100 years and more.

[From the Minneapolis Star and Tribune, Sept. 6, 1986]

PASTOR, FLOCK TO OBSERVE CENTENNIAL OF POLISH PARISH CHURCH

(By Neal Gendler)

From the window of his study at Church of the Holy Cross in northeast Minneapolis, the Rev. Frank Decowski can look down the alley at the house in which he grew up.

At 53, Decowski is a little more than half the age of the church in which he grew up, and he has a lot in common with the folks in his flock.

"I've known 90 percent of these people all my life." Decowski said Thursday. "A lot of people still call me Frankie."

Decowski and most of the 1,300 households in Holy Cross share a Polish heritage, and many members have grown up near the church, 1621 University Ave. NE., in a neighborhood with about a dozen churches on as many blocks. Many families have belonged to Holy Cross since they arrived in Minneapolis sometime in the last century.

Decowski and the families that comprise the largest Polish parish between Chicago and the West Coast will celebrate the church's centennial a week from Sunday, with a mass of thanksgiving and a dinner featuring the nation's ranking Polish-American priest, Cardinal John Krol of Philadelphia.

Krol is to preside over the noon mass and speak at the dinner that afternoon at the Prom Center in St. Paul. Decowski believes that Krol's public appearance will be the first by a cardinal in the Twin Cities since the late Eugenio Pacelli, who later become Pope Pius XII celebrated mass at the St. Paul Cathedral in 1936.

Decowski first invited the pope, although he didn't really expect John Paul to attend. The pope—who Decowski met in 1979, when both were guests of Vice President Mondale—sent a photo of himself inscribed in Polish with good wishes to Holy Cross on its centennial. Decowski wanted Krol to attend "to honor the people of our parish," a number of whom had arrived under difficult circumstances since 1945. "I wanted to honor our community."

The genial Decowski had thought of driving Krol from the church to the Prom in a horse-drawn carriage, but dropped fancy ideas when he learned that the cardinal was returning from a trip to Poland and would be tired. Still, plans call for a lively day.

The mass, which Archbishop John Roach will celebrate, will be held in a church bedecked in the Polish national colors, with red-and-white banners with the white Polish eagle and white keys for the pope. Two pieces include the opening words of the Polish anthem that translate loosely as "Poland has not died."

If he can get the city to close the street, Decowski will have traditional Polish dancing in front of the church before the service.

It is such traditions, coupled with family ties, that have helped people maintain connections to Holy Cross even if they have moved to suburbs, Decowski said. His own parents met and married there, and two of his brothers still belong.

Their father died five weeks before he was born, Decowski said, and his mother supported her five children by scrubbing floors during the week and cooking for church weddings on weekends.

The church in which Decowski grew up was built in 1927 and is the congregation's third. The first was the original building of nearby St. Anthony parish, a structure 28 by 46 feet, built in 1851 as the city's first Catholic church. The people who started Holy Cross bought it for $25 and moved it to what now is a church-school playground across the street from Holy Cross.

The second church was built for about 500 people and began use in 1892. It was a period of great immigration from Eastern Europe to America, and, for many, work in the flour mills of Minneapolis.

The present church was built in 1927 and, the church history says, "has parishioners who have lived in the parish and sometimes on the same block or even in the same house all their lives." Decowski said that the sense of continuity is one of the church's great attractions.

"People stick together here," he said. "They're related to everybody around here

. . . they just like what we do, I suppose. We carry on a lot of the traditions that their parents and grandparents brought from Poland.'"

For example, families take home opiatki, or holy bread, that is eaten at Christmas Eve dinner as a symbol of unity, peace and love. At Easter, people bring their food to church for a special blessing.

"Easter Sunday morning, we have what is called the resurrection mass," he said. "We have a procession around the church several times singing the traditional Polish hymns of the resurrection. After mass they go home—again as a family—to eat the blessed food." The dinner includes sharing an egg as a sign of unity and resurrection. Other churches also bless the food, he said, but Holy Cross does it five times, at masses scheduled so all can attend.

Two of each Sunday's five masses are in Polish. One of Decowski's two assistants, the Rev. Antoni Bury, came from Poland 14 years ago. The other, the Rev. Gerald Dvorak, grew up in the community. The congregation includes a number of young immigrants who have arrived since martial law was declared in Poland in 1981, he said, and Holy Cross has the only Polish masses in Minneapolis. St. Adalbert's Church in St. Paul has Polish masses, too.

Decowski said that in his neighborhood, about 90 percent of the people are in church over a weekend. Although about 40 percent of his congregation is over 60, with the rest divided rather evenly by age group, a number of young families are moving back into the area. The school serves a number of parishes, but about 150 of its 450 students are from Holy Cross.

Decowski is the first "native son" to be pastor, according to church history.

"Everybody would love to come back to his own parish," Decowski said, but when the archbishop asked him to Holy Cross, Decowski had some mixed emotions, wondering if people would open up to him in time of need.

But it's been just the opposite, he said. "Especially in time of illness, time of death," he said, "it's somebody they've known all their life who is there."

ILLINOIS COLLEGE INFORMS STUDENTS OF "NO DRUG" POLICY

HON. HARRIS W. FAWELL

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 9, 1986

Mr. FAWELL. Mr. Speaker, last month, Secretary of Education William Bennett offered a most challenging suggestion to our Nation's colleges. In a speech before the Heritage Foundation, the Secretary recommended:

Every college president should write his students this summer and tell them this: Welcome back for your studies in September; but no drugs on campus. None. Period. This policy will be enforced—by deans and administrators and advisors and faculty—strictly and fairly.

In response to the Secretary's challenge, I wrote to the presidents of seven private and community colleges in or serving the 13th Congressional District of Illinois. I learned that some of these schools already have an effective "no drug" policy which they strictly enforce. Another school, Elmhurst College, sent an open letter to its students informing them that intelligent students should know about the dangers of drug abuse.

The text of the open letter to students follows:

ELMHURST COLLEGE,
Elmhurst, IL, September 5, 1986.

An Open Letter to the Students of Elmhurst College:

Drug abuse, including alcohol abuse, has reached new and alarming proportions in the United States. The costs of all forms of drug abuse are staggering, costs counted in the wear and tear on the human spirit, the family, society, increased medical costs, lost human productivity and death. The costs and the problems of drug abuse, all well documented and beyond dispute, are being addressed this fall by many concerned persons. The bottom line of drug abuse is that such abuse robs men and women of all ages, and especially children, of a quality life.

Sometimes we fail to recognize how diametrically opposed are the life style of being a student on the one hand, and the drug user, on the other. The student seeks the greatest development of the human mind and spirit. The user of drugs is seeking an escape from life itself. These life styles are so contrary to one another that a college community just naturally shares the nation's deep concern about the growing problem.

Elmhurst College joins with all the forces at work in our society to reduce and eliminate drug abuse and it does so especially through the means naturally available to it: education, programs to heighten personal awareness of drug abuse, and the establishing of personal and institutional goals to address the ills stemming from such abuse. We want you to be aware of how we have and will continue to address illegal use of drug abuse.

First, you should know that we will continue to cooperate with the civil authorities in apprehending those who traffic in and use illegal drugs.

Secondly, as an educational institution, we will continue to do what we do best—educate and assist students in dealing with issues of drug abuse. This year, the Dean of Students staff has developed a new and exciting program entitled "Becoming a Master Student." It is a program which deals with the full life of a student including a discussion of how to do these things: study; use campus resources, such as the library; manage resources and time; create a productive living environment; and understand the decisions one makes. Obviously, decision-making involves decisions regarding alcohol and other drugs.

We are glad you are a student at Elmhurst College, and we hope you will participate in the program "Becoming a Model Student." We know that you share with us the desire to reduce and eliminate the tragic toll of alcohol and drug abuse. Even more, we believe that you share with us the sense of the deep worth of developing the full power of the human mind and spirit—the goals of becoming a master student. The education of a person is so precious a process and so great a treasure that to have it seriously damaged by drug abuse is deeply tragic. In current jargon, "it is just plain dumb."

I hope you have a great year as you pursue your educational goals at Elmhurst College and we all work to achieve the objectives of learning.

Sincerely,

IVAN E. FRICK,
President.

H.R. 5409—A CHOICE IN EDUCATION FOR LOW INCOME CHILDREN

HON. WILLIS D. GRADISON, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 9, 1986

Mr. GRADISON. Mr. Speaker, for over 20 years, the Federal Government has supported a program designed to address the educational needs of students from low income families. Congress made some revisions in the program in 1981. Currently, the Federal effort to assist disadvantaged children is administered under the aegis of chapter 1 of the Education Consolidation and Improvement Act of 1981. In 1987, the Congress will be faced with the reauthorization of this program.

Since chapter 1 needs to be reauthorized for the program to continue, the administration and many in Congress see this as an opportunity to press for reform of the program in order to ensure that it serves those children most in need. Some reform proposals have already been put forward. At the same time, questions have been raised about the necessity of reforming the chapter 1 program at all. Many maintain that it is a highly effective program and should be continued without additional Congressional interference.

Mr. Speaker, although I am strongly supportive of the goals of the chapter 1 program, I am convinced that some reform is necessary to ensure that its original purpose is better carried out. In spite of claims to the contrary, numerous studies have questioned the effectiveness of chapter 1. Recent evidence indicates that only 40 percent of the program's participants are considered poor. The evidence also indicates that many children participating in chapter 1 programs are not underachievers, one of the additional criteria for eligibility.

In an effort to target better Federal assistance to those most in need, I encourage my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring legislation that would significantly improve the Federal Government's role in education for disadvantaged children. H.R. 5409, the Children's Opportunity for Intensive Compensatory Education Act, also known as CHOICE, is designed to make the Federal effort in this area more responsive to the needs of educationally disadvantaged, low income children.

In addition to targeting more accurately the $3.6 billion chapter 1 program, CHOICE would significantly increase parental involvement in the planning of their children's supplementary education. Under current law, parents play a limited role in the design of the compensatory education their children receive. Under CHOICE, parents would select, after consulting with local school officials, the education agency or agencies, public or private, which can provide the special instructional and other services for their child.

H.R. 5409 would establish a program of payments for special instructional and support services either directly to the schools or through vouchers. The State education agency, through local school districts, would set up a 3-year program of special services to meet the needs of educationally deprived children. The services which may be provided include the acquisition of equipment and instructional materials, employment of special training or teacher aides, tutors, and the transportation of the children participating in the program.

This initiative gives low income parents a real choice about where to send their children for compensatory education. But including special instructional services provided by other public schools, private elementary and secondary schools, as well as institutions of higher education, CHOICE gives parents options readily available to higher income families.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 5409 holds the promise of fully realizing the intention of Congress in facilitating the education of those children in our society most in need. I encourage my colleagues to consider this proposal and lend it their support.

A CHANGE OF HOBBIT

HON. MEL LEVINE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 9, 1986

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, California has acquired a reputation for being one step ahead of the rest of the Nation in recognizing and adopting future trends in business, politics, and fashion.

It seems appropriate then that California should also be the home of the oldest and largest bookstore in the world catering to the reading habits of science fiction readers. I am particularly pleased that this bookstore, A Change of Hobbit (named in honor of J.R.R. Tolkien's creatures), is located in my district.

There is much more to this story, however, than the fantastic reading habits of Californians. The real story is how Sherry Gottlieb, owner of A Change of Hobbit, built her business from a one room store, with no telephone and only one copy of each book, into what has become a nationally known institution among science fiction fans.

Although her business, and many of her customers, are unusual, the success of A Change of Hobbit demonstrates that it is still possible for individuals to compete successfully with the mass merchandisers who now dominate the book retail business. Ms. Gottliebs' knowledge of her customers, her love for the product she sells, and her innovative marketing ideas have allowed her to succeed where many have failed.

A recent article in the Los Angeles Times profiled Ms. Gottlieb and her amazing bookstore. I would like to include it in the RECORD and urge my colleagues to take the time to read it and ask them to join with me in congratulating Ms. Gottlieb for her success.

SHE GOT THE HOBBIT OF READING, AND FICTION BECAME HER SCIENCE

(By John Barbour)

When Sherry Gottlieb started reading the Oz books as a child, she was a goner. Her father saw no harm in it. He had a complete set of the L. Frank Baum classics from his own childhood. One by one, he put them on her bed and she devoured them.

When the supply ran out, she went to the public library and consumed all of the fairy tales. All of them.

Today, next to a gasoline station on Lincoln Boulevard in Santa Monica, Gottlieb runs what may be the largest science fiction shop in the world. A Change of Hobbit, after J.R.R. Tolkien's creatures. She keeps a Colombian boa constrictor named Wrinklesnakeskin (after Rumplestiltskin) as a pet, dyes her forelocks purple and generally lives as she pleases.

Consider the snake, for example.

"I'm allergic to cats. I live in a second-floor apartment, which isn't fair to a dog. Birds are noisy, fish are boring and I hadn't had a pet in six years when somebody introduced me to a snake. And I said, 'This is wonderful. I'm not allergic to it. I can leave it for three weeks at a time without having to feed him. He feels nice and he's wonderful to take to parties. I never have to worry about talking to strangers. They all come up and talk to me."

Besides, he minds his own business, "except he doesn't have a mind."

Consider the purple hair.

"I dyed it about a year ago on my 30-mumble birthday. Why? Because I can. Since I don't have a boss or a husband to tell me I can't, I have the freedom to have a tattoo or have my hair dyed purple."

In her one-floor establishment, she has 75,000 books and 4,800 square feet of floor space, which she fills when the likes of an Arthur C. Clarke come to autograph books. She hosts important science fiction writers about 15 times a year.

How did she get from Oz to here?

Not by the whirlwind that more often than not lands one in Kansas. She attended the University of California, Berkeley, between the Free Speech movement and People's Park. "My olfactory memories of the '60s were the smell of tear gas."

When she graduated with a bachelor's degree in theater arts-playwrighting, the only jobs she could get were as a secretary or a waitress. She gave in to the secretarial side in a film rental library. Women's liberation was just blooming and "after two years my mind began to rot from disuse."

I quit my job and my then-husband said, 'Well, what are you going to do now?' And there was some worry in his voice because he was at the University of Southern California in film school.

"I said, 'I'm going to read science fiction until I run out of money and then I'm going to worry about it.' "

She said she wished there was a science fiction bookstore in Los Angeles like the one she had visited in London. It was called "Dark They Were And Golden-Eyed," after a line from writer Ray Bradbury.

"And my husband said, looking out the window and thinking of something else, 'Why don't you open one up?'

"And I said: 'Oh, that's a good idea. I could call it a Change of Hobbit.' "

People who read a lot of novels tend to talk in dialogue.

She copied all the names of publishers from her own collection of paperbacks, wrote to them to order books, found a 12-by-15-foot room over a coin laundry in Westwood Village hard by UCLA, and invested $1,500 in savings.

The owner wouldn't let her put a sign out front, so it was all word-of-mouth. A local seller of general books put a sign on his science fiction section directing buffs to Gottlieb. She had no telephone for the first five months because she couldn't afford one.

When she went to get her business license, they asked her how much she expected to make a month. She figured a buck a book and maybe one or two a day, and answered "Fifty dollars?" They asked what her rent was. She said, "Eighty-five." The clerk shrieked, "How are you going to cover it?" Gottlieb shrugged wide-eyed and said, "I dunno. I'll type term papers."

Every time she sold a book, she would reorder. She had only one copy of everything.

She knows now that even as proprietor of the world's largest and oldest, she'll never get rich, maybe never even be able to buy a home. But she enjoys.

As for her lawyer-father, the childhood Oz buff who created Sherry, he had wanted a lawyer in his family. It wasn't Sherry. Another daughter rose to the occasion. From a liberal second-generation California family of conservative life style, Sherry goes her own way.

She sits in an indoor gazebo in a corner in front of a replica of Flash Gordon's radio where she chats with friends. She has six employees, aided and abetted by volunteer science fiction buffs. Her customers are varied—scientists, mothers with children browsing through the fantasy section, and a few eccentrics. The children are sometimes given Wrinklesnakeskin to cuddle. One customer and named Bongo Wolf came in for years wearing a bow tie, a four-in-hand and a noose.

Gottlieb finds time to talk to most. In her spare time, she is putting together an oral history on Vietnam draft evaders. She thinks their story should be told.

In the meantime, business purrs along smoothly at A Change of Hobbit, which she says inherited its ranking of largest and oldest (established 1972) when the London bookstore folded a couple of years back. Science fiction bookstores are locked in grim competition with the chains, and Publisher's Weekly says there are only 20 or so in business in the United States, almost all in large cities.

She has fashioned a notion of the speculative fiction genre from her own ideas and those of others.

"Science fiction—never SciFi—is the thing that could happen, but hasn't. Fantasy is the thing that couldn't happen but you wish it would. And horror is the thing you are afraid will happen, but thank God it won't."

CRUSADE AGAINST DRUG ABUSE

HON. MICHAEL G. OXLEY

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 9, 1986

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, as we begin debate on the "Omnibus Drug Bill of 1986," I would like to draw to my colleagues' attention the results in the Fourth Ohio Congressional District I represent of a worthwhile project recently conducted by the Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control on which I serve. The project, entitled "Crusade Against Drug Abuse," offered sixth-grade students the opportunity to write 50-word essays on what they would do if offered drugs and how they could help their communities.

I am pleased to report that more than 40 schools in my congressional district participated in this project, and I was very impressed by the entries I received. In these days of increasing drug abuse among young people nationwide, it was encouraging to learn from reading the essays submitted by young people in my congressional district that they understand the dangers of drug abuse. I hope their participation in this project helped achieve this understanding. In addition, I commend their parents and teachers for contributing to their education against drugs.

All of the entries I received were outstanding, and it was difficult to narrow the selection down to the accepted limit of only one finalist and four semifinalists. The finalist will compete with entries from other congressional districts for a trip to Washington, DC, during next spring's Cherry Blossom Festival.

I am proud to share with you now the finalist and semifinalist essays from the Fourth Ohio Congresssional District.

FINALIST: Miss Kim DeShano, Sidney, Ohio; Holy Angels Elementary School; Principal: Sister Patricia Ward; Supervising Teacher, Mrs. Barbara Heitkamp.

"What I Would Do If Offered Drugs"

If offered drugs, I'd say no. Can drugs replace the "'high" you get from working hard at something and succeeding? Is a drug "high" better than the feeling of accomplishment?

"As A Good Citizen, How I Can Help My Community"

I can be a good citizen by becoming aware of drugs and reporting drug deals to a trustworthy adult.

SEMIFINALIST: Miss Holly Snyder, Carey, Ohio; Colonel Crawford Elementary School; Principal: Vernon E. Hull; Supervising Teacher: Mrs. Ann Johnson.

"What I Would Do If Offered Drugs"

If I were offered drugs, I would say no. I don't want them. Drugs can do such terrible things to your body and mind. They can do damage that a doctor cannot repair.

"As A Good Citizen, How I Can Help My Community"

I'd offer my friendship, interest, and good example to show my peers that I care.

SEMIFINALIST: Miss Ann Tavernier, Findlay, Ohio. Wilson Vance Elementary School; Principal: John H. Richter; Supervising Teacher: Mrs. Jo Binger.

"What I Would Do If Offered Drugs"

If offered drugs, I would sternly say no and immediately alert my friends and a responsible adult.

"As A Good Citizen, How I Can Help My Community"

To help my community, I would talk with young children, give them a thorough knowledge about drugs, and encourage them to make a commitment not to endanger their bodies with drugs.

SEMIFINALIST: Miss Carrie Siegfried, Mansfield, Ohio. St. Peter's Elementary School; Principal: Robert E. Kelly; Supervising Teacher: Peggy Harris.

"What I Would Do If Offered Drugs"

If I were offered drugs, I would say "no" and get help for that person. Being cool to me is not important when it comes to drugs. You can have new friends, but not a new life.

"As A Good Citizen, How I Can Help My Community"

I would set a good example for others.

SEMIFINALIST: Miss Monica Miller, Upper Sandusky, Ohio. St. Peter's Elementary School; Principal: Sister Cecile Sakaley; Supervising Teacher: Mrs. Mary Alice Harbour.

"What I Would Do If Offered Drugs"

I would refuse them and explain that you don't need drugs to make you feel good. There are plenty of other things in life to make you happy. Besides, you only live once, don't blow it.

"As A Good Citizen, How I Can Help My Community"

I could make "Just Say No" signs and put them up around my community.

I know my colleagues join me in extending hearty congratulations to the Fourth District's winners of the "Crusade Against Drug Abuse" project.

DARE'S 10TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. DENNIS M. HERTEL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 9, 1986

Mr. HERTEL of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, there are several qualities that enable a neighborhood atmosphere to prevail in a city environment. Chief among these are a special concern for the needs of the individuals and the welfare of the community as a whole. During its 10 years of service, Detroit Area Residents East, or DARE, has been dedicated to upholding these neighborhood values and has successfully created a cohesive, cooperative community in the city of Detroit. I rise today to ask my colleagues to join me in paying tribute to this outstanding organization on the occasion of its 10th anniversary.

In 1976, DARE was formed by a group of concerned citizens who recognized the need for a community project that would promote safety and crime prevention, provide for the needy, protect the environment, and educate residents on a variety of other key issues. Today, DARE's regularly published newsletter currently reaches approximately 3,600 homes on Detroit's East Side and outlying areas.

Since its inception, DARE has organized a wide range of community services. Every year, volunteers collect and raise funds at a special holiday bazaar to finance Christmas baskets for the needy. Complete with a Christmas ham or turkey, as well as a supply of canned goods for the future, these baskets make the holidays a brighter time for those less fortunate. Another regular project has been the CB patrol, which, along with a strong neighborhood watch program, has reduced the crime rate in the area. In the last 2 months, there have been only two crime incidents reported in DARE patrolled zones. DARE also sponsors a monthly lecture series that provides information on a variety of timely issues, from human rights to real estate, from crime prevention to garden and lawn care.

Through its new projects, DARE has effectively recognized and responded to the changing needs of the community. DARE's most recent undertaking, the Adopt-A-Tree Program, is a prime example of the success of a concerted community effort to resolve a problem. When approximately 160 trees on the boulevard between Kelly and I-94 died of dutch elm disease, DARE decided to privately raise the funds to reforest the area. Interested patrons can donate between $10–$35 to "adopt" a tree and receive a certificate of thanks, which includes Joyce Kilmer's poem "Trees." The project has already raised half the necessary amount and has been named as a pilot program for the county, both indications of the strong support and recognition DARE receives.

It is such support and leadership that has kept DARE active. Its projects are financed solely through annual fundraisers, donations, and advertising space in its newsletter. DARE is run by a dedicated 13-member elected board, whose current president, Frank Porta, and past two presidents, Larry Hanlin and Joe Hamel, have provided the fine leadership and guidance that have been the cornerstone of DARE's success. As Frank Porta recently pointed out, there has been no shortage of willing volunteers to hand deliver the newsletter or donate time at fundraisers. DARE has brought the residents of Detroit's East Side together, creating a cohesive neighborhood that can more effectively define and solve problems in the community.

I ask my colleagues to join me in extending hearty congratulations on DARE's 10th anniversary of exceptional civic service. I am sure that the neighborhood spirit will continue to flourish on Detroit's East Side and that DARE will serve as a fine example to other communities.

WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE ON SMALL BUSINESS

HON. CHARLES E. BENNETT

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 9, 1986

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, currently there are 14 million small businesses in the United States. Women run 3 million of these businesses. In fact, the fastest growing part of the small business community is with women business owners.

Small business employs 48 percent of the private work force and accounts for 38 percent of the gross national product. Nearly 5 million of the 7 million new jobs created during the recent economic recovery were in small businesses.

The 1980 While House Conference on Small Business set in motion a new awareness on the part of elected officials and the general public of the contributions made by the small business sector of our economy. In fact, 38 of the 60 recommendations made after the 1980 conference have been acted om, producing landmark legislation such as the Equal Access to Justice Act, the Regulatory Flexibility Act, and the Small Business Innovation Development Act.

In addition, delegates to the White House Conference have emerged as leaders in their home cities and States. Currently, three former delegates are Members of Congress and one is a State Lieutenant Governor.

Two delegates to the recently completed 1986 White House Conference were from my congressional district in Jacksonville, FL. I would like to thank Mr. Douglas J. Milne, Jr., and Mr. Henry Crews for donating their time and expertise to this important undertaking. Mr. Jim Koivisto, also of Jacksonville, FL, attended the conference as an alternate delegate, and I thank him.

The 1986 White House Conference and the State meetings which preceded it provided this country's entrepreneurs with a unique opportunity to effect Government policy and to voice their concerns directly to public officials. I look forward to the conference's final report and am confident that small business will remain a vital and productive part of our Nation's economy.

A TRIBUTE TO THE LIA'S 60TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. NORMAN F. LENT

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 9, 1986

Mr. LENT. Mr. Speaker, the Long Island Association [LIA] has done more than perhaps any single organization to improve Long Island, NY, as a place to live, work, and do business. The LIA is celebrating its 60th anniversary this year, and on behalf of the members of the Long Island Congressional Delegation, I'd like to take this opportunity to recognize the LIA's outstanding commitment and many years of service to our communities.

The LIA is the region's largest business and civic organization, bringing together business, labor, government, and academia. It represents over 2,000 small businesses, local chambers of commerce, colleges and universities, and trade associations. It was first established in 1922 by a group of businessmen from Kings, Queens, Nassau, and Suffolk Counties who formed a regional chamber of commerce with offices in Manhattan. The group was incorporated as the Long Island Chamber of Commerce on July 1, 1926, and over the years, evolved into the LIA as we know it today.

I'm proud to be able to say that Long Island is in the midst of unprecedented economic growth and prosperity. Disposable household income is among the highest in the Nation, and our unemployment is the lowest. That is quite an accomplishment, and all Long Islanders can share in the benefits.

The LIA has worked to help create an atmosphere where business can thrive and prosper. More important, this organization has strived to balance this booming economy and at the same time enhance the quality of life Long Islanders cherish.

In addition, the LIA has been an advocacy organization at local, State, and Federal levels of government. It worked directly with Long Island Members of Congress to protect the deductibility of State and local taxes while improving Federal tax reform legislation for individuals and business.

The LIA has successfully worked to involve all segments of business and the community, bringing the many interests of the region together in a common voice. Those of us who live there appreciate what a unique and special place Long Island is, and we are grateful to the LIA for its dedicated efforts to preserve those qualities and values that make Long Island so desirable.

On behalf of my distinguished colleagues, U.S. Senators ALFONSE D'AMATO, DANIEL PATRICK MOYNIHAN, Congressmen WILLIAM CARNEY, THOMAS DOWNEY, RAYMOND MCGRATH, ROBERT MRAZEK, and JAMES SCHEUER, I'd like to personally thank the LIA and all its members for their many years of dedicated service to our communities and wish them another 60 years of continued success. Thank you.

RECENT SOVIET ACTIONS: DO THEY REALLY WANT A SUMMIT?

HON. WM. S. BROOMFIELD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 9, 1986

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I am deeply concerned about the detention of Nicholas Daniloff. In light of the Soviet treatment of that innocent journalist, do they really want a summit? What has happened to their claims about a new and open society?

The Soviets have formally charged Mr. Daniloff with espionage. He may be put on trial. He has clearly been taken hostage. There is no similarity at all between the actions of the accused United Nations Soviet spy and Mr. Daniloff.

Such action on the part of the Soviets at this time makes no sense. A great opportunity is clearly at hand to ease relations between our two countries.

The treatment of Mr. Daniloff undermines the progress that has been made in creating better relations between our two countries. Bringing Mr. Daniloff to trial could derail the summit and set back the progress which has been made in many areas. Is that what the Soviets want?

Given recent events, should our President consider going to a summit? Have the Soviets really turned over a new leaf? Do they really want better relations?

Recent events would lead me to question their sincerity. It is time to free Nick Daniloff and get on with important business between our two countries.

C. THOMAS BURKE AND THE PORT OF CLEVELAND

HON. EDWARD F. FEIGHAN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 9, 1986

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, in October, C. Thomas Burke, who has served as executive director of the Port of Cleveland, will take over new responsibilities as executive director of Port Everglades in Broward County, FL. Tom Burke became executive director of the Port of Cleveland in 1982, at a time when the entire Great Lakes region was suffering severely. The Port of Cleveland was floating at an economic low tide, with too few foreign vessels dropping anchor and with diminished import and export tonnage.

As the port's executive director, Tom was instrumental in revitalizing the economic fortunes of the port. Upon assuming command, he analyzed the port's problems, and like a seasoned navigator setting a ship's new course, he determined the Port of Cleveland's new direction.

These new financial and business directions have drastically changed the economic fortunes of the port. Now, growing numbers of foreign vessels drop anchor and import and export cargo tonnage have reached record levels.

This turnabout at the Port of Cleveland has meant increased revenues for countless shippers, stevedore companies, longshoremen, and truckers. All of them, and Greater Cleveland's economy in general, have benefited from Tom Burke's management and marketing skills.

Tom's leadership has been recognized in articles in the New York Times, the Journal of Commerce, and maritime publications in the United States and throughout the world.

Now as he departs Cleveland to take up new responsibilities in Florida, Tom will be missed in Cleveland. His abundant and outstanding achievements have benefited countless businesses and individuals in our communities and throughout the industrial heartland of America.

I know that the House will join me in extending our best wishes for continued success to Tom Burke.

ACTION BY CPSC OVERDUE AGAINST CRIB HAZARDS

HON. GEORGE MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 9, 1986

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, this morning the Consumer Product Safety Commission held a press conference to announce the start of "Baby Safety Week."

But more than commemorative weeks is needed to prevent needless deaths and severe injuries of infants.

Six years ago, the Commission began investigating the strangulation hazard associated with decorative cornerposts on baby cribs. For the decade from 1973 to 1983, the Commission reported 32 fatalities. Over the last 2 years alone, at least eight babies have hanged themselves.

Each year, the Commission methodically registers each death in its lengthening list of fatalities due to accidental hangings. It has issued alerts and shopping guides, which reach only a fraction of Americans.

But despite the growing list of infant victims, the Commission has failed to exercise its authority to prohibit the cornerposts which are the culprits in these tragic deaths.

Responsible action by the Commission can prevent these needless deaths and injuries—like that of my own constituent whose son became permanently disabled through such an accident.

As the Commission announces "Baby Safety Week," I would hope that its members would exercise real leadership and issue a mandatory standard banning crib cornerposts.

RECOGNIZING THE EFFORTS OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES AT FmHA

HON. BILL CHAPPELL, JR.

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 9, 1986

Mr. CHAPPELL. Mr. Speaker, all too often these days we hear critical statements about our Federal employees. The recipients of not only harsh rhetoric but often the victims of budget restraint, the abilities and conscientiousness of most of our Civil Service work force go unnoticed.

With this in mind, I would like to share with my colleagues the significant contributions of two Farmers Home Administration employees, Greg Caruthers and Charles Nichols.

Several months ago, Nichols, who is a Farmers Home Administration District Director, and Caruthers, a FmHA District Loan Specialist, advised me of a problem concerning the FmHA's Home Loan Program. Specifically, these individuals pointed out that, due to program income guidelines, families who realized even a marginal increase in income could lose their entire mortgage interest subsidy and be required to pay much higher rates. This was resulting in a troubling number of delinquencies and subsequent foreclosures. Unfortunately, in addition to the human suffering involved, the Government was losing money on the homes since the houses once taken back by the FmHA needed to be refurbished and placed back on the market for sale. In the long run, this procedure was costing the taxpayer much more than the original mortgage subsidy.

Given the counterproductive effects of the present home loan guidelines, I offered an amendment to H.R. 1, the Housing Act, which provides FmHA the flexibility to work with families on a case-by-case basis to determine if elimination of the mortgage subsidy would result in loss of the home. The Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs Committee graciously accepted my amendment which is part of H.R. 1 now pending before the Senate.

This illustration of Government responsiveness to changing circumstances was the direct result of two Federal employees who took the time and effort to try to solve a problem. I applaud Charles Nichols and Greg Caruthers for their initiative and good work.

APTOS HIGH CHAMPS

HON. LEON E. PANETTA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 9, 1986

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to bring to the attention of my colleagues the fact that the Mariners of Aptos High School, in the 16th Congressional District, now reign as the Division II boys' basketball champions of northern California. Their championship season, during which they won 33 games and lost only 1, was climaxed by a thrilling 75–71 victory over Mt. Eden High School of Hayward at the Oakland Coliseum Arena.

Unfortunately, the team lost a hard-fought game for the State championship. But this did not diminish in the least their remarkably successful season.

The coach of the Aptos team is Bill Warmerdam, who has coached the Aptos senior varsity since its inception in 1969. Earlier this year, Bill scored his 300th victory with the Aptos team. He has an enviable record as a coach at Aptos, winning two out of every three games. Bill's assistant coaches are Steve Miles and Ray Tanimoto. The school principal is Mark Adams.

Of course, as any coach will tell you, it is players who win and lose games, and the Aptos Mariners are all winners. Following, in alphabetical order, are the names of members of the Aptos High School Mariners: Bob Bugalski, John Castillo, Derrick Fisher, Craig Holt, Warren Holt, Jeff Jones, Eric Knudsen, Kirk Knudsen, Larry Rogers, David Schofield, Andy Sloane, Bryan Smith, Craig Sugimoto, and Cris Warmerdam.

Congratulations from the Congress of the United States to the Aptos team. They deserve it.

TRIBUTE TO GEORGE F. COREY

HON. DAN MICA

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 9, 1986

Mr. MICA. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few moments to pay tribute to Mr. George F. Corey, the former president of the Americanization League.

Mr. Corey was born on May 5, 1900, in Zahle, Lebanon. He immigrated to the United States in 1909, and settled in Syracuse, NY. There he opened a grocery store.

Mr. Corey was one of the original founders of the Americanization League. This organization was formed in 1916 to assist new immigrants and aliens by acting as a liaison between them and the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service. The league provides information to their clients on laws and regulations affecting citizenship, referral to educational programs, including English as a second language, and will help prepare prospective citizens when they are to appear before the Naturalization Term Court.

The Americanization League provides services without regard to age, sex, race, color, creed, or national origin. They are funded by the Onandaga County government and the Syracuse City School District.

George Corey's commitment to the league was based on his keen awareness of the problems that new Americans face upon immigration to these shores. His knowledge that new immigrants often had no one to turn to obtain help with understanding immigration laws and the new language, or the paperwork associated with the Immigration and Naturalization process led George Corey to found the Americanization League, along with T. Aaron Levy.

Mr. Corey has held the office of treasurer, vice president, and president. He also has served on every league committee and acted as the representative for the Mideast nationalities. He has served the league for over 65 years. He has also been an active member of the Lions Club, and various other public service organizations.

In this year when we have celebrated the symbol of liberty for millions of immigrants, and also for millions of Americans, let us take this opportunity to honor a special man who has worked tirelessly to assist new immigrants in their efforts to become citizens of the United States.

THE 50TH ANNIVERSARY OF CORNING GLASS WORKS

HON. AUSTIN J. MURPHY

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 9, 1986

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to congratulate Corning Glass Works on the celebration of their 50th anniversary of operating a plant in Charleroi, PA.

The legacy of Corning Glass Works in Charleroi began on August 18, 1983, when George A. MacBeth purchased land along the Monongahela River and started construction of a plant. The MacBeth Glass Co. quickly became the largest producer of lamp chimneys in the world.

In the ensuring years, MacBeth merged with the Thomas Evans Co. and became MacBeth-Evans Glass Co. The company later purchased the American Lamp Chimney Co. and the Hamilton Bottle Works, which was located adjacent to the plant. In 1936, MacBeth-Evans merged with Corning Glass Works.

In addition to making glassware and tableware, the company developed the first glass blocks. During World War II, the Corning Charleroi Plant made messware, gauge glasses, and gunsights, and the plant was awarded three Army-Navy E awards.

Over the years, the Charleroi Plant has made such products as television picture tubes, Pyrex baking ware, Pyroceran, Centura dinnerware, Corelle and most recently, the Supreme line.

But beyond the role the Charleroi Plant has played in the glass industry, it has always enjoyed a unique relationship with the community as well. It was the glass industry, in part, that first brought a large number of Belgian immigrants to settle in what was to become Charleroi. And as the plant grew, so did the community. When the borough of Charleroi has needed help, it has often found an unselfish friend in Corning Glass which has always recognized its responsibility to the local community goes beyond merely providing employment. Through the Corning Foundation, donations have been made to such community projects as the Charleroi Library, the YMCA, the fire department, the ambulance service and the bus service, just to name a few.

And so we pause to recognize a 50-year milestone of achievement and progress and join in wishing Corning Glass Works continued success.
